We think it proper to notice two other objections which have been made to the terms of this Treaty, and which (if well founded) might be equally applicable to the Extradition Treaties now in force between this country and France and the United States of America respectively. The first is, that the offences described under all or some of the specified heads might be committed under circumstances which would make them, on the whole, political rather than ordinary crimes; and that, in such circumstances, the delivery up by this country of political refugees might be demanded. We have considered this objection, but it seems to us to be one which, if pressed to its fullest extent, would be fatal to all such Conventions, as it is scarcely possible to define beforehand the circumstances which might be thought by some persons to give a political character to acts which others might characterize as murder, forgery, or robbery. Perhaps, however, it might be advisable to add an Article at the end of the Treaty in the following words:—"This Convention shall not be deemed, under colour of any of the designations aforesaid, to include any offences of a merely political character." The other objection is that, although the evidence must be such as would justify the apprehension and commitment for trial of the offender if the offence had been committed in British territory, the Treaty does not go on to say that the facts must be such as, if they had taken place in British territory, would there have constituted a criminal offence of the same nature punishable by the laws of that territory. We think that this objection is groundless, and that it rests upon a false interpretation of the words of the Treaty, and we should hesitate to attempt to remove it by any alteration of those words which might seem to give countenance to that mode of interpreting similar words in the other Treaties above referred to.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* 6 and 7 Vict., c. 75, s. 2, and c. 76, s. 2.

1864

No. 127.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of our Report of the 25th ultimo, containing our observations upon the provisions of the Prussian Prize Court Regulations, and adverting to various imperfect points in which those regulations differ from the law of the British and American Prize Courts, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, notwithstanding the fact of the termination of the war between the German Powers and Denmark, it would be advisable to address a communication to the Prussian Government with regard to the points in which the regulations differ, in order to prevent the possibility of our silence being at any future period construed by that Government into acquiescence.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that a communication should be made by Her Majesty's Government to the Prussian Government, to the effect that as the war is over, Her Majesty's Government do not think it necessary to offer any observations upon the Prize Regulations issued by the Prussian Government, but that Her Majesty's Government desire to state that their silence upon this subject must not be construed as indicating the complete acquiescence of Her Majesty's Government in the propriety and sufficiency (so far as the interests of neutral States are concerned) of every part of these regulations.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

River Plate.

No. 128.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 10.)

Doctors' Commons, September 8, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 24th July, 1861, upon the subject of the transfers of American vessels to British subjects, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Buenos Ayres (No. 16), together with the several despatches referred to therein, upon the subject of the abuses resulting from the practice of foreign vessels taking British provisional certificates of registry; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to make thereupon. The correspondence with the Board of Trade and with Her Majesty's Consul at New York upon this subject were also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon the general subject it appears to me that the view taken by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade is perfectly correct. It is the duty of the Consul, before granting a provisional certificate, to make all reasonable inquiry as to the good faith of the application, and not to grant it if the papers themselves disclose, or render it probable, that the application is dishonest. It is not his duty to prosecute the inquiry into latent or equitable claims. He is not armed with power to do so, and I much doubt the expediency of his possessing such authority. In the case last mentioned by Mr. Consul Parish (No. 16), namely, the "Voyager," in which it appeared, on the face of the papers, that the "Voyager" was from New York to Monte Video and Buenos Ayres, and back again to the United States, and it was estimated and agreed upon by the crew to last ten months, the provisional certificate being granted for six months, so that the vessel must have abandoned her voyage back to the United States in order to complete the British registration within the prescribed term; I think that in such a case as this the provisional certificate ought not to have been granted at all by the Consul, but certainly not without further investigation, and until he had reasonable proof that there was no intention of evading the provisions of the Statute.

I must observe that in the event of a vessel so provisionally registered being seized by a Confederate captor, and brought into a Confederate Prize Court, it would be competent to that Court to inquire into the bona fides of the whole transaction, and to condemn the vessel if it believed that the whole interests of the original belligerent owner had not been completely divested. The fact that a United States' master and crew were on board would furnish strong evidence that the vessel still belonged to its original owner.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 129.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 27.)

Doctors' Commons, December 26, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 13th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (No. 103), inclosing a copy of a despatch which he has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres regarding the course pursued by the Brazilian Government towards Monte Video; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship any observations I may have to make on the subject; and to add that Her Majesty's Government wish to maintain neutrality in the contest between Brazil and Monte Video.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would appear to me expedient to send general instructions to Her Majesty's Representatives at Monte Video and Buenos Ayres to the effect that Her Majesty's Government expect that, in the circumstances of this blockade, no British vessel will be detained or captured which has not previously received full and due notice of the existence of the blockade, and also that British vessels in the ports about to be blockaded will be allowed a fair and reasonable time to depart with their cargoes.

I do not advise Her Majesty's Government at present to send more specific instructions than these as to time or place.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Salvador.

No. 130.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Mr. Fraser,* who is acting, in the absence of Mr. Mathew, in Central

---

* Mr. Fraser, No. 4, April 28, and No. 7, May 13, 1864.

1864

America, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, calling attention to certain clauses in the Constitution lately decreed by the Congress of the Republic of Salvador, which refer to the naturalization and future position of foreigners in that Republic; and to request that we would take the despatches inclosed into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what instructions should be addressed to Mr. Fraser thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Fraser's letter to Don Gregorio Arbizu appears to us right and proper. The general tenor of those Articles in the new Constitution which are the subject of his remonstrance is very objectionable: but, in so far as they relate to the future, their repeal can hardly be insisted on as a matter of strict right by foreign States, except in those cases where they may clearly conflict with any positive Treaty engagements. Inasmuch, however, as they also relate to the past and have a retrospective operation upon foreigners, they do entitle foreign States to insist upon their palpable injustice, and to claim that they be not enforced in that respect.

It is to be presumed that the Representatives of other foreign States take the same view of these Articles as Mr. Fraser, and it would be very desirable that common action should be taken by all in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 131.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

Doctors' Commons, August 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Sonsonate (No. 12) relative to the imprisonment and indignities suffered by Mr. and Mrs. Hocking, British subjects, on the ground that they had been married by the Consul under the Act of Parliament for facilitating the marriage of British subjects abroad; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as I understand the circumstances of this case, Mr. Hocking being a British subject, but a Roman Catholic, was married (under the provisions of the Consular Act) by the British Consul to a lady a subject of the Republic of Salvador, and also a Roman Catholic: that the Law of St. Salvador does not allow the solemnization of marriage within its own territories of two Roman Catholics except according to the forms and ritual of the Roman Church.

It is competent to a State to make such a law, and to enforce it by penalties against all persons resident within its territories not protected against them by the provisions of any Treaty. And if the Bishop or his Court have in Salvador, as but a few years ago they had in England and now have in Ireland, jurisdiction over this matter, the Bishop or his Court had a right to cite Mr. Hocking before them to answer to a charge of having violated the law; and unless there has been a marriage recognized by that law they had unquestionably a right to treat the lady both as a spinster and as a native subject of the Republic.

There is, however, great force in the observation that this marriage was, so far as the proceedings before the Consul were concerned, simply a civil contract entered into before a layman,—not a marriage solemnized as a religious act by a person being or professing to be a priest, but a civil contract which the Law and Courts of Salvador might or might not refuse to recognize, but for entering into which a British subject was not punishable by that Law or by those Courts.

Mr. Hocking had certainly a right, wholly unaffected by his being a Roman Catholic, as a British subject to call upon the British Consul to do on his behalf what the Act of Parliament empowered the Consul to do. On the whole I humbly advise your Lordship to support the demand made by Mr. Mathew on behalf of Mr. Hocking for the immediate liberation of that gentleman, and for a very moderate compensation for his unjust arrest and imprisonment. It would be very desirable that this opportunity should be taken for obtaining a recognition, if possible, of the power of Her Majesty's Consul to put in force in this Republic the provisions of the Consular Act, both between British subjects and in cases in which one party to the contract is a British subject. A recognition of the validity of such marriages in Salvador, which would be most desirable, cannot, I fear, be obtained; but full liberty to enter into the civil contract, without regard to the validity of the marriage, within the territory of the Republic might perhaps be obtained, and would place this difficult matter upon a much better footing than that on which it rests at present.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

San Domingo.

No. 132.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 5.)

Doctors' Commons, January 1, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 17th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo (No. 50), inclosing a copy and translation of a Proclamation by the Captain-General explaining the Decree of the 5th of October last, which notified a blockade of the coasts of San Domingo; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take Mr. Hood's despatch, together with the previous papers therewith inclosed, into consideration, and that I would report to your Lordship whether I am now of opinion that a notification of the blockade should be inserted in the London Gazette; and Mr. Hammond was further to request that if my answer should be in the affirmative, I would prepare and transmit to your Lordship a form of notification to be published in the Gazette.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the despatch of Mr. Consul Hood, there is still no pretence for alleging that there is an effective or real blockade of the coasts of San Domingo. I cannot, therefore, for the reasons assigned in my last Report, advise your Lordship that this paper blockade ought to be notified in the Gazette.

It appears to me that a remonstrance on the subject ought to be addressed to the proper Spanish authorities, and an intimation conveyed to them that Her Majesty's Government cannot recognize the existence of a blockade which is not supported by an adequate force, present, without intermission (except such as may be temporarily caused by wind and weather), off the blockaded port or coast.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 133.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 20.)

Doctors' Commons, January 19, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo,* stating that Mr. Heneken, a British subject, wished to be informed whether his acceptance of the office of Member of the Council of Administration at San Domingo would interfere with his rights as a British subject. That the despatches to which Mr. Hood refers were also inclosed;* and that Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the reply which should be returned to Mr. Heneken in this matter.

---

* Consul Hood, No. 55, November 20, 1863.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I perceive from the Report of my predecessor in office that Mr. Heneken was domiciled in San Domingo so long ago as 1825, though in 1855 he was registered as a British subject.

If he were now, therefore, to become a Member of Council of San Domingo he would be, after thirty-nine years of domicil, taking upon himself an important share in the duties of administering the Government of that Colony.

It would, therefore, be almost as strong a case of an individual identifying himself and his fortunes with the territory, the interests, and the concerns of a foreign country as can, without taking out foreign letters of naturalization, well be supposed.

In this state of circumstances I think Mr. Heneken should be apprised by Her Majesty's Government, that although he would not, by the acceptance of this office, lose any rights in British territory which are now incident to him as one of Her Majesty's subjects, he would place himself in a position in which he could not rely upon obtaining the official interference on his behalf of Her Majesty's Government in any matter unconnected with property or rights in British territory, which might arise either between himself and the Government of Spain, or between himself, acting as a member of the Spanish Government, and any third State.

It appears to me that this would be the proper and safe answer to send to Mr. Heneken's application.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 134.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st of October, 1861, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatches inclosed from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo,† calling attention to the claims which have been put forward by various parties who state that they have suffered losses by the proceedings of the Spanish authorities, and the troops acting under their orders, engaged in suppressing the present insurrection against the Spanish Government in San Domingo; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration,‡ and have the honour to report—

That with respect to all these claims, we understand the circumstances in which the loss of property has happened, to be the same, namely, that the losses were the consequence of the general military operations of the Spanish forces against the insurgents in San Domingo, not the consequence of any special acts of military insubordination or excess, unnecessary for the general purposes of the war, and brought home to particular persons guilty of such acts.

We are of opinion that all foreign subjects domiciled in a place or city, which suffers during the time of war from the necessary operations of war, are to be considered, with respect to any damage which their property may receive, as on the same footing, and no other, with the native subjects in the same city or place, and that they have no other claim for indemnity than those subjects may have. Whether, therefore, they have any claim at all or not, must depend upon the public and constitutional law of the country. Such losses do not confer any title on the Government of the foreign subject to demand compensation or indemnity for his losses so incurred upon principles of international law. Upon this view of the subject Her Majesty's Government has, we believe, been always advised to act in cases similar to the present, and it is, we humbly think, quite consistent with the opinion which the Law Officers expressed in the Report to which we have been referred.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 135.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to the Reports of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 17th November, 1863, and 1st January, 1864, therewith inclosed, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the following correspondence:—

1. Drafts of two despatches which your Lordship has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid,† regarding the proposed blockade at San Domingo;

2. A despatch from Sir John Crampton, reporting the result of his communications with the Spanish Government on the subject.

And, 3rdly, two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo (Nos. 2 and 9), reporting the capture by a Spanish cruizer of the British vessel "Julia," and the subsequent condemnation of that vessel.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the legality of the proceedings in the case of the vessel "Julia," and as to the steps which should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we are able to understand the sentence of the Naval Court at San Domingo, the proceedings as yet taken against the "Julia" have been entirely ex parte, and of a preliminary character; and we infer that the trial itself was to take place after a lapse of fifteen days, according to the words of the sentence "that the substantiation and termination of the contradictory trial ('del juicio contradictorio,' that is, we presume, 'in foro contradictorio,' where both parties will or may be heard) shall be proceeded with during the fifteen days fixed by ordinance, which shall commence from the publication of this sentence."

It was, therefore, the business of the owners of the "Julia" to take the proper steps for being heard against the sentence of condemnation, if they had cause to show against it.

The preliminary sentence appears to have proceeded upon various grounds—breach of blockade, assisting the rebels, and smuggling.

With respect to the breach of blockade, we have to observe that in the despatch of Sir John Crampton, dated Madrid, January 28, 1864, and which is subsequent in date to the Reports of the Queen's Advocate, it appears that the Spanish Minister assured him, in answer to his remonstrance as to the inefficiency, de facto, of the blockade "that positive orders had then lately been given to cause the blockade to be of the most effective nature;" that it was at that moment maintained by "twenty-three vessels of war," and "that this number could be increased." These papers were not submitted to the Queen's Advocate. Assuming the correctness of this statement, the previous inefficiency of the blockade complained of by Mr. Consul Hood would have ceased, and a de facto, as well as a de jure, blockade would apparently have been established. On the other hand, it is to be borne in mind that the capture of the "Julia" took place on the 31st of December or 1st of January last; that Consul Hood in his letter of the 18th January reports that no de facto blockade had been established down to that time; and refers, in confirmation of that statement, to information given to him on the 31st December by the chief naval authority at San Domingo, and that the account of the transaction given in the newspaper "La Razon" of the 2nd January seems to be inconsistent with the supposition that the vessel which made the capture was then employed in any blockading service.

---

* Consul Schomburgk, No. 49, July 3, 1855; No. 55, November 20, 1855; to Queen's Advocate, August 20, 1855; Queen's Advocate, September 4, 1855; to Consul Hood, No. 9, 1861; Sir J. Crampton, No. 117, October 20, 1861.

† Consul Hood, Nos. 44, 45, 46, and 47; Consular, No. 29.

‡ Also Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th January, respecting Mr. Heneken's claim.

* To Sir J. Crampton, No. 79, 1863; No. 4, 1864.

1864

According to the terms of the Proclamation of the blockade, the only vessels to be seized or treated as enemies' property were those "bringing cargoes of arms and ammunition or effects which might in any manner contribute to foment the rebellion."

The sentence charges the "Julia" with the conveyance of articles of "war and provisions destined for the insurgents," and asserts that while she was discharging her cargo and taking on board another at Monte Christi, the enemy, with whom she was then in direct communication, and with whom she must be considered as represented to have been acting at the time, opened fire upon the Spanish steamer "Don Antonio de Ulloa," which returned the fire; that the "Julia" then was deserted by her crew, and never hoisted any flag during the whole affair. If these averments are true, the vessel may be liable to be lawfully condemned.

If these averments are capable of contradiction, this defence should be set up in the proper manner in the Prize Court, which would be bound, at the same time, to consider the question of the efficiency or inefficiency of the blockade.

In these circumstances we think that Consul Hood should be instructed to watch the case; but we are clearly of opinion that there is at present no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, nor, indeed, does it appear to have been invoked by the owners of the "Julia" or her cargo.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 136.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 4th instant respecting the case of the "Julia," he was directed by your Lordship to inclose for our consideration a memorial and protest dated the 2nd ultimo, from Messrs. Remouard and Bode, the owners of that vessel.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these additional papers do not appear to us to call for any alteration in the Report which we have already had the honour to submit to your Lordship upon this subject. The memorialists should be apprised that they must protect their interests, in the first instance at all events, before the Spanish Prize Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 137.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th ultimo respecting the case of the "Julia," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Hayti (No. 7), reporting the capture by Spanish cruizers of the English schooners "Rapid" and "Darrill;" and to request that we would take Mr. St. John's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship our views as to the course which should be taken in these cases.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Consul Hood (No. 15), reporting the capture of the British schooner "Rapid" and sale of her cargo, and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be taken in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these cases, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the statement of the crew of the "Rapid" to be correct, they were certainly treated in a very illegal manner. That statement is manifestly at variance with the representation which seems to have reached Consul Hood, that the crew of this vessel "deserted her immediately before capture;" and which, we presume, was founded on reports made by the captors to excuse their own conduct. The sale, also, of the cargo of this ship, in the absence of her crew and before adjudication, requires to be explained.

We think that directions should be sent to Her Majesty's Consul at Port-au-Prince to ascertain, as far as possible, the true facts relative to both these cases, and to make a Report to your Lordship thereupon. He should also be instructed to assist the owners of the "Rapid" and the "Darrill," if they deny the lawfulness of the capture, in obtaining justice from the proper Spanish Prize Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 138.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo (No. 22), respecting the condemnation of the British schooner "Rapid," and to request that we would take Mr. Hood's despatch into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we adhere to the opinion in our letter of the 11th instant on this case, which was therewith returned, together with the papers therein referred to.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That taking into consideration the despatch of Mr. Spenser St. John from Port-au-Prince, we think that your Lordship is sufficiently in possession of the facts to call for an explanation from the proper Spanish authorities of the treatment of the crew of the "Rapid," which appears to have been grossly illegal and cruel.

With regard to the condemnation of the "Rapid," we think that Mr. Hood's observations upon the apparent vagueness and insufficiency of the grounds of the sentence (as stated on the face of the Decree of the 9th March) are well founded, but we cannot understand why the ship has not been defended in the proper manner in the Prize Court; and we think that Mr. Hood should be apprized, without loss of time, that he ought to inform the owners of all British captured vessels that this is the course they must pursue, and if justice is not done to them, either in the First Court or in the Court of Appeal, to complain to Her Majesty's Government; but that if they do not appear and defend their interests before the proper tribunal, it must be presumed that they did not take this course from a conviction that they had no proper defence to offer, and that in such cases Her Majesty's Government cannot be called upon to interfere. It should be observed that Mr. Spenser St. John appears to be of opinion that an efficient blockade of the coast of San Domingo has been constituted by the Spanish naval forces, and to be at variance with Mr. Hood upon this point.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 139.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd ultimo, regarding

---

* Mr. Hood, No. 15; Mr. St. John, No. 7.

1864

the condemnation by the authorities of Spain at San Domingo of the British vessel "Julia," he was directed to transmit to us—

1. The draft of an instruction which your Lordship addressed by the last mail to Mr. Hood on the subject (No. 6).

2. Copy of a notification inserted in the "London Gazette" regarding the Spanish notifications of blockade.

3. A despatch from Mr. Hood (No. 16), reporting that the "Julia" has been finally condemned as a lawful prize.

4. A letter (March 30), from the Admiralty, from which it would appear that even as late as the 8th ultimo the blockade was not effective.

And Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion on the present state of the case.

The previous correspondence was also inclosed for our information.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter dated the 16th instant, transmitting two further despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at San Domingo respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the communication of General Vargas to Mr. Consul Hood of the 7th February, 1864 (No. 2 in Mr. Hood's No. 16), did indicate, with sufficient clearness, that the Prize Court, however constituted (it is to be observed that the word "asesor" is rather loosely translated as "Counsel," instead of Judge"), would entertain any application on behalf of the owners of the "Julia," for the restoration of the vessel and cargo.

We observe that nothing is said by the Consul, or by any one interested on behalf of the "Julia," on the subject to which attention was drawn in your Lordship's despatch, as to the alleged contraband character of the cargo with which the "Julia" was said to be supplying the enemy. It is, therefore, not impossible that the owners of the "Julia" might have been aware that they had no valid defence to offer in the Prize Court. The master, whose duty it was to put in a claim on behalf of his owners, was (we presume) at or within reach of St. Domingo; and it seems extraordinary, if there was a good defence, that the final judgment should be suffered to pass by default.

We can hardly assume that all the proceedings, after the capture, took place entirely without the knowledge, or opportunity of knowledge, of the owners, or of any one capable of protecting their interests. If, however, they allege that they have a valid defence, and that they were honestly ignorant that any opportunity was offered to them (and had therefore, practically, no opportunity) of putting forward that defence in the Prize Court, we think it would be right that Her Majesty's Government should make an application to the proper Spanish authorities, to permit the owners still to be heard, either by a re-opening of the case in the Prize Court which condemned the vessel, or admitting them to be heard before a Court of Appeal.

We desire to add that it would appear by the present papers that down to the 8th of March no blockade, considered by Her Majesty's naval officers to be effective, had been established and maintained by the Spanish Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 140.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 26, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter, dated the 11th instant, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a petition from Mrs. Good for compensation for the death of her son, who was killed by a shot from the Spanish soldiery whilst in the house of the British Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which should be taken in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly advise your Lordship to require from Mr. Vice-Consul Cheesman a careful report upon all the circumstances of this unfortunate case. In the absence of such a report, I cannot safely advise your Lordship as to whether the case is or is not one which would justify an application to the Spanish Government for compensation.

In the report Mr. Vice-Consul Cheesman would, I hope, state, among other things, whether the house was known to be the Vice-Consul's; whether any arms or outward insignia represented it to be such; whether anybody else was injured in the house; what steps the Vice-Consul took in the matter; and if he took no steps, why he did not; and whether, in his opinion, the shots were accidentally fired into his house, or with the intention of reaching somebody therein.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 141.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June .)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 31, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 20th May, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, respecting an outrage committed by the crew of a Spanish ship of a war upon the British schooner "R. W. Darrell" at Puerto Cabello, San Domingo, and submitting a claim for compensation on behalf of the owner of the vessel; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should interfere in this case, and if so, to what extent.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that Mr. St. John reported the capture of the "Darrell" in his despatch No. 7 of the 23rd of February, which was transmitted to us for our opinion in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th of March last, and again referred to us by Mr. Murray on the 17th instant, together with other papers respecting the case of the "Rapid."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought to interfere in this case.

There appears to us to be sufficient primâ facie evidence of gross misconduct on the part of the Spanish man-of-war to warrant Her Majesty's Government in laying before the proper Spanish authorities the complaint of Mr. Barclay, and requiring an explanation of the outrage, accompanied by the intimation that if the material facts stated in that complaint cannot be substantially controverted, Her Majesty's Government have no doubt that the Spanish Government will admit the justice of making speedy and adequate compensation to Mr. Barclay.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 142.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 31, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies of the instructions which were addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid and to the British Vice-Consul at San Domingo,* in conformity with our Report of the 28th ultimo, respecting the condemnation by the Spanish authorities of the British schooner "Rapid."

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship also to transmit, together with the previous correspondence in this case,† a letter from the Colonial Office‡ containing a Report from the President of Turk's Island respecting the

---

* To Sir J. Crampton, No. 50, May 2; to Mr. Hood, No. 2, April 30, 1864.

† Law Officers, April 11 and 28; Mr. Hood, Nos. 15 and 22; Mr. St. John, No. 7; Admiralty, March 30, 1864.

‡ Colonial Office, May 12, 1864.

1864

seizure of the vessel, and to request that we would take the papers inclosed into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers in this case now submitted to us do not in our opinion render it unnecessary that a full report should be obtained from Mr. Hood (as we have already had the honour to advise in our former Reports) of all the circumstances of the case, both at the time of and subsequent to the capture. In the absence of this information we can only refer to the views which we have expressed in our Reports of the 11th and 28th of April last, and repeat the opinion which we have formed (so far as from the materials before us we have been able to form any) that the capture of the "Rapid" was illegal and unjustifiable.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 143.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th of June he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the instructions which your Lordship addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (Nos. 74 and 75) regarding the cases of vessels seized and of British subjects detained by the Spanish authorities in San Domingo, and also respecting the blockade established by the Spanish naval forces.

And also a letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office, together with despatches lately received from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, from Mr. Vice-Consul Leon, and from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Hayti, containing details on these subjects; and to request that we would report to your Lordship any further suggestions which we might have to offer upon this matter.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letters of the 30th ultimo and of the 2nd instant transmitting further papers upon this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we now learn, for the first time, from your Lordship's despatch of the 22nd June, 1864, No. 76, to Sir John Crampton, and Mr. Cardwell's letter to Mr. Hammond dated 16th June, 1864, that on receiving information in February last of the then reported intention of the Dominican insurgents to issue letters of marque, your Lordship made a communication to the Lords of the Admiralty to the effect "that the Dominican insurgents could not be admitted to belligerent rights, and that their letters of marque could not be recognized."

This fact (which was unknown to us when we made our Report of the 17th June last) explains the view taken by Admiral Hope and the Attorney-General of Jamaica that the ordinary belligerent rights of visit, search, and capture for the purpose of enforcing the blockade of ports in possession of an enemy, and preventing the introduction of articles contraband of war into those ports, ought not to be conceded to Spain, as against British vessels, beyond the limits of the territorial waters belonging to Spain or to the coasts in the possession of the insurgents.

If we had understood at that time that this view was founded on any positive declaration of your Lordship to the above effect, and not, as we supposed, upon the mere absence of any formal recognition by Her Majesty's Government of a state of war as existing between Spain and the insurgent Dominicans, it would have been due both to your Lordship and to the Admiral and the Attorney-General of Jamaica that we should have then submitted the remarks which we now proceed to offer.

It is not possible that belligerent rights can be lawfully exercised against neutrals by one of two contending parties without entitling the other party also to exercise similar rights. The inference, therefore, drawn by the Attorney-General of Jamaica and Admiral Hope from your Lordship's refusal to recognize the Dominican insurgents as entitled to belligerent rights, viz., that those rights ought not to be conceded to either party in this contest, was logically correct.

But the question whether a state of war does or does not exist between insurgents holding possession of a particular territory and a Government claiming their allegiance and attempting to subdue them is one of fact quite as much as of law; and if the facts are such as really to constitute a state of war between the contending parties, according to the law of nations, it is not, we think, competent by that law to any neutral Power to withdraw its ships and subjects upon the high seas from the operation of the ordinary laws incident to that state of things merely by declining to acknowledge its existence.

Applying these principles to the present contest between Spain and the Dominican insurgents, it appeared and still appears to us that there were adequate grounds for recognizing the existence of a state of war between these parties, and for regarding the disputed territory as under the de facto authority of the insurgents, and not of the Spanish Government. When the Spanish Government in the autumn of last year announced to neutral Governments their intention to put the Dominican coast under blockade, they virtually asserted by that very act the existence of such a state of war; and, while claiming its rights, they bound themselves to fulfil its obligations. A blockade, as we observed in our Report of the 17th of June, cannot exist without a war. Her Majesty's Government in the course of the subsequent correspondence never disputed the right of the Spanish Government to establish and maintain such a blockade, but only insisted that it must be a real and effective and not a mere paper blockade. When the Spanish Government had given sufficient assurances (whether they were fulfilled in fact or not is another question) that an adequate force was actually employed in maintaining that blockade, then, and not till then, a public notification to that effect was inserted in the "London Gazette." But all this was nugatory, and merely misleading, if Her Majesty's Government did not intend to recognize the existence of any state of war between the contending parties. If nothing more was meant or understood than that the Government of Spain prohibited and would prevent by force the entrance of any neutral vessels into certain waters belonging to her own territory, and recognized by Her Majesty's Government as being still de facto and de jure within her municipal jurisdiction, the use of the term "blockade" was improper; the notification in the "Gazette" was improper; the establishment or maintenance of a de facto real blockade by any naval force whatever was wholly unnecessary; and it would, of course, follow that any seizures of vessels, if made within the interdicted waters, would be cognizable not by Prize Courts nor according to the rules of prize law, but according to the ordinary rules and principles either of martial law by land or of the municipal law of Spain.

The inconveniences which flow from such an anomalous (not to say absolutely illegal) state of things, as a blockade recognized by a neutral State, which at the same time only recognizes one belligerent, being so very great, we respectfully advise that Her Majesty's Government should not make any distinction as to belligerent rights between the Spanish Government and the Dominician insurgents; but that both should be recognized as equally entitled to exercise those rights as long as circumstances continue from which the continued existence of a state of war between them may be properly inferred.

In connexion with this subject, we must observe that the acts and language of the Spanish authorities at San Domingo, since the views of Admiral Hope were communicated to them, are not entirely reconcileable with any distinct and consistent view of their own position. While (apparently) acquiescing in the proposed limitation of their rights of search, &c., to the territorial waters of the coast occupied by the insurgents, they advanced the preposterous claim to extend those waters to a distance of six miles from the land: a claim which (we need hardly say) Her Majesty's Government cannot, in the absence of any new Convention upon that subject, admit. The old distance of three miles, as we have already more than once had the honour to report, must be adhered to until some new limit is arrived at by international agreement. On the other hand, the proceedings against the captured vessels seem to have been conducted (in form, if not in substance) upon the principles of prize law; and in the majority of the cases of captured British vessels referred to in the papers before us, the justification of the capture seems to rest essentially upon the existence and maintenance of a legal blockade; as to which, the materials are not even yet sufficient to enable us to form a decisive opinion whether it has been, or is, effectually maintained according to the Declaration of Paris, or not.

Your Lordship's instructions addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid appear to us to have been proper and judicious. With respect to the particular cases of British ships captured, it does not seem to us that any of them require, at the present time, any further immediate action on the part of Her Majesty's Government. One of them, the "President," has been released: two others, the "Pioneer" and the "Forward," appear to have been captured beyond the limits of Spanish or Dominican territorial waters; and the justification of the capture of these vessels probably depends upon the existence of a legal blockade, and of sufficient evidence of an intention to violate it. All the other vessels seems to have been taken within Dominican waters: one of them, the "Julia," seems clearly to have been engaged in supplying the insurgents with contraband of war: the rest appear to be charged only with entrance into blockaded or interdicted ports. The explanations of General Villar (No. 2 in Governor Eyre's despatch No. 47), and the information obtained by Captain Lambert, go far to show that these captures generally were justifiable, if there was a legal blockade.

1864

The principal ground, speaking generally, for complaint and remonstrance arises from the imprisonment (which, as we understand, has now ceased) and the ill-treatment of the crews of these vessels. Sir J. Crampton appears to have distinctly announced to the Spanish authorities that Her Majesty's Government will not allow British subjects taken on board vessels seized for breach of blockade to be either imprisoned or ill-treated. It may be added in any further communication, that those of the crew who are and ought to be examined by the captors as necessary witnesses, may be detained for the purpose of this examination; but not put in irons, imprisoned, or treated in any way as prisoners of war.

The particular case of the unfortunate man William Abbot calls for the most stringent investigation; and if it be true that he was shot in the barbarous and illegal way described in these papers, the person or persons who caused his execution ought to be tried without delay for wilful murder.

This matter appears to have been properly pressed upon the Spanish Government by Sir J. Crampton, whose demand does not, at present, appear to have received any satisfactory answer.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 144.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th of August instant, stating that with reference to the letters from the Foreign Office of the 21st and 30th ultimo and the 2nd instant, regarding the questions as to the blockade of San Domingo and the captnres of British vessels by Spanish cruizers, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters and their inclosures from the Colonial Office, containing further information upon these questions,* together with a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid† containing the reply of the Spanish Government to his representations regarding the capture of the "Rapid;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those then before us on the subject, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have already reported on the subject of the several references of the 21st and 30th ultimo and the 2nd instant.

That we assume that the extracts from the log-book of the "Rapid" are accurately given in Señor Pacheco's inclosure, and if this be so there can be no doubt that the "Rapid" was actively employed in the cause of the insurgents, and had on board, to use the language of the petition preferred by the Captain to the Insurgent Government, "Government property of the most essential and required class for the continuation of this war," and that "this vessel was freighted in the Turk's Islands for the express service of the Government;" nor can there be any reasonable doubt that Señor Pacheco is right in saying that a false representation has been made to Her Majesty's Government as to the conduct of the Spanish captor towards the crew and property of the "Rapid."

That with respect to the "President," she would be entitled to proper damages for her detention (which does not appear to be refused), as she was captured without reasonable cause, not because she was captured out of the territorial waters.

---

* Colonial Office, August 10, 1864.

† Sir J. Crampton, No. 198, August 4, 1864.

That with respect to the other vessels (one of which, the "Forward," it appears to be admitted was good prize, if there was a legal blockade) and their crews, we have to observe that it is impossible to arrive at any satisfactory conclusion from the papers before us. That the case of the "Rapid" naturally inclines us to look with grave suspicions upon these statements; and that we cannot help surmising that most, if not all, of them will be found upon inquiry to have been engaged in furnishing provisions or articles contraband of war to the insurgents. At all events their course is, or ought to have been, to defend themselves before the Prize Court, and if they had been improperly treated by a denial of justice in that Court, to have made a specific complaint of such ill-treatment, or such denial, to Her Majesty's Government.

With our present information we can only advise your Lordship that the proper authorities at Jamaica and elsewhere should be directed to apprize British owners that as Her Majesty's Government has recognized the Spanish right of blockade, if their vessels are seized, they must appear in the Prize Courts, and seek for justice in the first instance before these lawful tribunals. It is hardly necessary to add, after our former Reports, that the Government notice issued by the Colonial Secretary of Grand Turk Island on the 14th June last is calculated to have a misleading effect, which requires to be counteracted by some further public notice.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 145.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 9.)

Doctors' Commons, September 7, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Hayti (No. 25), regarding the claim of Messrs. Levy and Tweedy in connection with some investments in the Haytian funds; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. St. John.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think the acceptance by Messrs. Levy and Tweedy of the sums offered to them, without any protest on their part, does interpose a serious obstacle to insisting, as a matter of right, that they should now be paid off at par. Nevertheless their demand is so clearly consistent with equity and with the usual practice of States when they change the interest on their loans, that I think Mr. Spenser St. John should be instructed to press the claim of these gentlemen upon the Haytian Government; and with respect to the language of the Act of November 1846, it appears to me that the two positions of Mr. Spenser St. John, viz., (1) that the Act imports that the debt shall be paid off at par; (2) that the gourde at par means the equivalent of the Spanish dollar—are perfectly correct.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 146.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 22nd and 29th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, communicating the draft of a Proclamation regarding the San Domingo blockade which the Governor of Jamaica proposed to issue on the 25th of July; and to request that we would report to your Lordship whether we concur in the terms of this Proclamation.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That though the Proclamation is not drawn precisely as we should have suggested, nevertheless, as it sufficiently apprises Her Majesty's subjects of the existence of a blockade of certain ports of the coast, we do not advise that any alteration be now made therein.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 147.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Rsceived November 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 26th ultimo, and to our previous Reports upon the case of the "President," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, reporting that the vessel and crew have been released in consequence of the Spanish Prize Court at San Domingo having declared her an unlawful prize, and stating the claims which have since been made by Mr. Hinson the owner, and by Mr. Ambroise the charterer of the "President," for her illegal seizure, as well as for the imprisonment of Mr. Ambroise and the crew at Porto Plata; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government should demand compensation from the Spanish Government in this case, and if so, whether the amount of the claims, as stated by these gentlemen, is fair and just.

In obedience to your Lordship's command we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the claims for compensation by Mr. Hinson the owner, on account of the illegality of the seizure of his vessel, and by Mr. Ambroise on account of his illegal imprisonment (but not on account of the illegal seizure), are well founded, and ought to receive the support of Her Majesty's Government. With respect to the former claim, it appears to us, as far as we can judge from the papers before us, that there was nothing in the cargo, nor in the ship's papers, which warranted the original seizure of this vessel upon the high seas; and further, that the delay (regard being had to the character and circumstances of this war) of the interval between the 1st of May and 1st of August, before sentence was given in this case, was an additional grievance, to which the neutral vessel ought not to have been subjected.

We are unable to form a correct opinion as to whether the estimate by Mr. Hinson of the damage which he has sustained be accurate or not. It would appear to us to be reasonable; but probably it would be proper that it should be submitted to the arbitration of merchants, aided by the Consul at San Domingo.

With respect to Mr. Ambroise's claim, his imprisonment at all was a violation of neutral rights, and his imprisonment for two months in a gaol, with common felons, was an outrage for which we think he is fully entitled to such redress as pecuniary compensation can afford.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 148.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th October ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to return to us the papers contained in the accompanying volumes regarding the question of the blockade of San Domingo, and the cases of British vessels seized by Spanish cruizers for breach of that blockade.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we should perceive from the letter from the Admiralty of the 14th October, that Captain Bowyear, who was sent out to inquire on the spot as to the efficiency of the blockade, had reported that it was perfectly efficient; and Her Majesty's Government were therefore anxious to have our advice, generally, as to the course they should now pursue in this matter.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that the questions upon which Her Majesty's Government more particularly desired to obtain our opinion, were: whether belligerent rights having been accorded by us to Spain, by our recognition of the blockade, it was consequently necessary that the Dominican insurgents should also be recognized as belligerents; or whether the Sovereign of a country has not the right to stop and seize neutral vessels carrying arms and munitions of war to insurgents who have possession of a part of the sea-coast; and if the Sovereign has such a right, whether he may exercise it beyond three miles from the coast.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to add that Her Majesty's Government were unwilling to recognize the Dominican insurgents as belligerents, if it could be avoided consistently with international law, regard being had to the fact that they had already recognized the Spanish blockade, while they have denied to the insurgents the right of issuing letters of marque; and that the question as to the seizures of British vessels would depend upon our opinion upon the main question as to the blockade; but Her Majesty's Government would be glad to be furnished in the first instance with our opinion as to the necessity of recognizing the Dominican insurgents as belligerents.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to add that Mr. Canning stated in the House of Commons that he considered the recognition of the Greek insurgents as belligerents as a question of fact.

That it would manifestly be inconvenient to recognize any partial insurrection as conferring on the insurgents the rights of belligerents, and thus entitling them to cover the sea with letters of marque.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Government cannot, consistently with the principles and practice of international law, refuse to recognize the Dominican insurgents as belligerents, inasmuch as Her Majesty's Government has already accorded to the Spanish Government the rights of a belligerent Power, that is, rights incident, and incident only, to a state of war.

It might, perhaps, have been competent to Her Majesty's Government to have refused, in the first instance, to accord these rights to the Spanish Government, and to have intimated to that Government that it must confine itself during this insurrection to the exercise of its ordinary power and authority over its subjects, and over those subjects of foreign States who came within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction. Her Majesty's Government, however, has not taken this course, but, on the contrary, has recognized the right of that Government to institute a blockade, to visit and search neutral ships on the high seas, and to pass sentences of condemnation against them in a Court of Prize.

With respect to the apprehension entertained by Her Majesty's Government that the Dominican insurgents may exercise their belligerent rights by issuing letters of marque and covering the sea with privateers, we would suggest that it is by no means certain that it would be competent to the insurgents to adopt that mode of carrying on the war.

We incline to the opinion that the insurgents, in this war with their own Government, could exercise no belligerent rights against the neutral which their own Government had formally and by Treaty, or by solemn declaration, previous to the breaking out of the civil war, renounced. Spain is one of those maritime Powers which signed or acceded to the Declaration of Paris, and thereby solemnly obliged herself to abstain from the use of privateers in any future war. We think this obligation would be equally binding upon the insurgents, at least during the present war, and that Her Majesty's Government might properly intimate to them that the neutral State would not permit them to exercise against her that particular belligerent right which their own Government, before the breaking out of this war, had formally abandoned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

Siam.

No. 149.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Doctors' Commons, December 2, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 23rd ultimo from the India Office, covering a complaint received through the Government of India from Mr. C. O. Johnstone, a merchant of Moulmein, against the official proceedings of Sir R. Schomburgk, Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok, in the case of Moung Shwe Gan v. The Chief of Chang Mai. That Sir R. Schomburgk's proceedings had been already reported to the Foreign Office in a despatch which, on its arrival, was submitted by your Lordship to the India Office, and which, with the observations of the India Office thereupon, was also submitted to me;* and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not easy, even after a most careful perusal of the various papers relating to this intricate and complicated matter, to arrive at a perfectly satisfactory conclusion either as to the actual facts of the case or as to the conduct of the principal persons concerned in it.

The facts of the case now before me are to be collected both from Sir R. Schomburgk's statement (No. 19 of 29th May), upon the perusal of which Sir Charles Wood expressed a favourable opinion of Sir R. Schomburgk, and also from the printed petition of Mr. Johnstone (Inclosure 2 in India Office letter of 13th November), containing a different version of the matter, which petition, I infer from the other papers in the case, Sir Charles Wood has not seen.

I observe at the outset that Sir R. Schomburgk does not state or suggest that Messrs. Snadden did not bonâ fide obtain what they conceived to be a good title from Mr. Lenaine, or that they were at all implicated in the misconduct, rightly or wrongly, charged against him, or that they did not, bonâ fide, and for a valuable consideration, convey their rights and interests in these forests of Myne Loongyee, so derived from Mr. Lenaine, to Mr. Johnstone, or that Mr. Johnstone himself has in any way acted improperly in the matter.

The following facts, moreover, appear to me either to be uncontroverted or clear:—

1. That the case of Moung Shwe Gan v. Chief Chang Mai, was (as well as that of Moung Oopay v. Chang Mai) tried before the proper Siamese authorities at Bangkok; the trial not having been, as I understand, conducted under the provisions of the Order in Council for British jurisdiction in Siam, July 28, 1856 (10 Hertslet, 676).

2. That it was decided (Exhibit K, Printed Petition) in favour of the Chief, that is, practically in favour of Mr. Johnstone, whose title was derived through the Snaddens and Lenaine, from the Chief.

3. That decision was confirmed by the first King of Siam.

4. That Sir R. Schomburgk procured, in the manner about to be stated, the practical reversal of this Judgment; causing it in fact to be in favour of the Plaintiff instead of the Defendant.

It appears that after the decision Sir R. Schomburgk wrote three letters (9th March, 4th April, 21st April, 1864; L, M, N, in Printed Petition), to the King, having for their object to annul this decision.

In the first letter† (L in Printed Petition, No. 2 in despatch of Sir R. Schomburgk, May 29, 1864), he does not state that the Judgment had been actually delivered (though I think it must have been) in Moung Shwe Gan's case adversely to Moung Shwe Gan, but states that this person had proved his case, and ought to have had judgment in his favour, if a false charge of murder had not been suddenly brought against him.

That in the other case, M. Oopay v. Chang Mai, an unrighteous judgment had been given which could not be tolerated. That Chang Mai would be detained by the Consul at Bangkok. That there were other British claims against him which would be sent in when, to use Sir R. Schomburgk's own words, "the Judges were willing to decide on those already sent in a proper and judicial manner." That the general conduct of Chang Mai in the government of his important territories was deserving of severe reprehension.

Sir R. Schomburgk adds, "After several days' delay I received what purports to be the Judge's decision on the case. I know for certain that several of the signatures were attached by order, the pseudo Judges being entirely unacquainted with the case, the documents never having been given them to read."

The second letter (M, in printed papers, No. 3 in despatch of Sir R. Schomburgk, May 29, 1864), is an answer to this letter of the King. Sir R. Schomburgk returns, as I understand, to His Majesty the opinion of the Siamese officers, adverse, I presume from the context, to Moung Shwe Gan, with comments, and among other things he writes:—"I trust your Majesty after reading them will be able thoroughly to understand the case, and give such a decision as Her Majesty's Consul shall be able to accept;" that is, a decision in favour of Moung Shwe Gan, and therefore, practically, of course adverse to Mr. Johnstone. He proceeds to say that if justice be not done, he must lay the matter before the Viceroy of India.

Sir R. Schomburgk does not appear to me to controvert the statement of Mr. Johnstone, to the effect that a Judgment was given in favour of the party through whom Mr. Johnstone claims (see page 13 of printed papers, K), which Judgment was at one time confirmed by the King, but of which Judgment Sir R. Schomburgk procured the reversal by his official interference; that is to say, after the sentence had been pronounced, he brought about the arrangement (page 18 of printed papers, O), the practical effect of which was to reverse the Judgment, and to deprive Mr. Johnstone of the advantage which he would otherwise have derived from it. Nor does the averment of Mr. Johnstone (page 3) that this effect was produced partly by causing the withdrawal of other cases pending against the Zimmay Chief, partly by setting that Chief at liberty and allowing him to leave Bangkok, appear to me to be denied by Sir R. Schomburgk. (See his third letter, marked M, page 18 of printed papers.)

The conclusion to which these premises lead me is, that Sir R. Schomburgk believing, it may fairly be presumed, that the sentence of the Siamese Court and Siamese King was unjust, exerted all the influence of his position, and successfully, to annul the sentence, and prevent the operation of it.

It cannot, I think, be denied that such a course of proceeding, however excellent its object, is open to very grave objections; and that primâ facie at least, the complaint of the person who has been thus deprived of the verdict which had been given in his favour, is worthy of consideration. It may be that the anomalous, irregular, and corrupt administration of justice by the Siamese authorities justifies this unusual, and otherwise improper, intervention of the British Consul. It may be that such intervention has taken place upon other occasions, and has received the sanction of Her Majesty's Government; but I certainly think, as at present advised, that the representations of the Petitioner to Sir R. Schomburgk (page 4 of printed papers) ought to have received some answer, and that it would be proper that a copy of the petition of Mr. Johnstone should be sent to Sir R. Schomburgk, and that he should be asked to make an answer both to the general averments contained in it, and especially to notice that averment at page 3, which is to the effect, that after the decision had been given by the Siamese authorities in favour of the Defendant, and had been confirmed by the King, Sir R. Schomburgk, by the exertion of his official influence, caused that judgment to be set aside.

There is, of course, a technical answer which might be given to Mr. Johnstone, namely, that he must seek his legal remedy against Moung Shwe Gan, or against Messrs. Snadden; but looking to the peculiar circumstances of the case, I think it would not be proper so to deal with the petition of Mr. Johnstone. That gentleman says (page 3 of printed petition), "Your Petitioner, on hearing while in Bangkok of the above agreement having been made while he had the right to said property, and after successfully defending the foregoing claims (of nearly four lacs of rupees), at once had an interview with the Chief, who stated that he had done so, and could not allow your Petitioner to work further in the Myne Loongyee forests; upon which he (Petitioner) addressed a letter to His Majesty, pointing out the hardship of his case, and the certain claims and embarrassments that must arise in consequence of the extraordinary and unexpected

---

* Sir R. Schomburgk, No. 19; to India Office, July 16; India Office, August 2; to Mr. Knox, No. 40.

† Sir R. Schomburgk says, in his despatch of May 29, 1864:—"Mr. Knox being of opinion that his Excellency was determined that justice should not be done in the matter, left, and reported his opinion to me. Letter No. 2 was then written.

1864

position in which he was thus placed. The only satisfaction that your Petitioner could obtain was to the effect that a verdict had been given in each case in favour of his client, the Chief of Zimmay; that these had been again approved and confirmed by the King, and that any subsequent or private compromise between Shwe Gan and the Chief for the Myne Loongyee forests was without the sanction of the Siamese Government, but resulting from the pressure placed upon him by the British Consul, and under which he was obliged to succumb to obtain his liberty from the arrest under which he had been placed." These allegations appear to me to require an answer from Sir R. Schomburgk.

It appears to me also that the Exhibits P and Q (page 19 of printed petition), whereby it would seem that Captain Burn had authorized certain sums of money to be given to Prince Wongsa (in whose palace the proceedings were carried on, and who appears to have acted as the chief Judge of the Court), on condition of his expediting the proceedings against the Chief of Chang Mai, should be brought to the attention of Captain Burn, in order that an explanation may be afforded respecting them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Spain.

No. 150.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

Doctors' Commons, March 22, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 24th of August last, therewith returned to me, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Sir John Crampton,* conveying the reply which he has received from the Spanish Government to his inquiry as to the reasons why an indemnity has not been awarded to the owners of the "Criticado;" and was to request that I would take this paper into consideration, together with the previous correspondence forwarded therewith for my convenience, and that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether the circumstances of the case are such as to call for the further intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the reply of the Spanish Government into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears no demand was made for costs and damages by the owners of the "Criticado" before the proper Court, and no appeal prosecuted from the sentence. On these grounds, as well as those mentioned in my last Report, I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 151.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

Doctors' Commons, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (Nos. 90 and 92) containing correspondence connected with a complaint made to Sir J. Crampton by his American colleague regarding the imprisonment at Cadiz of certain American seamen who are stated to have shipped at New York on board the British vessel "Continental;" and

---

* To Sir J. Crampton, No. 79, 1863; Sir J. Crampton, No. 80, 1864.

Mr. Layard was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Sir John Crampton in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Sir John Crampton should be instructed that Her Majesty's Consul at Cadiz appears to have taken a perfectly correct view of his duty in this matter, and that the seamen must remain in prison until the term of their sentence has elapsed.

The discomforts of the imprisonment, however great they may be, have been most wilfully incurred by these men, who seem to have been very humanely treated by the master and the Consul, and to have made knowingly a false representation of their case to the American Minister.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—I presume, of course, that the proceedings against these seamen were duly taken under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act.

R. P.

No. 152.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 18.)

Doctors' Commons, August 17, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, with reference to the Report of the Queen's Advocate of the 1st August, 1861, together with the previous papers, a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 188), containing the reply of the Spanish Government to the representations that have been addressed to them regarding the long-pending case of the "Azorian;" and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should now pursue in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it seems to be difficult to contend in opposition to the opinion of Señor Arguelles (July 17, 1860), the Legal Adviser of Her Majesty's Legation in Spain, that the act of sending the "Azorian" to Vigo was not in accordance with the letter of the Spanish Sanitary Laws; and in effect the answer of Señor Don Pacheco (July 21, 1864, Inclosure in No. 188) is in accordance with that opinion. It is not the less manifest that the law has been enforced with great and unreasonable severity, though I think there is no evidence of any malicious intention on the part of the authorities of the Teneriffe Board.

I have the honour, however, entirely to agree with the opinion expressed by his Excellency Sir J. Crampton in his letter of the 25th July last; I think that the severe losses to which the "Azorian" has been subjected, and which it is admitted by the Spanish Government were wholly undeserved on her part, resulted entirely from the defective measures of the Spanish Government, which, on the one hand, enforced the quarantine of this ship at Santa Cruz by the most rigorous and technical application of an inconvenient and badly constructed law, and, on the other hand, by the absence of adequate provisions, rendered it impossible that the quarantine should be performed at the place where it was enforced.

I therefore have the honour to advise your Lordship that a further application should be made to the Spanish Government to obtain some indemnity for the injury which the defective state of their law alone has inflicted upon the owners of the "Azorian." It appears to me that the further application should be founded on this ground, and accompanied by a strong expression of confident hope that such an appeal will not be made in vain to the Government of such a country as Spain, between whom and Great Britain the most amicable relations exist.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 153.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st July respecting the proceedings of the Acting British Consul at the Havana, in connection with the condemnation and sale of the British vessel "Colorado," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Rothery and Co., requesting, on behalf of the purchaser of that vessel, to be furnished with copies of certain papers connected with the sale; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to this application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proper answer to send to Messrs. Rothery would be, that your Lordship is advised that you ought to decline to furnish copies of the letters in question; that the Messrs. Rothery must take the usual steps for obtaining whatever documents they may think necessary to put forward for the interest of their client in a Court of Justice; and that it would not be right that the Foreign Office should furnish copies of any letters which may have been officially addressed to it for the purposes of private litigation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 154.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Doctors' Commons, October 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Havana (No. 19, August 6), inclosing copies of a correspondence between the late Mr. Consul-General Crawford and the Captain-General of Cuba, relative to the case of Mr. Walter Goodman, a British subject, who was unjustly arrested and imprisoned on the 25th of June last by the military authorities of St. Jago de Cuba, on which occasion he appears to have been subjected to great indignity; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether this is a case which calls for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, and if so, what steps may properly be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise your Lordship to demand any pecuniary compensation for the imprisonment to which Mr. Goodman was subjected. It was the result of a bonâ fide, though ridiculous error on the part of the Cuban authorities, and it was of very short duration.

It must be remembered that the authorities of the city were at the moment "in a great state of alarm," and "the city virtually in a state of siege" (Mr. Vice-Consul Ramsden's despatch); and that Mr. Goodman was really believed to be making drawings of Morro Castle for hostile or rebel purposes.

The indignities and inconvenience to which he was subjected, owing to what appears to be the normal state of prisons in Cuba, were very distressing, but they were certainly not greater, probably less, than a native Spaniard or Cuban would have undergone.

I think, however, that a remonstrance might properly be made to the Spanish authorities, pointing out the unnecessary indignities to which Mr. Goodman had been exposed, but having for its main object to obtain an order that for the future a British subject, seized upon mere suspicion, should be allowed to communicate directly with Her Majesty's Consul or Vice-Consul, and that in ordinary cases a bail offered by either of those officers should be accepted and the prisoner released.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 155.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 3, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 12th ultimo, from the Colonial Office, regarding an application made by the Spanish Consul in Jamaica for information respecting the distance to which Her Majesty's Government consider the maritime zone of Her Majesty's Colonial possessions to extend; and to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Colonial Office.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the answer to be given to the Spanish Cousul by the Governor of Jamaica should be to the following effect:—

That Her Majesty's Government, in accordance with the received usage and understanding of all the Powers of Europe and America, down to the present time, consider Her Majesty's maritime territory to extend in all places under her dominion to the distance of three miles of sea, measured from the nearest point of land. That besides this general limit, Her Majesty's Government also claim as part of her dominion the whole waters of maritime creeks and inlets, and the mouths of rivers included between headlands part of her territory, although such headlands or some parts of the coasts included within them may be more than six miles apart from each other.

That in places where the possession of particular rocks, reefs, or banks, naturally connected with the mainland of any part of Her Majesty's territory, is necessary for the safe occupation and defence of such mainland, Her Majesty's Government also claim the waters inclosed between the mainland and those rocks, reefs, or banks, whatever may be the distance between them and the nearest mainland. That Her Majesty's Government do not claim a right to treat the general maritime boundary of Her Majesty's territory as extended beyond the received distance of three-miles from the shore, by reason of modern improvements in gunnery and in the range of ordnance; nor can they admit the right of other Powers to insist upon such an extension in their own favour. For although it be true that the principle on which the three-mile limit originally became fixed, was the command capable of being exerted from the shore, by means of cannon-shot over the adjacent waters, that limit has, nevertheless, been accepted by the law of nations as certain and definite, and the inconvenience might be serious if there were no such definite conventional limit, and if controversies were liable to arise upon every occasion as to the precise extent to which the progress of new inventions in gunnery, from time to time, might possibly enable artillery placed on the shore to command neighbouring waters.

That it nevertheless appears to Her Majesty's Government to be highly desirable, and, indeed, an object of pressing importance, that the conventional limit of three miles should be definitely enlarged by the mutual consent and agreement of all the great maritime Powers of Europe and America, not, indeed, for all the purposes of national sovereignty, but so far as may be necessary to provide completely and effectually against the contingency of a violation of the shores or territorial waters of any neutral nation in time of war by warlike operations of a belligerent Power, in consequence of the increased range of modern ordnance: and that Her Majesty's Government have some reason to expect the concurrence in this opinion of the Governments of France and the United States, and will be prepared to enter into negotiations with other maritime Powers in order to secure this object.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 156.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 17.)

Doctors' Commons, December 16, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note

1864

(dated the 26th November), from the Spanish Minister in this country, setting forth the circumstances under which he requests the immediate liberation of the Spanish vessel "Joaquina" detained under embargo at Glasgow. Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose two letters from the Home Office, containing the explanations which have been called for by Sir G. Grey as to the merits of the case; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to M. Comyn's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I presume the Treaty referred to by the Spanish Minister is that of Madrid, 1667, afterwards confirmed by the Treaty of Versailles, 1783 (2 Hertslet, 140). By clause 19 of the Treaty of Madrid, it is provided that "if any controversy happen between merchants and masters of ships, or between masters and mariners, the composing thereof shall be left to the Consul of the nation, but after such manner as he who shall not submit to the arbitrament may appeal to the ordinary justice of the place where he is subject."

It seems to me that these words do not exclude, but admit, the jurisdiction of the British Municipal Court, though recourse ought to be had to the Spanish Consul in the first instance. But if it were otherwise, and the complaint of the Spanish Consul was borne out by a Treaty between Spain and England, the Scotch Statutes cited in the letter of the Sheriff Substitute of Renfrewshire founded primâ facie the jurisdiction of the Court. And I agree with the Lord Advocate that the Judges can only take notice of an objection to its jurisdiction when the same is properly pleaded before it. The Spanish Consul appears to have been almost immediately apprised of the proper legal course which he ought to pursue in order to obtain the liberation of the vessel from arrest, but to have persisted in endeavouring to attain this object by private applications to the Court, to which, it was impossible the Court should accede. It appears from the Lord Advocate's letter that even now a plea to the jurisdiction of the Court may be put in; and if the Spanish Consul thinks that he is rightly advised that he has a plea, he should take this course: meanwhile he may obtain the release of the arrested vessel, by giving security for the amount, which is very small, of the decree for wages.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Switzerland.

No. 157.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Minister in Switzerland (No. 129), requesting instructions on a point which has arisen with reference to the legality in this country of marriages contracted in Switzerland between parties whose ties of consanguinity would be a bar to their marriage in the United Kingdom, although such marriages are permitted in the Swiss Cantons.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that Admiral Harris is desirous of knowing, first, whether, as stated in the printed inclosure in his despatch, a marriage of the nature referred to has been pronounced null in an English Court of Law; and, secondly, if so, whether the declaration hitherto given by the English Mission at Berne to the Federal authorities, to the effect that a strict conformity in such marriages with the lex loci is all that is necessary to entitle them to be recognized in this country, should not be modified.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Admiral Harris.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Admiral Harris should be instructed to the effect that the Law of England does not recognize the validity of marriages of British subjects who are within the prohibited degrees, either by consanguinity or affinity, although the marriage be celebrated according to the lex loci, and be valid according to that law. That it would appear to be desirable to specify, in the form of declaration, this exception to the general rule, that marriages celebrated according to the lex loci are valid in England, viz., that such general rule applies only when the parties (if either of them be a British subject, owing obedience to British law) are capable, by the law of England, of intermarrying together.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 158.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Switzerland (No. 124), offering a suggestion in regard to the registration of marriages solemnized in that country elsewhere than at the British Mission or Consulate.

And that this despatch having been referred to the Registrar-General, the letter inclosed (December 7) had been received from him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, together with these papers, he was directed by your Lordship to send to us the correspondence which took place in 1857 to which the Registrar-General refers; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion, not only as regards the general points adverted to by the Registrar-General, but also as regards the answer which should be returned to Admiral Harris.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by the Registrar-General in his letters upon this subject, 8th July, 1857, 2nd September, 1857, and 9th December, 1864. We think that an answer should be sent to Admiral Harris to the following effect: That the certificate or copy of entry of Miss Netterville's marriage should be transmitted to the Bishop of London's Office (i. e., to J. Shepherd, Esq., Registrar to the Bishop of London, No. 3, Godliman Street, Doctors' Commons,) and that this course should be pursued with respect to all marriages of British subjects celebrated by ministers in Holy Orders wheresoever as well as at the Legation (under 4 Geo. IV., cap. 91); the registration of marriages at the Consulate being provided for by 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, and standing upon a different principle and footing from those marriages by ministers in Holy Orders. It is true that the copies of entries of marriages not celebrated at the Legation, sent to the Bishop of London's office may not be of much avail in the cases where the validity of the marriage is disputed, but it is expedient that there should be a record of these marriages preserved in this country. The custom of registering such marriages in the Bishop of London's Office has existed, we believe, since the time of Charles I; and while on the one hand we are not aware that any practical inconvenience has ensued upon it, on the other hand we do not think that at present there exists any legal substitute for such registration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

Tunis.

No. 159.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Doctors' Commons, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis (No. 16) inclosing a protest drawn up by Mr. Heyn, a British merchant at Sfax, against Her Majesty's Government and Her Majesty's officers on account of losses incurred by him owing to the state of affairs at Sfax; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That, having reference to the papers now submitted to me, I am clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis took, in every respect, a correct view of the case, and that Mr. Heyn would be entitled to no compensation should he ever prefer a claim for it to Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Turkey.

No. 160.

The Attorney-General to Mr. Hammond.—(Received January 4.)

Hastiugs, January 2, 1864.

Dear Sir,

I AM unable to procure a complete copy of the Treaty concerning the Danubian Principalities (I presume dated August 19, 1858), which is referred to in some papers now before the Law Officers, concerning the alleged ill-treatment by the Government of Prince Couza of an Ionian monk named Niphon, the Superior of a monastery or religious house in Wallachia or Moldavia.

It is stated, in the covering letter, that "provision was made by the great Powers of Europe in 1858 for the settlement of the monastic establishments in those countries;" and that "the Government of the Principalities has, up to the present time, evaded fulfilling the conditions of that settlement."

It seems to me that it would be very unsatisfactory to advise in this matter, without having before us the document or documents in which this "settlement" is contained, and seeing in what manner it is made the subject of international engagement; in truth, without even knowing what the settlement was.

Believe me, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

P.S.—There are only some immaterial extracts from this Treaty in Hertslet, and in the Blue Book of 1859.

No. 161.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th November last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers from Mr. Edwards respecting the claim of Mr. Price against the Turkish Government, arising out of transactions connected with a proposed railway from Samsoon to Sivas; that the last Report of the Law Officers upon this claim is dated the 30th October, 1861, and was now inclosed to us, together with the other papers bearing upon the case; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Edwards' present application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That after an anxious and careful consideration of all the former proceedings in this unfortunate case, we are unable to arrive at any conclusion different from that which has been already expressed by the Law Officers, and which was in accordance with the opinion of Her Majesty's Representative at Constantinople; namely, that the deposit of Mr. Price was, under the terms of the contract, legally forfeited.

It could only be exempted from such forfeiture by invoking the protection of the 30th Article of the Concession, which provides, in substance, that war, or any other political event, which might prevent the immediate formation of the Company, and consequently might also prevent the execution of those clauses of the Agreement which had reference to fixed periods of time, should entitle Mr. Price to demand and obtain a prolongation of time from the Ottoman Government.

The troubled state of Bosnia, of Herzegovine, of Montenegro, and of Servia; the insurrection in Crete, and the massacre at Jeddah, were not political events which could be fairly represented to have prevented the formation of the Company, or the commencement of this railway from Samsoon to Sivas, in the sense of that Article, though they may possibly have contributed to lower the credit of undertakings connected with the Ottoman Empire in the European money market, and thereby to depreciate the value of shares in the proposed Company, and so increase the difficulty of obtaining shareholders and funds.

If this Article could be construed to refer to occurrences so remote from the scene of the proposed operations, and not in any way suspending the ordinary state of political relations between Great Britain and Turkey, or the pacific exercise of the ordinary powers of government by the Porte over the country in which the railway was to be made, it would be very difficult to say what possible condition of circumstances could occur in which the Company would be really bound by the fixed periods of time, disturbance and insecurity in one part or another of its dominions being almost the normal condition of the Turkish Empire.

As to the events which are said to have disturbed, or to have had a tendency to disturb the pacific relations of other countries, such as the trial of Bernard and the attempt of Orsini, they are still more clearly foreign to the scope and object of the Article in question. We ought also to state our opinion that the 23rd Article of the Concession, which provides a particular tribunal for the decision of disputes which may arise between the Porte and the Company, does not apply to this case, in which the specified time has been allowed to elapse and the forfeiture to accrue.

Considering, however, the habitual laxity and indulgence which, from the instances referred to by Mr. Price, the Porte seems to have heretofore practised in cases of this kind (and which might well have had the effect of putting the parties interested in this particular concession off their guard), we think that the strict enforcement of the terms of the contract, to the extent of declaring the deposit forfeited, was a harsher course than might reasonably have been expected from the liberality of the Imperial Government; and (although we adhere to the opinion formerly expressed by the Law Officers that Her Majesty's Government are not entitled, as a matter of right, to call upon the Turkish Government to return this deposit) it may, perhaps, be still deserving of consideration whether the good offices of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople might not again be employed in Mr. Price's favour, so far, at least, as to endeavour to obtain from the Porte the concession that this forfeited deposit of 25,000*l.* may be treated as substituted for, and accepted in satisfaction of, the deposit for the other line of railway in the Ottoman dominions (namely, from Smyrna to Cassaba) which Mr. Price seems now to have finally undertaken.

1864

In this attempt reference might not improperly be made to the generally disturbed condition of the Turkish territories in the early part of 1859, and to the effect of that state of things on the European money-market; although this topic must not be pushed so far as to lead to any misunderstanding either by the Ottoman Government or by Mr Price of the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government may think it right to interpose in the case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 162.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that a question is pending between the Government of the Principalities and the Monastic establishments in those countries, for the settlement of which provision was made by the Great Powers of Europe in the year 1858; that without troubling us with the details connected with this matter, your Lordship considered it was sufficient for the present purpose to inform us that the Government of the Principalities has, up to the present time, evaded fulfilling the conditions of that settlement, but has on various pretexts seized the establishments, impounded their property, dispossessed the monks, and now claims to regulate matters connected with the convents on principles arbitrarily fixed by itself; that the monastic establishments are dependent on the monasteries on Mount Athos and in other quarters without the Principalities; that the point, however, on which your Lordship requests our opinion is stated in the inclosed papers,* which give an account of the imprisonment of an Ionian monk for refusing to give up to the authorities of the Government documents connected with a monastic establishment of which he was the superior: and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this point into consideration with reference to the Capitulations between this country and the Porte, which are equally binding on the Principalities, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether, and in what manner, Her Majesty's Government should interfere in his behalf.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, inclosing to us further papers bearing upon these questions.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although we do not think the mere acceptance of holy orders by a natural-born British or Ionian subject in a foreign country would, in all cases and under all circumstances, be necessarily a reason for refusing to such person British protection, we agree in the view which we understand to have been taken by Mr. Hammond, namely, that Her Majesty's Government ought not, on account of the British nationality of the superior or of any other member of an ecclesiastical establishment in a foreign country, to interfere with the ordinary administration of the local law with respect to the affairs and property of such ecclesiastical establishment. Every such establishment is in the nature of a corporation, subject, of necessity, as to its property and temporal affairs, to the local law; and we think that a British subject who holds any office in any such establishment must also be subject to the local law in his official or corporate capacity, and that he is not entitled, with respect to any matter concerning himself in such official or corporate capacity, or concerning the property or affairs of the religious house of which he may be superior or member, to oust the local jurisdiction by setting up the peculiar privileges of a British subject. To this extent, the effect of incorporation into such an establishment appears to us to be virtually the same as that of naturalization, or of entrance into the military service of a foreign State.

In the particular case of the Ionian monk Niphon, the grievances of which he complains (namely, his deprivation of the office of Hegeman or Superior of the

---

* Mr. Green, No. 109; telegram from Mr. Erskine, November 22; Memorandum by Sir H. Bulwer, December 12, 1864.

† Convention of August 19, 1858; Extract from Protocol of Conference held at Paris, July 30, 1858; Capitulation with Porte; Mr. Churchill, No. 30, June 4, 1839.

Wallachian Monastery of Cotareni, and his confinement, or rather seclusion under surveillance within his monastery, for refusing to give up papers relative to the Wallachian property of that monastery to the local Government), appear to us to arise out of, and to be inseparably connected with, his official or corporate character, as a member of that religious establishment. We think, therefore, that any intervention of Her Majesty's Government in his behalf ought to be founded, not upon the simple ground that he is an Ionian subject, but on the special ground that the Government of the Principalities is excluded, by the effect of the Protocol of the 30th of July, 1858, from the right which it might otherwise possess of regulating at its pleasure the secular affairs of the ecclesiastical establishments connected with Mount Athos within its limits, until such a settlement of the disputed questions relative to these establishments, as was contemplated by that Protocol, shall have been arrived at; and that in the meantime, and until such settlement, any of the Powers parties to that Protocol have a right to interfere for the protection of any of their subjects members of those establishments, whose rights as such members may be in any way invaded by the local Government.

If Her Majesty's Government should think it proper and expedient to interfere on this ground, for the protection of the Ionian monk Niphon, we are of opinion that the mode of proceeding suggested by Sir H. Bulwer should be adopted, namely, that Mr. Green should be instructed to intimate to the Wallachian authorities that unless Niphon be restored to his office and relieved from the restraints now placed upon him, Her Majesty's Government will be under the necessity of bringing his case before the Porte, as a matter of international interest between the Porte as suzerain, and Great Britain and the other Great Powers parties to the Protocol of the 30th July, and the Convention of the 19th of August, 1858, and that in the event of this remonstrance failing of effect, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople should be instructed to make an official representation of the case to the Porte accordingly.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 163.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour you at our earliest convenience, with an opinion on the following question:—

You are aware that Her Majesty is about to abandon the Protectorate of the Ionian Islands, with a view to the annexation of those islands to the Kingdom of Greece. When that annexation takes place, which, however, may not be for four or five months from this time, Ionian citizens will no longer be under British protection.

That a question has been raised whether, under these circumstances, citizens of the Ionian States need be required to take out British certificates of registration under the Orders in Council of the 9th January and of the 17th November, 1863, to enable them to be protected as British subjects in the interval that must elapse before they become subjects of the King of Greece, and on this question Mr. Hammond was to request our opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the letter of the Order in Council, the taking out of a British certificate of registration would be necessary to enable Ionian citizens to be protected as British subjects; but that we think that in the peculiar circumstances of the case, directions might properly be sent to Her Majesty's Ambassadors and Consuls in the Ottoman dominions to consider Ionian citizens as entitled during this year, though unregistered, to British protection, and not to exact from them any penalties for non-registration.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 164.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 23.)

Doctors' Commons, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 39), respecting a question which has arisen as to the interpretation of the Treaty of Commerce of 1861 between Great Britain and Turkey, in regard to the duty to be levied on the produce of Turkey when exported by British subjects to any other place than a British possession; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this question into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the true and fair interpretation of the Treaty is that which His Highness Aali Pasha has put upon it, and that the whole of the IVth Article must be construed together, and so construed it appears to be concerned with exports from Turkey "to the dominions and possessions" of the other Contractlng Party to the Treaty, and that it could not have been intended that Turkish goods exported from Turkey to Austria by an Austrian subject should pay 12 per cent., and the same goods exported to the same country by a British subject should pay 8 per cent.

This would be contrary to the general scheme on which these Commercial Treaties of Turkey with foreign States have been contracted; and I think that such is not the true construction of the whole of the IVth Article, though it is the literal construction of the latter paragraph of it, taken per se.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 165.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

Doctors' Commons, March 7, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter dated the 16th ultimo, and its inclosure, from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court, in which he again brings to the notice of Her Majesty's Government the question of the claims of some Turkish subjects to certain lands at Thebes, and which formed the subject of my predecessor's Report of the 28th February, 1862. That upon the receipt of that Report Her Majesty's Government communicated with the Governments of France and Spain, who concurred with the views therein expressed that they were not called upon to interfere in the matter.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous papers on this matter, together with the Treaties and Protocols alluded to therein; and to request that I would take the same into consideration in conjunction with the present application of the Turkish Ambassador, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused all the papers which were before my predecessor in office, as well as the letter and inclosure from the Turkish Ambassador, and also the text of the Convention of 1837, which I think was not before him. I am unable to arrive at any other conclusion than that which he expressed in his Report to your Lordship. I think that, apart from special considerations, and upon general principles, it is hardly necessary to say that the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government would be very improper. But I am further of opinion that the special international obligations of this country, as one of the Protecting Powers of the Kingdom of Greece, do not warrant Her Majesty's Government in interfering in this matter between the kingdoms of Turkey and Greece, which, in reality, relates to a question of title to property which dates back to the year 1834, the validity of which title the Greek Government has uniformly refused to recognize, and the discussion of which it certainly appears to me that the Porte is barred from now reopening by the Convention of 1837. Perhaps, however, the best answer to M. Musurus would be, that all the papers, together with the more recent statements of His Highness Aali Pasha and of his Excellency the Turkish Ambassador, have been again subjected to a careful legal examination, and that Her Majesty's Government are advised that they ought not to alter the opinion which, in conjunction with the other Protecting Powers, they formerly expressed, namely, that no adequate ground is laid for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 166.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying three Reports,* addressed by Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Logie to the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, reporting upon the case of an Ionian charged with the murder of a Turkish soldier; and to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the instructions which it may be proper for his Lordship to give in this case.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's further commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 13th ultimo, inclosing Reports from Mr. Logie, the Legal Vice-Consul at Smyrna, relative to the case of an Ionian charged with the murder of a Turkish soldier, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further Report from Mr. Logie, and to request that we would take the same, together with the former papers, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, Mr. Consul Logie has acted with great propriety and no mean ability. The course which he has taken is in entire accordance with the Capitulations (see 2 Hertslet, p. 257), and with the Firman and Hatti-Sherif of 21st February, 1856 (10 Hertslet, 626); and we think he should be instructed to continue to refuse to join in any finding, verdict, or preliminary sentence, before the accused person has had a proper opportunity of making his defence; and, if the sentence be forwarded to the Governor without his signature or approbation, we think Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople should be instructed to represent the case to the Porte, as one in which no proper trial has been had, and to demand that, until there has been a proper trial, and a sentence pronounced, after giving full opportunity of defence to the accused, with the concurrence of the English Consul, no sentence which may be pronounced against the prisoner by any other tribunal should be carried into execution.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 167.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

Doctors' Commons, April 9, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 7th ultimo, relative to the claims of the heirs of Ismael Bey to certain lands near Thebes, he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that your Lordship informed M. Musurus, in accordance with the opinion therein expressed, that Her Majesty's Government saw no adequate ground for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government in this matter; and Mr. Layard was to transmit to me the answer which has been received from the Turkish Ambassador to that communication, and was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the answer of the Turkish

---

* In Sir E. Hornby's No. 1, January 18, 1864; and No. 5, February 3, 1864.

1864

Ambassador, and other papers in this case, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That M. Musurus complains that the answer of my predecessor in office, given in March 1862, is unsatisfactory, because it is founded upon the interpretation of the Treaty of 1827, which Treaty, he says, is inapplicable to the present case.

I think this is an erroneous view of the opinion, which does refer to the Treaty of 1827, but which does not by any means found upon the construction of that Treaty alone the advice to Her Majesty's Government not to interfere in this dispute between the Government of the Porte and of Greece.

My predecessor (Sir John Harding) expressly says, "The notes of Conéménos Bey (March 6, 1861) and of Mehemed Djemil Bey (November 2, 1861) have failed to satisfy me that the Greek Government has, in this matter, acted in violation, either of the Treaty of 1827 (Article 2), of the arrangement of 21st July, 1832, or of any of the Protocols or international documents to which I have access, so as to justify the intervention of the three Powers."

I have already expressed my general concurrence in that opinion, and tendered my advice to Her Majesty's Government that no case has been made out by the Porte which requires the intervention of the Protecting Powers.

I will endeavour to state as concisely as I can, some of the reasons which led me to this conclusion.

Contemporaneously with the establishment of the independent Kingdom of Greece, disputes appear to have arisen relating to two classes or categories of landed property in the Province of Thebes: (1.) Property in that province possessed and not sold by Turkish subjects to foreigners; (2.) Property in that province sold by Turkish subjects to foreigners.

With respect to these two classes, or categories, the Kingdom of Greece appears to have entered into two arrangements of a formal and definite character, whatever technical title or name they bore. (a.) The Convention of 1837 between the Porte and Greece, which settled all claims of Turkish subjects as to property in this province; (b.) An arrangement of 1843 between Greece and the Protecting Powers, settling all claims as to properties sold by British subjects in 1834, to foreigners.

The first sale of the property which is the subject of this dispute took place in 1834; in that transaction a Turkish subject, Hadji Ismael Bey, was the seller, and a Russian subject, Zaharoff, was the purchaser. The lawfulness of this transaction seems always to have been denied by the Greek Government, who, it is alleged, possessed themselves de facto of the property.

In 1840 the purchaser, Zaharoff, sold back the property to the representatives of the original seller, Hadji Ismael Bey.

One thing, at least, is clear in this complicated matter, namely, that if the property in question belongs to any individual, and not to the Greek Government, it belongs either to the Russian or the Turkish subject. If it belonged to the Russian, by virtue of the purchase in 1834, it ought to have been included in the arrangement of 1843, effected in that year, as to all such property, between Greece and the Protecting Governments. If, on the other hand, the property belonged to the Turkish subject or his representatives, the controversy respecting it was governed by the Convention of 1837, between the Porte and Greece, the object of which was "to settle definitively and irrevocably" the claims made on the part of the Ottoman Porte, "for itself and its subjects, on account of property in the province of Thebes," in a particular manner, and the 3rd Article of which stipulated as follows:—"The Sublime Porte, for itself and its subjects, relinquishes all claims upon any property situated in the province of Thebes, of whatever nature such claim may be, or under any form in which such claim may be made; and it will not henceforward put forward any demand, nor take any steps towards the Greek Government, on behalf of any person whatever who may make a demand of this description, however small it may be."

Now, what is the present demand of the Porte? To enforce the claim of the representatives of one of its subjects, on the ground of their having acquired, by purchase, a property in the province of Thebes, in 1840.

I am of opinion that this Convention of 1837 presents an insuperable obstacle to the enforcement of this claim. The Porte has no standing ground, so to speak, for any claim of the kind accruing after 1837.

It is argued by the Porte that this purchase in 1840 was made by the original seller (or, what is practically the same, the representatives of the original seller) of the property in 1832; and that if the purchaser of 1832 had not been tired out by the refusal of the Greek Government to recognize his title, he would not have sold in 1840, and, therefore, that the Convention of 1837 does not apply.

I am unable to see the legal force of this argument.

Who was the owner of this property in 1837 (the date of the Convention)? The Turkish subject? Then, why was this property not placed in the category of the other property of Turkish subjects, and made the subject of pecuniary arrangement, and "definitively" and "irrevocably" settled by that Convention? No reason is offered; on the contrary, it is now alleged by the Porte that the Russian was de jure at least in 1837, and till 1840, the owner of the property, which in that year he sold back to the Turkish subject. Why, then, it is a claim expressly barred by the Convention, as having its legal title subsequent to 1837.

The Porte cannot, in my opinion, invoke the Treaty of 1832, between itself and the Protecting Powers, for the purpose of substantiating a claim against Greece, which, by the subsequent Convention of 1837, between itself and Greece, it has solemnly and expressly bound itself, as a Government, not to put forward. But this Treaty of 1832 is the foundation on which M. Musurus (16th February aud 28th March, 1864) rests his claim for the intervention of the Protecting Powers.

Nor can the Porte, in my opinion, invoke the arrangement of 1843, upon which, however, His Highness Aali Pasha appears to rely exclusively, in his despatch of the 28th January, 1864 (see inclosure in M. Musurus' note of the 16th February, 1864); because, as I understand it, this arrangement related to properties not belonging to Turkish subjects (as this property is alleged to belong), but to foreign purchasers; and it is, therefore, an arrangement with which, not the Porte, but the Protecting Powers, are concerned, and under which, moreover, all proper claimants have already been satisfied.

I have hitherto been considering this question more in the light of a controversy between the Sublime Porte and the Kingdom of Greece than as a question as to the right of the Sublime Porte to call upon the Protecting Powers, under the Treaty of 1832, to intervene for the adjustment of the claim. But, it appears to me, that, if the facts facts show, as I think they do, that there is no primâ facie case made out by the Porte against Greece, they show à fortiori that there is no case made out for the intervention of the Protecting Powers; and, moreover, under this head, the lapse of time per se presents a very grave consideration. Protecting Powers are called upon to enforce a complicated claim of property which originated thirty years ago, and which ought to have been disposed of either under the Arrangement of 1837 or 1842.

I agree with my predecessor, that no satisfactory reason is shown why Zaharoff did not obtain a recognition of his title, if he had a valid one, from the Greek Government; or why he did not, as other foreign purchasers did, apply to the Protecting Powers for their intervention.

I understand, as my predecessor did, that the Greek Government "offers, in the event of the claimants establishing their real ownership, to pay them an equitable indemnity upon certain bases, in accordance with the arrangements of 1837, in similar cases" (see conclusion of note of M. Couduriottis, $\frac{12}{24}$th July, 1861).

"The Turkish Government, on the other hand, insists upon the claimants receiving absolute possession of the lands, and requests the intervention of Great Britain, France, and Russia, in favour of this demand" (see conclusion of note of Mehemed Djemil Bey, 2nd November, 1861).

I must again repeat my agreement with him in his conclusion from all the circumstances, that no adequate case is made out for the intervention of the Protecting Powers.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 168.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches, as noted in the margin,* respecting a question which has been raised by the Porte as to the right of Her Majesty's Consular Agents in Tripoli to exercise jurisdiction in cases in which the plaintiff is an Ottoman subject and the defendant a British subject.

---

* Mr. Erskine, No. 5, January 6; No 45, February 9, 1864.

1864

Mr. Murray was also pleased to inclose a Memorandum which has been drawn up in the Foreign Office on the subject; and was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course that it would be right and proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the request of his Excellency Aali Pasha appears certainly to be well-founded upon the letter of the Capitulations, as we have had the honour to report in a similar case which lately arose in Egypt. But we think that if an immemorial usage to the contrary (as suggested by Sir E. Hornby) can be established as a matter of fact, such usage may be evidence of a concession of power beyond the letter of the Capitulations; and the alleged venality and corruption of the Tripoline Courts is a circumstance not to be disregarded in any action which Her Majesty's Government may think fit to take upon this subject.

The proof, however, of immemorial usage is manifestly no easy matter in such a case, if it be not admitted by the local authority, who has the letter of Capitulations apparently on his side; and we are led to doubt, from what is stated to have taken place in 1844, whether the usage relied upon has really been so uniform, or of so old a date, as Sir E. Hornby appears to believe.

It appears to us, under these circumstances, that where the letter of the Capitulations is insisted upon in derogation of the asserted usage, and where the usage itself, or its validity, is in dispute, it may be necessary for Her Majesty's Consul to accede to the demand; but in that case the Turkish authorities ought distinctly to understand that Her Majesty's Government assume it to be the determination of the Ottoman Government to adopt the same course in all similar cases towards all the Consuls of Christian Powers; and that Her Majesty's Government will not consent that British Consuls should be placed in a different position, as to the jurisdiction conceded to them, from that of the Consuls of other nations, it being quite clear that, under the Capitulations, the British Consular Courts are entitled to as great an authority as that which is conceded to the most favoured nation. And as the matter is one of considerable importance, it may perhaps be desirable, before coming to any final decision upon the point, to communicate with the other European Powers which have an interest in the question, and to endeavour to arrive at a common understanding as to the view of the effect of the Capitulations and usage, which is to be acted upon in all such cases.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 169.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Alexandria (No. 14, May 9), inclosing a copy of a Memorial addressed to him by the Chairman of the British mercantile community at Alexandria, respecting the proposed formation of an International Company for the purpose of facilitating the transport of produce and merchandize by means of steamers, lighters, tug-boats, &c., in the harbours of Egypt, as well as on the Nile and all navigable canals.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the parties concerned in this enterprise are desirous of ascertaining whether the right of navigating the rivers and canals of the Ottoman Empire is not secured to the British flag under the most favoured nation clause, and the several stipulations with foreign Powers referred to in the Memorial; and that the question as to the right of foreigners to navigate the Nile and the Mahmoutic Canal under their own flag formed the subject of correspondence in 1856-57, and was reported on by Her Majesty's Advocate-General on the 8th of September of the latter year.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed the correspondence, and was directed by your Lordship to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the question now raised by the British mercantile community at Alexandria.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the right of navigating the rivers and canals of the Ottoman Empire under the British flag is not secured to Her Majesty's subjects under the most favoured nation clause in the Treaties referred to in the letter of Mr. Taylor. As we agree with the elaborate and careful Report of the late Queen's Advocate on this point, dated the 13th of October, 1856 (contained in the volume transmitted to us from the Foreign Office), we do not think it necessary to state more in detail the premises which have led us to this conclusion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 170.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd of May, 1862, on the case of an Ionian named Dionysius Focca, who claims from the Moldavian Government an indemnity on account of the alleged illegal proceedings of the superior administrative authorities of Moldavia in regard to a contract he had entered into with certain of the peasant proprietors of the Abramechty estate, he was to transmit a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest (No. 24), inclosing a copy of the answer he had received to the last communication he addressed to the Minister for Foreign Affairs on the subject of this claim.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was also to transmit the accompanying letter dated the 29th March last from Mr. Focca, protesting against the proposal of the Moldo-Wallachian authorities that he should, after so many years, be now called upon to establish his claims by the production of certain documents before a Court of Inquiry, and requesting Her Majesty's Government to insist on a settlement of his claims.

The former papers respecting this claim, Mr. Hammond was pleased to state, were inclosed therewith, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take them into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course it would be right and proper to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand the Government of the Principalities to have admitted the principle of Mr. Focca's claim to compensation or indemnity; but to require the production by him of vouchers and proofs to substantiate the amount of the loss for which he claims to be indemnified, ultra the 2,600 ducats originally paid by him, and which they offer at once to repay.

Mr. Focca, on the other hand, represents that it is unreasonable now to call upon him to produce any vouchers or proofs; and that, in fact, all his vouchers and proofs are already in the possession of the Wallachian Government; the farm contract itself, on which his title is founded, and the public documents by which the illegality of the former proceedings taken against him was admitted, being apparently regarded by him as in themselves sufficient for this purpose.

These documents do appear to us to be sufficient to show that he has been illegally dispossessed, and that he is entitled to receive compensation for the loss which he has sustained; but they do not appear to us to be sufficient to establish the quantum of that loss (a point on which the Law Officers of the Crown have never hitherto been called upon to advise); and whether the proper measure of compensation is the value of the farm itself for the residue of the term at the time of his dispossession, or the amount of Mr. Focca's expenditure thereon, with interest, in either case some further inquiry and evidence seems to be necessary, in order to arrive at the sum which the Wallachian Government ought to be called upon to pay.

It is to be observed that the reimbursement of Mr. Focca's expenditure (with or without interest) seems to be the principle which the Wallachian Government are prepared to concede. This is involved in the proposal to return him the purchase money of 2,600 ducats. If this principle is adopted, it is clear that the Wallachian Government must be entitled to call upon Mr. Focca for some vouchers or proofs of the fact, and the amount of the expenditure on the cultivation and improvement of the lands, &c., for which he claims credit; and it does not appear from the papers that any such documents or proofs have ever been produced.

1864

On the other hand, if the value of the farm-lease, at the time of the dispossession, is to be taken, we are unable to see how this can be said to be ascertained or ascertainable merely from what appears upon the face of the contract. The contract is one of a very peculiar character; it is made by the agents of a community of villagers or rustics, who engage for the community, not only to let certain lands to Mr. Focca as farmer for a certain term, but also to supply the farmer with ploughs, oxen, and a certain amount of labour for the cultivation of the farm, and certain fixed quantities of grain, hay, wine, fuel, game, &c., and with the use of certain buildings, and other privileges, at the charge of the community; and further, to place the members of the community themselves under certain restrictions as to the manufacture of spirituous liquors, and the consumption of their own wine, and the sale of their own produce, for the farmer's benefit. We can easily conceive that in the valuation of such a contract there may be some practical difficulties, or at least room for fair difference of judgment; even if it is to be assumed that it was in all respects binding by the local law upon all the members of the community. But we are not satisfied that so large an assumption can be safely made. The possession of Mr. Focca was, in the first instance, irregularly and illegally disturbed: afterwards restitution was made by an act, not of judicial, but of executive power; and, still later, the executive power again irregularly and illegally interposed to dispossess Mr. Focca. It may, under these circumstances, safely be assumed that he would have continued in some sort of possession of the demised lands if he had not been so dispossessed. But it is, perhaps, too much to take for granted, in the absence of any judicial decision whatever upon the case, that all the members of the community were bound by all the stipulations of the contract, or that the loss which Mr. Focca has sustained, is to be measured upon the assumption that the performance of all those stipulations could have been actively enforced for his benefit.

On the whole, our conclusion is, that if the Government of the Principalities are to be understood as now proposing an inquiry into the question of damage, and for that purpose calling upon Mr. Focca to go into evidence in support of his claim, it is proper and reasonable that such inquiry should be made, and such evidence should be given, to substantiate the amount of compensation due. We think, however, that in estimating the amount and character of evidence necessary for this purpose, due regard ought to be paid to the difficulties of proof under which Mr. Focca may be placed, both from the lapse of time and from the other circumstances consequent upon his dispossession.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 171.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

Doctors' Commons, July 14, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to the Reports from Her Majesty's late Advocate-General of the 14th of May and 10th September, 1860, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, and its inclosures, received from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, reporting the decision which has been arrived at relative to the claim advanced by Mr. Leahy against the Turkish Government, for plans and engineering service connected with a proposed railway from Belgrade to Constantinople; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take Sir Henry Bulwer's despatch, together with the other papers bearing upon the case, which were also sent to me, into consideration, and that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's command I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere further in this matter.

The claim of Mr. Leahy has been submitted, with that gentleman's express consent, to a proper and fairly constituted tribunal, composed of two members appointed by the British Ambassador and two by the Turkish authorities. These judges, or arbitrators, have been, apparently, unanimous in pronouncing against the claim of Mr. Leahy.

The decision is accompanied by reasons which appear to be valid, and it is in accordance with the expectation of Sir H. Bulwer, who is also of opinion that the "examination" has been "impartial."

I think that Her Majesty's Government could not, without a breach of goodfaith towards the Turkish Government, press upon that Government any further investigation into the claims advanced by Mr. Leahy.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 172.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 42, June 22, 1864) relative to the claim put forward by Messrs. Gregory and Spiridion Cuppa to be registered as British subjects; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople will be warranted in registering the Messrs. Cuppa as British subjects.

In so advising, we must be understood to reserve our opinion as to any question (if any should hereafter arise) in which the claim of these gentlemen to the privileges of British subjects, although not born on British soil, by virtue of an Act of Parliament, may be brought into competition with any claim of the country of their actual birth or residence to their allegiance.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 173.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 2.)

Doctors' Commons, August 2, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople (No. 156) reporting the circumstances of the seizure by the Porte of a quantity of arms on board the British steamer "Ada," under the provisions of the Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and Turkey of April 19, 1861, a copy of which was inclosed.

That Sir Henry Bulwer in protesting against this seizure refers to the course pursued by the Porte in regard to some arms which were restored to the Italian Government under the circumstances referred to in the accompanying correspondence; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instruction which should be given to Her Majesty's Ambassador thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as I understand the circumstances connected with the seizure of these arms, they were as follows:—The "Ada" was in a Turkish port laden with arms packed in chests, on which was the false designation of commercial merchandize: that such arms had been prohibited by a proper instrument officially notified in accordance with the provisions of the XVth Article of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the Sultan, April 29, 1861: that an attempt had been made to land these arms, which had been defeated by the vigilance of the Turkish officers, and that there is no doubt whatever that these arms were destined for importation into the Turkish territories. In these circumstances the arms in question were, I think, in the terms of the XVIIIth Article, "contraband goods liable to confiscation by the Ottoman Treasury." The circumstances of the Italian precedent referred to are, I think, correctly stated by His Highness Aali Pasha to distinguish it from the present case; and certainly the language and conduct of Her Majesty's Government on that occasion were, to say the least, not unfavourable to the exercise of the power claimed in this instance by the Ottoman authorities.

1864

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 174.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 15.)

Doctors' Commons, August 13, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 47) relative to the proceedings of the Turkish authorities with reference to the case of the widow Derdavit, a British protected subject, who claims her dowry out of the personal property left by her deceased husband, who was a subject of the Porte; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not seem to be denied that Derdavit is a British protected subject. I do not find it controverted that, as a general rule, the personal property of such persons is administered by the Court of the Patriarch, or by the Tidjaret. The interference of the Mussulman Court of the Evcaff appears to have been originally justified on the ground that there was immoveable property, or vacouf. This turns out not to be the case. It is then said that the municipality paid the debts as well as the funeral; but the question by what right they did so, to the detriment of the widow, remains unanswered. As far as I am enabled to judge from these papers, and with my present information on the subject, I must advise your Lordship that the position of Sir E. Hornby is well founded and ought to be supported.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 175.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that since the receipt of our Report of the 5th of April some communication has taken place with the India Office with reference to the proposed Order in Council respecting British Indian subjects in the Ottoman dominions, and to transmit to us a further draft of such Order which has been amended so as to meet the views of the India Office; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether it may properly be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Order in Council, as altered, may be properly submitted to Her Majesty for sanction.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 176.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that in consequence of the transfer of the Ionian Islands to Greece, by which the British Consular establishment in the Levant will be relieved from a considerable amount of duty, more espocially as regards jurisdiction civil and criminal, your Lordship thinks it necessary to reduce the judicial establishment in the Levant, and to combine with that reduction certain changes in the Consulate-General at Constantinople.

That at present, the commercial and judicial duties at Constantinople are performed, the former by 1st, a Consul-General; 2nd, a Vice-Consul Cancellier; and 3rd, a Vice-Consul: the latter by 1st, a Judge of the Consular Court; 2nd, a Vice-Consul Cancellier and Registrar; and 3rd, a Vice-Consul and Law Secretary.

That your Lordship proposes that for the future the office of Consul-General and Judge of the Consular Court shall be almagamated and held by one person, and that your Lordship contemplates naming to fill the combined offices one of the present legal Vice-Consuls. That this officer will continue to control in the exercise of their judicial functions the several Consuls in other parts of the Ottoman dominions, and that he generally will execute all the other duties devolving under existing Orders in Council on the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court. That he will be assisted, as regards his commercial duties as Consul-General, by a Commercial Vice-Consul, and as regards his Magisterial duties by a Law Secretary, who will hold, as now, a commission as Vice-Consul. That there will be a sufficient establishment of clerks to carry on the subordinate duties of the combined offices.

And that in addition to this alteration, your Lordship proposes to abolish the office of Legal Vice-Consul at Smyrna, leaving there a Law Clerk, though without a commission as Vice-Consul, to assist the Consul in the execution of the judicial duties which may devolve on him as on other Consuls in the Ottoman dominions.

That with reference to these proposed arrangements, Mr. Hammond was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the Order in Council, Regulations, and Instructions to Consuls in regard to judicial matters now in force in the Ottoman dominions, and to request that we would have the goodness to inform your Lordship whether it will be necessary to make any alterations in any of those documents, in consequence of the proposed amalgamation of the offices of Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Consular Court.

In obedience to your Lordship's commauds we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with reference to the three instruments, viz., the Order in Council of the 9th January, 1864; the Rules for the Supreme and other Consular Courts, framed under the authority of that Order; and the Circular Letter of General Instructions by the Judge of the Supreme Court, we are of opinion that it will be necessary to make alterations in the first of these instruments only, and that that alteration should be effected by a Supplemental Order in Council, which would carry into effect the changes contemplated by your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 177.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 10, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Major Stokes (No. 17), calling attention to the effect of the Order in Council of the 9th January, 1863, on certain clauses relating to the Danube navigation, referred to in the Orders in Council of January 7 and March 25, 1862, copies of which were inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion on the subject, together with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

1864

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's second letter dated the 14th ultimo, transmitting to us, by your Lordship's direction, copy of a Judgment recently delivered by the Judicial Committee on an Appeal from the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, in the running-down case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna," from which we should perceive that the Committee declare the regulations issued by the Danube Commission to be invalid. Mr. Hammond also inclosed all the Treaties and papers respecting those regulations, and another despatch from Major Stokes (No. 16), having reference to the above subject, and was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which under the circumstances should be pursued.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that with reference to our letter of the 11th March, 1862, forwarding a draft of an Order in Council enabling British Consular Officers in the Delta of the Danube to enforce the regulations framed by the European Commission of the Danube, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 13th ultimo, from the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, together with the memorandum therein referred to dated the 5th December, 1861, which was communicated to the Foreign Office by the Austrian Ambassador on the 6th of December, 1861. That these papers refer to the collision of the "Mars" and "Smyrna," and Mr. Hammond stated that in consequence of the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council in that case which was referred to us on the 14th instant, your Lordship is in doubt as to the answer which, under these circumstances, should be given to Count Wimpffen, and would be glad to be furnished with our opinion on the subject.

We are also further honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, transmitting to us the accompanying despatch from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 57), inclosing extracts from the "Levant Herald," respecting the Judgment recently delivered by the Judicial Committee in the case of the collision which took place on the Danube between the "Mars" and "Smyrna," and containing observations on the subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, with reference to those referred to us in his letter of the 14th instant, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the instructions which it would be right and proper to give in regard to the questions raised therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers relate to a very important and difficult subject, which cannot, we think, safely or properly remain in its present position. We propose to advert to the several matters on which we are requested to advise in the following order:—

1. As to the recent Judgment of the Privy Council in the case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna."

That Judgment was given in a civil action, brought by an Austrian against an English Steam Navigation Company, in the British Consular Court at Galatz, which was taken by successive appeals before the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. The cause of action was the loss, by a collision with the English Company's ship "Smyrna," of the Austrian Company's steamer "Mars," on the 6th November, 1860, while navigating the Sulina Channel of the Danube, agreeably to the regulations made on the 27th June, 1860, by the European Commission of the Danube. The "Smyrna" was navigating according to the previous rule of the river, the two rules being at variance with each other, and the old rule (apparently) being in itself reasonable and proper. All these Courts decided in favour of the English Company, on the following grounds:—

(1.) That the English ship was in the right, unless the regulations of the European Commission were binding.

(2.) That the Articles of the Treaty of Paris, under which the European Commission was constituted, did not empower that body to make those or any other regulations concerning the police or navigation of the river.

(3.) That there was no evidence of any Legislative Act of the Turkish or Moldavian Government sufficient to give to those regulations, if inoperative per se, the force of local law in that part of the river where the collision took place.

A serious doubt was suggested (though not solved) in Lord Cranworth's Judgment, whether (having regard to the political relations between the Porte and the Danubian Principalities, and the provisions of the Treaty of Paris as to the constitution of the intended Riverain Commission) it would be competent for the Sultan alone to give to any such regulations the force of law within the ceded territory, which was by the Treaty annexed to Moldavia. Nothing was, or indeed could be, determined as to the operation of Her Majesty's Orders in Council of the 6th January and 25th March, 1862, which had not been made when the collision took place; nor was it disputed that particular rules as to the navigation of the river might, by length of usage, acquire the force of law, even if originally introduced without competent authority. But there had been no such usage when this collision took place.

The Judgment, therefore, of the Privy Council has conclusively settled (contrary to the view which seems to have been taken by the present Lord Chancellor when Attorney-General) that, in making these regulations, the European Commissioners exceeded the powers given to them by the Treaty of Paris; and it has also determined that in order to make any such regulations operative by virtue of the territorial authority of the Local Government, some Legislative Act, of a formal and authentic character, was, and is, requisite, beyond the mere acquiescence of the Porte in the unauthorized acts of its own and the other European Commissioners.

The importance of this determination will be apparent when it is recollected that (according to the opinions given by our predecessors in office, and adopted by Her Majesty's Government in their communications with the Governments of France and Turkey in 1857 and 1859, without objection, apparently from either of those Powers) there was no basis on which any Orders in Council could properly be made by Her Majesty, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, to enforce rules made by the European Commission against British subjects navigating the Danube, except the territorial authority of Turkey within the Danubian Principalities, and the power of the Local Government (which it was assumed would be duly exercised) to give the force of law to those regulations within that part of its territory. It was upon this basis that the Orders in Council of the 6th January and 25th March, 1862, were made, after considerable delay arising out of doubts which were felt as to the sufficiency of the existing Capitulations for that purpose; which doubts were in the end waived, more out of deference to the contrary view taken by France and Austria and acquiesced in by Turkey herself, than because they were removed by any decisive argument.

In the meantime the necessity for some formal Legislative Act, by the territorial authority competent to make laws for the Danube below Isatcha, was unfortunately overlooked: and it seems to have been, on all sides, assumed that no difficulty would or could arise upon that point. The decision, however, in the case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna" shows that this omission, unless remedied, may possibly prove fatal to all these regulations, and may become a fruitful source of confusion, litigation, and injustice. The first step, therefore, which we advise Her Majesty's Government to take is to represent to the Porte the absolute and urgent necessity for such a formal and authentic Legislative Act as may confirm and give (as from the dates at which they were respectively promulgated) the force of local laws to all these regulations, to which end it may be necessary to obtain the concurrence of the proper Moldavian authorities, if, by the Constitution of the Principalities, laws of this nature, for the navigation of the river within their limits, cannot be enacted by the sole authority of the Porte. We think it also desirable that all the Contracting Powers, parties to the Treaty of Paris, should (if possible) be induced to express their assent, by some formal Diplomatic Act, to this mode of provisionally regulating the police and navigation of the Lower Danube, until the proposed Riverain Commission shall be duly constituted, in order that there may be no apparent variance between the means adopted for the establishment of such regulations and the international engagements contained in the Treaty. Should there prove to be any serious difficulties in the way of the course which we have thus recommended, the only alternative which we are able to point out is that the Riverain Commission, contemplated by the Treaty, should be, as soon as possible, constituted and assembled, and that in the meantime the effect of the regulations which have been made and put in force by the European Commission should be left to depend upon such validity as they may have acquired by usage and practice, and also (as far as British subjects are concerned) upon such operation, if any, as the Consular Courts and the Privy Council may consider themselves bound to attribute to the Orders in Council of the 6th January and the 25th March, 1862, and to any supplementary Orders which may be hereafter made.

2. As to Sir Edmund Hornby's despatch of the 9th September, 1864, and the letter of Major Stokes to the "Levant Herald," inclosed therein.

These documents raise the question as to the validity and effect of the Orders in Council of the 6th January and 25th March, 1862, or, rather, the latter of these Orders, without which the effect of the former would probably have been limited to regulations duly made by the European Commission within the scope of the powers given to them by the Treaty of Paris. It was upon the receipt of a despatch from Sir E. Hornby (No. 8, 29th January, 1862), suggesting that such was the proper construction of the Order of the 6th January, 1862; and also mentioning that, in the case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna," the Consular Court at Galatz had held the Regulations of June 1860 to be ultra vires of the Commissioners; that the latter Order was made in order to give the force of law, as against British subjects in the Levant, to "all the rules, orders, and regulations concerning the navigation of the River Danube," &c.; which "had, in fact, been made and promulgated by the Commission," according to the view of their own authority, on which they had until then acted. Major Stokes, in the published letter inclosed by Sir E. Hornby, not only assumes these Orders in Council to be effectual for their intended object, so as to govern all questions arising before British Tribunals subsequently to the 25th March, 1862, under Regulations made before that date by the Commission, but he also represents them as giving the force of law, prospectively, to all such other provisional "Regulations as might from time to time be enacted" by the same authority. In this, however, Major Stokes is clearly mistaken. There are no future or prospective words in the Order of the 25th March, 1862; and it was considered by the Law Officers, when settling the form of that Order, that no such provision could legally or effectually be made beforehand for confirming any future acts which might be done by the Commissioners in excess of their own proper authority.

1864

If, therefore, the sole question were that which Sir E. Hornby in terms puts to your Lordship, viz., "whether the Orders in Council of 1862 are to be held as conferring authority on the Commissioners to give validity to their Regulations, and to render them binding on British vessels," the answer must certainly be in the negative.

It is clear that the Order in Council of the 25th March, 1862, only purports to confirm what had been then already done; and any Regulations made by the Commissioners, in excess of their powers under the Treaty, are validated and rendered binding upon British vessels (if at all), not by any delegation of authority to the Commissioners, but by the direct authority of Her Majesty, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act.

If, however, Sir E. Hornby desires to elicit from Her Majesty's Government any expression of opinion as to "the validity of the two Orders in Council," on which he himself thinks it improper to "venture an extrajudicial opinion," we humbly conceive that it is the duty of Her Majesty's Government to assume the validity and efficacy of these Orders, as against British subjects in the Levant, for the purposes for which they were made, until they shall either be revoked or declared void by some competent judicial authority. In point of construction, the Order of the 25th March, 1862, seems to us clear and unambiguous; the sole question (as we conceive) must be, whether it was or was not within the powers given to Her Majesty by the Foreign Jurisdiction Act. In the event of that question being raised in any British Court of Justice, its decision must depend upon the points adverted to in the several opinions of the former Law Officers, dated respectively the 14th and 18th April, the 28th May, and the 30th June, 1857; the 12th February, the 21st April, and the 20th June, 1859; the 1st February, and the 21st November, 1860; to which we think it sufficient to refer, without ourselves entering further into the consideration of those points than has already been done in our remarks upon the Judgment in the case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna."

The revocation of the Orders in Council of the 6th January and the 25th March, 1862, is a step which we should by no means be prepared to advise (in the absence of any binding decision against their validity), unless there were reason to believe that the Regulations made by the European Commission are now regarded as invalid, or would hereafter be so treated in practice, by the other Powers parties to the Treaty of Paris. All the information, however, which we possess leads us, upon that point, to exactly the opposite conclusion.

3. As to the reply which your Lordship should be advised to give to the letter of the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, dated the 13th September, 1864.

We think it may be proper for your Lordship to state to the Austrian Chargé d'Affaires, that Her Majesty's Government has always been desirous, in co-operation and concert with the Powers parties to the Treaty of Paris, to uphold (as far as Her Majesty is by law enabled to do so) the validity of the Regulations made on the 27th June, 1860, by the European Commission of the Danube, and that, for that purpose, the several Orders in Council of the 6th January and 25th March, 1852, were made. That the case of the "Mars" and "Smyrna" arose out of an accident which had occurred before the dates of those Orders; and that one of the highest tribunals of this realm has now determined, upon the construction of the terms of the Treaty of Paris, that the European Commissioners had not, by virtue of that Treaty, any power to make those regulations, and that it did not appear that they had ever been established by competent authority, as the local law of the territory traversed by the Danube below Isatcha.

That, in these circumstances, it is possible that the legal validity of Her Majesty's Orders in Council of January and March 1862 may be liable to be called in question, and that it seems to Her Majesty's Government to be highly desirable to take proper steps, without further delay, for placing the validity of the Regulations, as the local law of the Danube below Isatcha, upon a footing beyond the reach of future controversy; for which purpose the aid of the Turkish and perhaps of the Moldavian Government may be necessary, and that Her Majesty hopes she may count upon the co-operation of the Emperor of Austria in the requisite measures for accomplishing those objects. At the same time, it may be proper to add that it would be inconsistent with the principles of law which prevail in this country for Her Majesty's Government to take upon themselves to give any orders or directions to the Judges of Her Majesty's Consular Courts in the Levant, as to any legal questions connected with these Regulations which those Judges may hereafter be called upon to decide; and that any such orders or directions, even if they were given, could have no force or effect.

4. As to Major Stokes' despatch of the 3rd September last, calling attention to the effect of the Orders in Council of the 9th January, 1863, upon the two Orders of the 6th January and 25th March, 1862.

Major Stokes is right in his observation that the effect of the repeal of the former Order (27th August, 1860), regulating the Consular jurisdiction in the Levant, by the Order of the 9th January, 1863, is to render certain material portions of the two Orders of January 6 and March 25, 1862, inoperative. The proper remedy for this will be to substitute, by another Order in Council, the procedure under the Order of January 9, 1863, instead of that under the revoked Order of August 27, 1860, for the purposes mentioned in the two Orders of the 6th January and 25th March, 1862. It will, however, be for your Lordship to determine whether this shall at once be done, or whether it had better be postponed until the Regulations made by the European Commission of the Danube have been clearly established as law in the territory below Isatcha by the legislative authority competent for that purpose, in which event a general revision and amendment of these Orders may be desirable.

5. As to Major Stokes' despatch of the 1st September last, inclosing copies of Protocol 165 of the European Commission, with the project of a system of Procedure annexed thereto.

The object of the system of procedure contained in the Annex to this Protocol is to provide a simple and summary method of enforcing the Regulations of the European Commission with respect to the police and navigation of the Danube.

If the proposed system of procedure were agreed to by the European Powers, it would require a distinct legislative Act by the authority capable of legislating for the territory traversed by the Danube below Isatcha, in order to give it validity and effect; and if it had been in itself unobjectionable, we should have regarded with satisfaction so convenient and favourable an opportunity for obtaining from that authority a legislative recognition of the validity, as local law, of all the Regulations heretofore made by the European Commission.

Major Stokes, however, has very properly reserved this project for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government before finally giving his own assent to it as Her Majesty's Commissioner, on account of its containing certain provisions at variance with the principles on which justice is usually administered in Great Britain and other civilized countries.

By the most important of those provisions it is proposed in substance to enact, (1), that persons accused of offences against the Danubian Regulations shall not be at liberty to controvert the truth of any evidence given against them by officers of the river police (some of whom may, at the same time, act as their judges), without depositing a sum of about 50*l.*, to be forfeited unless the falsehood of the accusation is afterwards successfully shown; and, (2), that the crews of any vessels whose captains may be accused by the river police of infringing the regulations shall not be competent witnesses to disprove such accusations.

We regard these provisions as so plainly and irreconcileably opposed to every principle of reason and justice as to make it absolutely necessary for your Lordship to instruct Major Stokes to withhold his consent, as Her Majesty's Commissioner, from this or any other project of which the same or any similar provisions may form part.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 178.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 29.)

Doctors' Commons, October 28, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 54), respecting the refusal of Her Majesty's Consul at Trebizond to quit the house which he rented from the Apostolic Mission at that place; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these papers lead me to the same conclusion as that at which Sir E. Hornby has arrived.

It is admitted by Mr. Consul Stevens that the written contract under which he had obtained a lease of the house in question from the Apostolic Mission at Trebizond had expired on the 1st of May, 1863. After this period he still continued to reside in the house, but upon what terms is a matter of dispute between him and his landlord, and it is impossible not to agree with the opinion of M. Schefer to M. Bonnières (No. 2 in Mr. Stuart's No. 54 of October 12, 1864), that the absence of any writing upon this point is much to be regretted. The fact appears to be, that though no new lease was signed between the parties, Mr. Stevens was allowed to continue his occupation of the house up to the 30th April, 1864. But it seems hardly necessary to inquire whether the correct version be given by Mr. Stevens or by the Head Friar, Father Philip, as to the terms on which this prolonged occupation was permitted, for it is not denied that, both towards the end of March and the beginning of April 1864 Mr. Stevens received formal notice from Father Philip that he might stay in the house, upon certain terms, till the 1st of October following, but that then he must positively quit it. From the date of this notice Mr. Stevens certainly appears to me to have conducted himself in a manner which is much to be lamented. He must have been aware that he had no legal or moral ground for refusing to leave the house after the expiration of the six months' notice.

He says, I have no doubt with perfect truth, that his principal reason for refusing to go out on the 31st of October was, that "he could not obtain another house in so limited a time, suitable to the wants of his numerous family, the winter being near."*

Accordingly he determines to prolong his possession by a law suit before a Turkish Tribunal. The French Consul, however, considers, and it appears to me, as it did to Sir E. Hornby, justly, that this is a matter over which he has jurisdiction, although, possibly, it may be, owing to the cause of the dispute being the possession of a house, a concurrent jurisdiction with that of the Turkish Tribunal.

In truth, however, no tribunal which paid any regard to justice could (it appears to me) come to any other conclusion than that it was competent to the proprietor of the house, in the circumstances, to give his tenant, whose original lease had expired, notice to leave the house after the period of six months had elapsed from the time when the notice was given.

On the whole, I am of opinion that Mr. Consul Stevens should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government agree with the view which Mr. Stuart and Sir E. Hornby have taken of this matter, and expect that Mr. Stevens will cease to occupy the house of the Apostolic Mission at Trebizond contrary to the wishes of the proprietor.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 179.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers respecting an export duty of 5 per cent. recently re-imposed by Prince Couza on certain productions of the Danubian Principalities; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the right of Prince Couza to impose this permanent export duty.

---

* Mr. Stevens to Sir H. Bulwer, September 23, 1864 (Inclosure 11).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the real question seems to be whether this re-established duty of 5 per cent. be or be not of a permanent character; because if it be, we are clearly of opinion that its imposition is a plain violation of the IVth Article of the Treaty of Kanlidja, the provisions of which are, we presume, undoubtedly made binding upon the United Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia by the XXth Article of that Treaty. We have carefully examined the decree of Prince Couza, and it appears to us that this instrument must be taken as imposing a permanent duty of 5 per cent. ad valorem upon the export of the articles referred to in its clauses; and we are of opinion that Prince Couza had not the right to impose this permanent export duty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 180.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 13) respecting the course pursued by the Turkish Government in conceding to the trade of Austria certain privileges on the frontier provinces which are not conceded to British trade; and to request that we would take the same, together with the former papers, which were therewith annexed, into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the answer of His Highness Aali Pasha does not meet the grounds of objection stated by Sir H. Bulwer to the exclusive commercial privileges granted to Austria in the frontier provinces, especially Bosnia and the Herzegovine.

The answer admits that these privileges constitute an exception to the general principle of duties between the Porte and the foreign Powers, but seeks to justify the exception on the ground of a peculiar custom and the peculiar relations and conditions of these border provinces.

We do not think that these circumstances justify the Porte in introducing an exception in favour of Austria, whereby goods can be introduced to and from those provinces upon more favourable terms by the subjects of that country than by the subjects of Great Britain; and we are of opinion that the construction put by Sir H. Bulwer upon the Treaty engagements of the Porte in this matter is correct.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 181.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying drafts which had been drawn up in accordance with our Report of the 10th October upon the questions therein referred to, respecting the regulations issued by the European Commission of the Danube for the navigation of that river; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might wish to offer thereupon.

1864

Mr. Layard was also to inform us, with reference to that part of our Report which confirms the view taken by Major Stokes of the effect of the Order in Council of the 9th of January, 1863, upon the two Orders of the 6th of January and 25th of March, 1862, that your Lordship was of opinion that, as there may be a long delay in carrying out the proposals alluded to in the accompanying drafts, it would be advisable that a new Order in Council should at once be issued to clear up the discrepancies at present existing, and that he was accordingly to request that we would be good enough to prepare such draft Order in Council.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the drafts which accompany the letter of Mr. Layard, and it does not occur to us to make any observations thereupon, in addition to those which we have had the honour to offer on the subject in our former Report; and that we have drawn the draft of a new Order in Council, which will have the effect of remedying the evil complained of by Major Stokes in his letter of the 3rd September, 1864, consequent on the repeal of the Order in Council of the 27th August, 1860. We presume that this Order will be made at the same Council with the proposed new General Order as to Consular jurisdiction in the Levant, on which we have recently advised in conjunction with Mr. Reilly, and we have prepared it accordingly.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 182.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 79), inclosing an extract of an instruction which his Prussian colleague had addressed to the Prussian Consul-General at Bucharest resspecting a circular (of which a copy was annexed) which had been issued by the Moldo-Wallachian authorities with regard to the expulsion of foreigners from the Principalities; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we consider Her Majesty's Government should give to the British Representatives in the Principalities instructions similar to those addressed to the Prussian Consul-General at Bucharest.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should issue to the British Representatives in the Principalities instructions similar to those addressed by Baron Steffens to the Prussian Consul-General at Bucharest. We observe that the despatch of Baron Steffens appears to interpret the circular of the Moldo-Wallachian Government as contemplating the "extradition" of persons accused of political offences in the Principalities upon the demand of foreign Powers. We do not so understand it: it seems to us merely to give notice that foreigners who have been, or may be, engaged in political intrigues against the internal peace of the Principalities, or in violation of their neutrality towards foreign Powers, will be liable to be ordered to leave that country, and that this will be done with all due regard to international obligations.

We think that it would be better for Her Majesty's Government not to assume that anything will be done under this circular in derogation of the rights secured by Treaty to Her Majesty's subjects. If any individual case should arise in which, under colour of this circular, wrong is done to any British subject, it will then be proper for Her Majesty's Government to interfere. An examination of the circumstances of each case will show whether the Capitulations have been violated or not, and whether the action of the local Government has been legitimate or not with respect to the expulsion of any British subject. But it would be difficult to deny generally, and à priori, the right of the Moldo-Wallachian Government to expel from its territory foreigners who may have been guilty of abusing its hospitality in the manner described (upon the face of it) by this circular; and we do not think that any renunciation of that right can be found in the Capitulations and Treaties between the Porte and Great Britain.

We have, &c
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 183.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith a despatch from Sir E. Hornby (No. 67), raising a question with respect to probate duty, as to whether an interest in land in Turkey, where no foreigner can hold land, is to be considered in the nature of personalty or of real estate; and to request that we would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the point in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a foreigner being, by the Turkish law, incapable of holding land in Turkey, any interest which he has practically therein exists by sufferance, and upon the terms (as we collect) of having it compulsorily turned into money by sale after his death. We presume that, under these circumstances, the former Law Officers, in March 1861, considered the situation of such property to be most analogous to that of real estate in England, held under a title by which it is made subject to an absolute trust for sale, or (as the phrase is) "converted," in equity, into personal estate. The proceeds of real estate, so situated in England, are distributable as personal estate, but the property itself does not vest in executors or administrators by virtue of any probate or letters of administration. Nor is such property, or the produce of the sale thereof (unless already sold, or contracted to be sold, in the lifetime of the testator or intestate), chargeable with any probate or administration duty (Custance v. Bradshaw, 4 Hare, 315; Matson v. Swift, 8 Beavan, 368; Attorney-General v. Bruming, 8 House of Lords, 260).

Following this analogy, and not dissenting from the view of our predecessors, we are of opinion that the fees imposed by the Levant Orders in Council, in lieu of probate duties, &c., are not payable in respect of the interest of a British subject in Turkish real estate.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 184.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 112), respecting a question which had arisen at Bagdad as to the right of English and American missionaries to claim the same privileges as are accorded to Roman Catholic religious establishments with respect to the payment of Custom duties; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That before we express an opinion upon this subject we should desire to be furnished with the precise statement of the reasons upon which the Customs Master at Bagdad founded his decision that the English and American Church Missions were on a different footing from the Roman Catholic establishments with respect to the payment of Custom duties; and also with a reference to the express words of any Treaty or Convention by which Roman Catholic establishments are so exempted.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

United States.

No. 185.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers,* respecting the case of the "Pacifique," a British schooner belonging to Quebec, which was captured in March last off the coast of Florida by the United States' cruizer "Stars and Stripes" and taken into Key West, where she was released by the Prize Court.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that application has been made to Lord Lyons to present to the United States' Government a claim on behalf of the owners of the "Pacifique," and the consignees of her cargo, on account of losses sustained by the capture and detention: but that his Lordship had not thought it right to make an application to the United States' Government without previously submitting the case to Her Majesty's Government. And that he (Mr. Hammond) was directed by your Lordship accordingly to request that we would take the case of the "Pacifique" into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that in this case no demand ought to be made by Lord Lyons upon the United States' Government for any indemnity. The English Prize Court would have decreed, in similar circumstances, that there was a probable cause of capture, and that the expenses incident to the capture must be defrayed by the vessel. It was the duty of the owners, if dissatisfied, to have appealed to the superior Court; and if (as we recollect) they were satisfied that they had no case for asking damages from the Prize Court, Her Majesty's Government can have no case for seeking an indemnity from the Government of the United States. Upon both grounds we think that Lord Lyons exercised a wise discretion in refusing to make any application to the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Consul Archibald, No. 85, April 28; No. 95; Lord Lyons, No. 850, November 27.

No. 186.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of December, 1863, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, with its inclosures, from Lord Lyons (No. 859, December 7) in which he requested further instructions with reference to the case of British subjects, prisoners of war to the United States, who assert that at the time of their capture they were serving by compulsion in the so-called Confederate army.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us the previous correspondence,* and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and in reference to the Queen's Proclamation favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's note of the 1st January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers† respecting the case of Joseph Taylor, a prisoner of war to the United States; and to request that they might be considered, together with those which were sent to us on the 30th ultimo, relative to the case of other British subjects who have been taken in battle by the United States' forces.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the course which Lord Lyons has pursued, and intends to pursue, in this difficult matter is very expedient and proper.

The application for release, even in special cases, where the fact of serving in the enemy's army is undeniable, cannot be put upon the ground of strict right, and the habit of indiscriminately making such application would, if adopted, have the effect which Lord Lyons points out, of weakening the effect of any well-founded application in the case of a particular individual.

With respect to the concession which the United States' authorities are willing to grant to British subjects who will take the oath of allegiance to the Government of the United States, we think that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington cannot give any encouragement or countenance to such a mode of solving the difficulty. But if (as appears possible) a like concession should be made in favour of British subjects who may be willing to take an oath of neutrality during the pending civil contest, we see no objection to this mode of obtaining their release from imprisonment. It would also seem to us very proper that Lord Lyons should exert his influence, as far as he may find opportunity, in favour of the petitions of those British prisoners who desire not to be exchanged, but to be detained as prisoners at New York.

With respect to the case of Joseph Taylor, we think that the observations of Lord Lyons are perfectly just and conclusive.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 186*.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 880, December 15), respecting the case of a British subject named Kennedy, who formerly held a commission in the Confederate service, and who was arrested by the United States' authorities in July last.

And to request that we would take Mr. Kennedy's case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon; but Mr. Hammond was directed by your

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 296, May 5; to Lord Lyons, No. 229, May 22; Lord Lyons, No. 425, June 12; Mr. Stuart, No. 46, July 6; No. 59, July 13; to Mr. Stuart, No. 43, July 31, 1863.

† India Office, November 18; to Lord Lyons, No. 586; Lord Lyons, No 860.

1864

Lordship to add that, in your Lordship's opinion, Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have the honour to agree with your Lordship that this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 187.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 14th October ultimo, from William Thompson, stating that he is a British subject, and that he is at present confined at Hilton Head on a charge of using treasonable language against the Government of the United States. And that he was directed by your Lordship also to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 861, December 7, 1863) reporting upon this case, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consderation, and have the honour to report—

That it should be clearly represented to the United States' Government that Her Majesty's Government can never admit it to be lawful to imprison a British subject for attempting to run a blockade. This is not the penalty which international law attaches to the offence, and it is a question of international law alone. If, however, Thompson either be an American subject, or, being a British subject, has enlisted in the Confederate or Federal service, there is no ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government.

It does not appear why Mr. Seward did not signify to the authorities at St. Augustine that Thompson had been released (which must have been the case) from Fort Lafayette, on evidence of his being a British subject.

In the present state of circumstances, however, it will be the best course to wait the result of the trial, which is represented to be near at hand. At the same time, Lord Lyons should be prepared to contend for Thompson's release if he should be proved to be a British subject and at the time of his seizure to have been engaged in no offence against the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 188.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 214), inclosing copies of the judicial proceedings in the cases of the "St. George," "Anglia," "Scotia," and "Emma;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That all these vessels and their cargoes appear from the evidence to have been rightfully condemned as prizes of war for violating the blockade established by the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 189.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with papers bearing upon similar cases,* a letter from Messrs. Bennett and Wake,† respecting the seizure of the British barque "Science" by a Federal cruizer at Matamoros.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive by the papers inclosed that your Lordship has called upon Lord Lyons for a report on the cases of the "Volant" and Dashing Wave, but as cases of the same kind appear to be frequent, your Lordship takes the opportunity of the further representation just received respecting the "Science," to ask our opinion as to the facts as they appear in these papers, and as to any general instructions which might be given to Lord Lyons applicable to such cases.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 31st ultimo, respecting the cases of the British vessels "Volant," "Dashing Wave," and "Science," captured by Federal cruizers at Matamoros, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, a letter dated 5th instant, and its inclosures from Messrs. F. de Lizardi and Co. respecting a quantity of specie shipped by them on board the "Dashing Wave," and to request that we would take the Messrs. Lizardi and Co.'s letter into our consideration, together with the papers respecting this case already before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion therefrom.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we presume that the "Science" was not seized in Mexican waters. But even on this assumption she appears, on the present papers, to have been most unjustifiably and illegally seized. According to these papers her imputed offence was having, or having had, contraband on board; but the obvious answer is, first, that cotton, of which her return cargo was composed, is not contraband, and that the cargo with which she arrived at Matamoros (of whatever articles composed) had been, before her seizure, actually and bonâ fide delivered in Matamoros (a neutral port) to Mexican consignees. Secondly, that if her trade was bonâ fide between Great Britain and Matamoros only, she would not be guilty of carrying contraband.

We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to make an explicit and immediate remonstrance in this case, and in all cases exactly similar, to the United States' Government; for though the "Science" and other ships mentioned in these papers will probably not be withdrawn from the Prize Court, the ships ought, if the present story be in every respect true (a proviso which experience teaches us to be very necessary), to be restored with full damages, and a remonstrance now may aid this result.

With regard to the 12,000*l.* specie shipped by Messrs. Lizardi and Co. on board the "Dashing Wave," we think that those gentlemen should be told that their proper course is to appear in the Prize Court as claimants of that part of the cargo, which, if their statement is correct, ought to be restored to them; but if it should appear that the capture of the ship was justifiable, Messrs. de Lizardi and Co. will not be entitled to any damages.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Gallichan and Co., December 17, 1863; Messrs. Bateson and Robinson, December 18; Messrs. Bischoff and Sons, December 18; to Messrs. Bischoff and Sons, December 26; to Lord Lyons, No. 639.

† Messrs. Bennett and Wake, December 30, 1863.

1864

No. 190.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 21st ultimo from Mr. Joseph Hansard, a British subject, who states that he has resided for twenty-five years in the Southern States of America, and at the date of his letter was about to return thither, calling attention to that part of President Lincoln's Message which classes with belligerents, on whose behalf their Government cannot expect any privileges or immunities distinct from that character, foreigners residing within the lines of the insurgents; and Mr. Hansard asks whether he will not be protected in all his rights as a British subject in the lawful prosecution of his business; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Hansard's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Hansard's letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the answer to Mr. Hansard should be to the effect, that he must be aware that voluntarily to resort to a country in which a civil war of the most exasperated kind is raging is to place himself in a position of danger, from the possible consequences of which he cannot expect that Her Majesty's Government should guarantee him.

If by long residence and purchase of landed property he has, as would appear to be the case, so far incorporated himself with Georgia as to have made that State his home, and to have established himself there for all practical purposes, he can hardly complain of the law which allows the belligerent to treat him like any other permanent inhabitant of that country. At all events, he must understand that if he takes this step he will do it on his own responsibility; and he must not take it on the supposition that Her Majesty's Government will hold themselves bound to interfere, at the risk of embroiling this country in war, on his behalf, or on that of any other natural-born subject of Her Majesty who may desire to obtain, practically, the advantages of two distinct nationalities, and who may wilfully incur the peril of being treated as an enemy by residence in a foreign country divided by civil war.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 191.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 15.)

Doctors' Commons, January 14, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 4th instant from the Admiralty, inclosing copies of a letter from Vice-Admiral Milne, with other papers, on the subject of the repair at Bermuda of certain vessels employed in running the blockade of the ports of the so-called Confederate States; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is certainly no part of the duty of a neutral Government, according to the existing usage and practice of international law, to inquire into the destination of merchant-vessels belonging to its country, or to aid by any domestic regulations, directly or indirectly, the maintenance of the belligerent's blockade, which he, and he alone, is bound to make effectual. His right to capture the neutral vessel which attempts to break the blockade, or to seize contraband merchandize on board of her, is not attended by any correlative obligation on the part of the State to which the vessel belongs to take any active steps in support of this right. The neutral State cannot lawfully complain if the vessel or the merchandize be thus captured or thus seized by the belligerent cruizer; but with this passive acquiescence, so to speak, in the act of the belligerent, the strict obligations of neutrality in this matter, so far as the State is concerned, are satisfied. I do not, therefore, think that the United States' Government would be legally warranted in preferring a formal complaint against Her Majesty's Government for allowing, among other British vessels, some to be repaired in Government dockyards which were, without the privity or consent of the Government, employed in breaking the blockade. In other words, the belligerent Government would have no legal right to call upon the neutral Government to exclude from the general privilege of repair in the dockyards (of which too its own vessels, in this instance, partakes) a particular class of British vessels, which they alleged to be, or which were commonly reported to be, what are called blockade runners. It is of course competent to Her Majesty's Government, or to the Admiral representing Her Majesty's Government, to make a regulation excluding certain vessels from this privilege; and, regard being had to the particular circumstances of this war and to the position and peculiar character of the Bermuda Islands, the exclusion of particular vessels, which after having been repaired in these docks have proceeded to break the blockade, may be, probably is, a justifiable and prudent measure, though this is a power which ought, I think to be sparingly exercised; but it certainly seems to me that the exaction, from all vessels seeking repair, of a bond that they "shall not be engaged within three months, directly or indirectly, in the business of breaking the blockade," is, independently of the difficulty and extreme inconvenience to the Government incident to a proceeding for the enforcement of penalties for the breach of such bond, open to the general objection of being far too strong a measure for a State, desirous of maintaining a strict neutrality, to adopt; a step approaching too closely the act of assisting one belligerent to maintain against another his blockade, which, it must always be remembered, the belligerent is bound by law to render sufficient for its purpose by his own means at the place where it is instituted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 192.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 15.)

Doctors' Commons, January 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th January instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a letter dated the 5th instant, with its inclosures, from Mr. James Crutchett, requesting the interference of Her Majesty's Government to procure compensation for his property in Washington, which he states has been appropriated by the United States' Government for military purposes; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that it appears from the whole correspondence, and especially the letter of Lord Lyons (dated 23rd April, 1863), that Mr. Crutchett has already obtained from Her Majesty's Representative at Washington all the assistance which he could reasonably expect, and more than, as a matter of strict right, he was entitled to. Mr. Crutchett is a British subject, but is also a domiciled citizen of the United States in the strongest sense of the term. He was married and settled himself in Washington, and the claim in question relates to the manner in which real property (or property partaking closely of that character) has, in a great emergency, been dealt with by the United States' Government. It is clear that Her Majesty's Government cannot officially interfere in cases of this description. Mr. Crutchett must have recourse to the same remedies as any other citizen of the United States, with whom, so far as this property is concerned, he must be considered as on an equal footing. Though the question has assumed a very complicated form, he certainly appears to have been ill treated, and it is a matter of satisfaction that he has obtained the good offices of Lord Lyons, which have produced the result stated in his Lordship's letter of 23rd April, 1863. I cannot advise your Lordship that any further intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government would be expedient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 193.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures, from Lord Lyons, respecting the case of the "Chesapeake" (No. 876, December 11th, and No. 886, December 15th), an American steamer plying between New York and Portland, which was seized and taken into a British North American port by a party of men who embarked in her as passengers at New York; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether the transaction is one in regard to which the British Government could interfere to seize the vessel and hand over the parties to be tried in the United states.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's several letters dated respectively the 7th, 8th (three letters), and 9th instant, transmitting to us the further papers marked in the margin,* relating to this matter, for our consideration.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Government might properly have interfered to seize the "Chesapeake," and to deliver her up to the Government of the United States. There could be no doubt on this point, unless she were to be regarded as a lawful prize of war, not abandoned by her captors. But even if she were so regarded, she was brought into British waters in contravention of Her Majesty's orders (which forbid either belligerent to bring any prize within British jurisdiction), for the manifest purpose of avoiding recapture; and her captors, while she was there, disposed of the greater part of her valuable cargo.

This was such an invasion of the territorial rights of Her Majesty, and such a disregard of Her Majesty's orders, made for the preservation of her neutrality, as (having regard to the very peculiar circumstances of the case) would, in our opinion, fully warrant Her Majesty in availing herself of her territorial sovereignty to restore the ship to its original owners, without going through the forms of any proceeding in the Vice-Admiralty Court of Nova Scotia; and, indeed, we think, that, in taking this case into the Vice-Admiralty Court (unless this has been done at the instance of any claimant), the Colonial Government may, perhaps, have acted without adequate consideration of the effect of Her Majesty's orders against bringing prizes into British ports; and that some embarrassment may possibly arise if the question of prize or no prize should be entertained and adjudicated upon by that tribunal.

With respect to the delivery up of the captors for trial in the United States, this would clearly be proper, under the Xth Article of the Ashburton Treaty, of the 9th of August, 1842 (6 Hertslet, pp. 859, 860), and the Imperial statute 6th and 7th Vict., cap. 76, if, in taking the proceedings required by the statute before any Justice of the Peace or other person having power to commit for trial persons accused of crimes against the laws of Nova Scotia, such evidence should be given upon oath as, according to the law of Nova Scotia, would justify the apprehension and committal for trial of the persons accused, upon a charge of piracy or of murder, if the acts alleged in support of the charge had been there committed; but not otherwise.

The question, therefore, whether the capture of the "Chesapeake" was an act of war or of piracy (on which the further question, whether murder was committed or not, also depends), must be considered, in the ordinary course of law, by the Magistrate in Nova Scotia before whom the charge, with a view to extradition, may be made. It must be remembered that, if a case for extradition should be holden by the Magistrate to have been made out by the evidence before him, the statute, though it empowers, does not peremptorily require, the Governor to deliver up the person accused; so that a doubtful case might still, if necessary, be reserved for consideration by Her Majesty's Government; but without the authority of the Magistrate no extradition can take place. Warrants for the arrest of the persons appear to have been, in fact, granted, upon the demand of the United States' Government, by the proper Nova Scotian authorities, and, we think, rightly; because the seizure of a United States' merchant-vessel, and the homicide of one of her officers, by persons who came on board her as ordinary passengers at New York, is primâ facie piracy and murder. But we find it stated in some of the papers (see particularly the telegram No. 9, in Inclosure 2 of the letter from the Colonial Office, dated 7th January, 1864), that Lieutenant Braine, who commanded the capturing party, represented himself to be a Confederate officer, and professed to have acted in this transaction, not only under a commission, or letters of marque, from Mr. Jefferson Davis, but also under express instructions from the Confederate Government, to capture this particular steamer.

Should these representations prove to be correct, we apprehend that the acts in question would not properly be within the category of piracy or murder, but ought rather to be deemed by neutral nations to be acts of war; however unjustifiable the stratagem resorted to to obtain possession of the "Chesapeake" may be considered to be. And if the correctness of this view of the facts should be established by evidence, we think the British Government could not properly interfere to hand over these parties to be tried by the United States.

The only other matters appearing in these papers which require notice from us, are the proceedings of the United States' ships "Ella and Annie" and "Dacota" within British waters, the proceedings thereon of the Nova Scotia Government, and the circumstances under which the man Wade effected his escape from Halifax.

Nothing can be more manifest than that a wilful and flagrant violation of Her Majesty's territory was committed by the officers of the United States' ship "Ella and Annie," and that the facts were deliberately misrepresented by the Commander of the "Dacota" to the Government at Halifax, while professing to show respect to Her Majesty's territorial rights. But as the United States' Government have not attempted to justify these acts, or to take any advantage of them, but have, on the contrary, expressed their readiness and desire to make all proper and suitable reparation for them, it does not seem necessary for us to dwell further on that subject.

The conduct of Major-General Doyle, under these circumstances, seems to us to have been altogether becoming and proper, and to have adequately vindicated the honour and dignity of Her Majesty's Crown, without neglecting anything which, under the terms of the Ashburton Treaty, might still reasonably be due (notwithstanding the offence committed), to the United States' Government.

It may, perhaps, be regretted that more effectual precautions were not taken to prevent the escape from justice of any of the persons landed from the "Dacota's" boat, for whose arrest warrants had been issued; but it cannot be imputed to the Colonial Government as a fault, that they did not foresee or guard against a proceeding so extraordinary as that which actually took place.

The escape of Wade, by the assistance of certain of the bystanders (however illegal and censurable the conduct of those who abetted it may be), cannot justly be made the foundation of any international complaint by the United States' Government. There is not the slightest reason to suppose that it was connived at by any of the Colonial authorities; and when the facts are borne in mind that Wade had, up to the moment of his being put on shore, been kept under restraint by means absolutely unlawful and derogatory to Her Majesty's territorial rights—(handcuffs, as we understand, were only at that instant removed from his hands), and that it was, therefore, necessary to give him some interval (however short) of liberty, before the civil process of arrest could properly be executed, it is impossible not to see that the lawless steps taken for his escape, and the success which attended them, were, in a very great degree, the consequences of the equally lawless acts previously committed by the naval officers of the United States.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since writing the above, we have received Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, inclosing the printed papers relating to the ship "Orwell." We do not, however, think that the case of the ship "Orwell" furnishes any rule for that of the "Chesapeake."

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 903, December 21; Inclosures 2 and 13 in Lord Lyons' No. 903; Mr. A. Stewart, December 24, 1863; Colonial Office, January 7; Admiralty, January 6, 1864; Lord Lyons, No. 913, December 24, 1863.

1864

No. 194.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter dated the 22nd December ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Board of Admiralty relative to the proceedings of the United States' ship "Vanderbilt" at the Cape of Good Hope, and the seizure by that ship of the Colonial vessel "Saxon" at Angra Pequena; and Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter dated the 24th December from the Colonial Office on this subject, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, inclosing to us a letter from Messrs.Hamilton and Co. dated the 4th January and also with his further letter dated the 9th instant, transmitting to us a despatch, with its inclosures, from the British Consul at New York (No. 218), reporting the arrival at that place of the "Saxon" in charge of a prize-crew.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the circumstances of this case may possible raise a question of considerable difficulty and novelty.

We should, therefore, desire to wait for a fuller and further communication of all the facts before we tender any final advice to your Lordship.

We should desire, particularly, to know when and by what means, and for what consideration, or under what arrangements, the "Saxon" became interested or concerned in the shipment or carriage of the wool taken by the "Alabama" in the "Sea Bride" which had been deposited at Angra Pequena; and whether the coals stated to have been seized by the "Vanderbilt" were at the time of seizure on shipboard or on land; and whether they were being conveyed, or had been deposited in the place where they were found, by the "Saxon" for any purpose connected with the supply of the "Alabama."

In the meantime it may not be improper to instruct Lord Lyons to bring under the notice of the United States' Government the apparently extraordinary circumstances of this capture, at so great a distance from American waters, of a British Colonial vessel, certainly not exposed to the suspicion of contemplating any breach of blockade, nor (so far as appears) of carrying contraband of war to the enemies of the United States; and to request the United States' Government either to direct the immediate release of the "Saxon," with proper compensation to her owners, or at least to explain the grounds on which her seizure and detention are supposed to be justified.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 195.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received January 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, January , 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th of last July, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a despatch from Lord Lyons † inclosing the answer returned by the United States' Government to the representation which, in conformity with the advice contained in our Report, was addressed to that Government respecting the case of Mr. Hardcastle, the British subject who was shot by a sentry in the Old Capitol Prison at Washington. And to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regret to state, that, in our opinion, the explanation offered by the United States' Government for this unhappy act of their officer, causing the death of an innocent British subject, is in every respect extremely unsatisfactory, and calls for a strong remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government. It appears to us clear that, according to all the well-known rules of civilized warfare, Hardcastle was unlawfully imprisoned; and for the consequences, whether accidental or not, which ensued upon this unlawful imprisonment, those who ordered it must be considered responsible. It is admitted that Hardcastle arrived within the territory of the United States, and within the Federal lines, under a flag of truce, and with a safe-conduct pass from the military authorities; and we are wholly at a loss to understand the interpretation which (we believe for the first time) is sought to be put upon such an instrument by the United States' Government. It is impossible to consult the writings of any accredited jurist without seeing that such instruments are holden sacred by all States, and that a safe-conduct is always defined as a privilege which ensures safety to those who hold it, while passing or being within the place permitted by the instrument (see Vattel, l. 3, c. 17); and it is manifest that the effect of such an instrument is altogether rendered null and void by the pretence that the party holding it may be detained as a prisoner, precisely in the same manner as if it had not been granted to him. Such an interpretation, in fact, makes what is called an instrument of safe-conduct a mere snare to the unfortunate person who has been deceived into placing faith in it, and is wholly contrary to the usage and practice of all civilized States, as well as to the common notions of justice and good faith. We turn from this subject to the facts, such as they are now alleged, in justification on the part of the United States' Government. In the first place, it is to be observed that none of the acts alleged in justification could by possibility have caused the imprisonment, inasmuch as they rest upon no evidence but the statement of the jailor (whom the dead man cannot contradict) of Hardcastle's conversation with him after he was imprisoned. We literally can find no evidence of any other kind throughout these papers, from which the faintest trace of guilty or improper conduct on Hardcastle's part can be inferred. Lastly, it is not a little remarkable that the allegation now made, that Hardcastle as well as Pleasanton put his head over the screen when he was shot by the sentinel, was not brought forward in the first instance (see letter of General Martindale to Mr. Stanton, June 15, 1863, Inclosure 19 in No. 572; and letter of Captain Mix to General Martindale, May 25, Inclosure 20 in No. 572). It was then represented that Pleasanton's head was above the screen, but not that Hardcastle's head was also in the same position; and it is hardly possible to conceive (regard being had to the gravity of the matter) that such a fact, if really true, should not have appeared as the result of the first inquiry.

In conclusion, we can only repeat our opinion that the case seems to require a very strong protest on the part of Her Majesty's Government. It may, perhaps, be a matter for consideration whether any reparation in the shape of a pecuniary payment should be required for the family of the deceased person. We do not, however, understand that any such reparation has, as yet, been asked for by the parties interested, who have been in communication with Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.

ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 196.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 31st October last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence which has since passed respecting the case of the "Labuan,"* including the notes which have been exchanged between Lord Lyons and Mr. Seward relative to the course pursued by the United States' District Attorney in sending to Matamoros for additional evidence; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 572; to Lord Lyons, No. 434; Lord Lyons, No. 724; Mr. Stuart, No. 5.
† Lord Lyons, No. 820, November 17, 1863.

* To Lord Lyons, No. 572, November 7; Lord Lyons, No. 784, November 3; Messrs. Lefevre and Co., November 16; to Messrs. Lefevre and Co., November 20, 1863.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is not easy to understand the exact meaning of Mr. Seward's letter (25th November) to Lord Lyons; but that it does not appear to us by any means satisfactory. An injury has been inflicted upon one of Her Majesty's subjects by the unlawful act of a ship commissioned by the United States' Government. Redress, taking the form of damages, is due for this injury.

The circumstances of the particular case, as appearing by the evidence on which the captured vessel was released, afford no possible excuse for the capture; unless, indeed, every illegal capture is to be excused by the mere suggestion that the officer making it may have possibly misconceived the law and his duty. The other information communicated at the time of the capture, and afterwards to Her Majesty's Government, and by their orders to the Government of the United States (to which no answer has ever been given). tends only to give a still more aggravated character to the wrong.

Her Majesty's Government are not, strictly speaking, in any way concerned with the manner or mode in which the money necessary to pay the just amount of damages is in such a case to be provided; and although they would of course wait for a reasonable period until the Appropriation Act referred to by Mr. Seward could be passed, according to the forms of the United States' Constitution, nevertheless they are entitled to express their deep regret and dissatisfaction at the unusual, and probably unprecedented, course which has been pursued by the United States' Government in this matter; a course different from that which has been pursued in other cases depending upon the same principles, towards other European Governments, and which, if persevered in, would appear to hold out little prospect of just satisfaction being made in the manner to be expected from a friendly nation, for any wrong which Her Majesty's subjects may sustain by reason of any of the belligerent operations of the United States.

It may be proper again to remind the United States' Government that Her Majesty's Government have from the very first considered, and have endeavoured to impress upon, the United States' Government, that the question of damages in this case, having regard to all its circumstances, was one which ought to have been settled immediately between the two Governments, without any reference to the Prize Court at all.

They acquiesced, not without remonstrance, in the original desire of the United States' Government to be fortified in their own primâ facie conclusion that the capture was illegal by the decision of their Prize Court. That decision having been pronounced, and having finally and conclusively established the illegality, the United States' Government, instead of at once ascertaining by the means usual between Governments the proper amount of compensation, again desired to use, for that purpose also, the machinery of the same Prize Court. Against this new source of expense and delay, Her Majesty's Government again remonstrated; and it now appears that the only result of that proposal has been to postpone any progress towards the settlement of this matter for more than eight months, while attempts have been said to be making to obtain from Matamoros new and ex parte evidence in explanation of the grounds or circumstances of the capture, of a nature not at all calculated to affect the question of the amount of damage sustained, and which neither is now, nor can regularly be brought, before the Prize Court. In the meantime, one of the United States' Circuit Judges (Judge Nelson) has decided upon an appeal in another cause (the case of the "Empress"), that the Prize Court has no jurisdiction or power to award any damages at all against the United States' Government, nor even against the captors, in any case whatever in which a capture has been illegally made by a public ship of war of the United States; but that, in all such cases, the question of damages must be determined, extra-judicially, between Government and Government.

The position, therefore, as to damages, for which Her Majesty's Government have throughout contended in this case, has been solemnly and deliberately affirmed by a judicial authority of the United States, higher than that of the Court which released the "Labuan," and before which it has been proposed to take further proceedings upon this subject; and it is manifest that, even if, at the express instance and request of the District Attorney of the United States, the Prize Court could be induced to enter into the question of damages at all, it would do so, not in the exercise of its proper jurisdiction, but in the way only of extra-judicial arbitration. The British claimant has not by law the right, and cannot therefore be under the obligation, to seek for redress by any such method; and Her Majesty's Government cannot reasonably be expected to acquiesce in the substitution of this new and anomalous kind of one-sided arbitration, for that generally in use, when a question of mere amount is in difference between two independent Governments.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 197.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 20.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 19, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the correspondence, as marked in the margin,* between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office, by which it would be seen that the Duke of Newcastle is of opinion that although the IXth Article of the Treaty between this country and the United States for the suppression of the Slave Trade provides for the delivery to the American authorities of United States' citizens found on board a vessel sailing without flag or papers, and condemned as a slaver, yet that the Act of Parliament 25 and 26 Vict., cap. 40, sec. 16, under which alone British authorities could give effect to the provisions of the Article in question, does not follow the Treaty stipulation, but only provides that it shall be lawful for the authorities to order any person found on board such vessel at the time of capture to be conveyed within the jurisdiction of the nation under whose flag such vessel so condemned as aforesaid was sailing at the time of capture, or to which such vessel may belong. That the Duke of Newcastle holds, therefore, that the Treaty and the Act of Parliament are at variance on this point, and that the provisions of the Act would not authorize British authorities to deliver up to United States' authorities citizens of the United States who may be captured on board a vessel taken and condemned for being engaged in the Slave Trade without flag or papers; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this was a vessel sailing without flag or papers, condemned by an English "competent Court" for being engaged in the African Slave Trade. On board this vessel a citizen of the United States is found, and the question arises as to what course ought to be pursued with respect to him under the IXth Article of the African Slave Trade Treaty, as carried into execution by the 16th section of the 25th and 26th Vict., cap. 40.

We are of opinion that the IXth Article, properly construed, directs that a foreign subject so found should be delivered up to the State to which the vessel belonged in which he was found, and not to the State (unless it happened to be the same) of which the individual was a subject; and we think that this provision of the IXth Article is sufficiently given effect to by the 16th section of the Statute, which says that the captain, &c., or any person found on board, at the time of the capture "of any vessel which shall have been so condemned as mentioned in the IXth Article, shall be forthwith conveyed within the jurisdiction of the nation under whose flag such vessel was sailing at the time of capture, or to which such vessel may belong." The last alternative extends to the case of a vessel sailing without a flag.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 198.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 23.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons, and a letter and its inclosures from the Admiralty,† respecting the case of the British vessel "Sir W. Peel," which was seized by the United States' cruizer "Seminole" in the Mexican waters of Matamoros; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether they induce us to alter the view of this case taken in our Report of the 26th ultimo (November); and was to add that in accordance with that Report Lord Lyons was informed on the 7th instant (December) that in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government it would not be right that he should make any further representation to the United States' Government pending the result of the inquiry before the Prize Court.

---

* To Colonial Office, August 4; Colonial Office, December 1; to Colonial Office, December 8; Colonial Office, December 22, 1863.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 6th, 9th, and 20th instant, transmitting to us, for our consideration, further depatches and papers relating to this case.‡

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the new circumstances revealed in these papers do induce us to alter our opinion as to the propriety and expediency of an official interference by Lord Lyons, previously to the decision of the Prize Court in this case; that we must observe that the claimant's counsel, Mr. Briggs, appear to have thought that the fact of the violation of neutral territory could only be alleged in the Prize Court by the neutral Government whose territory was violated; but we think that this is an error. Such a fact cannot be alleged by an enemy; but we know of no authority for saying that it may not be put forward by a neutral whose ship has been captured within the territory of another neutral Power; and in principle it would appear to us to be competent to such neutral to claim release on the ground that the belligerent had no jurisdiction in the spot where he made the capture. It is scarcely possible to doubt, from the evidence of the captor's intercepted letter—the genuineness of which we think Lord Lyons is entitled to assume—that this vessel was knowingly seized by the captor in neutral waters; that she was seized in violation of international law, and of the American orders, without preliminary examination; and that she was seized partly on account of her homeward cargo being cotton, which the captor knew was not contraband, but chose to treat as contraband. There also seems only too much reason to infer, from the 5th paragraph of the same intercepted letter, beginning "the vessel is perfectly ventilated with air-ports," &c. (and it is a fact well calculated to excite the alarm and vigilance of every neutral maritime Power), that the captor was greatly influenced in this unjust proceeding by the desire of employing this vessel in the service of the United States; a fact which, we may observe in passing, justifies the remonstrance which we recommended should be addressed to Mr. Seward some time since upon the subject of forcing British vessels, before condemnation, into the naval service of the United States.

We think that Mr. Seward, if the genuineness of the letter be admited, can scarcely fail to see the necessity of causing the immediate restitution, with proper indemnification to the owner, and with proper rebuke to the captor.

We have, since this Report was prepared, read the further evidence relative to the "Sir W. Peel," contained in the inclosures of Admiral Milne's despatch sent to us in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant; and we are confirmed by the perusal of this evidence in the opinion which we have expressed. Indeed, regard being had to the proceedings of the United States' cruizers with respect to British vessels at Matamoros, we doubt whether a peremptory demand for the release of the "Sir W. Peel" would not be warranted by the facts; but we are indisposed to advise the adoption of this course until we see what the conduct of the United States' Government will be upon the whole subject of seizing neutral vessels in those waters, and the general question of trading with the Confederates, as to which we have made a further Report, to which we beg to refer, in answer to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Mr. Harper, October 22; to Mr. Harper, October 23; Lord Lyons, No. 781, November 3; No. 822, November 17; to Lord Lyons, No. 610, December 7, 1863.

[†] Lord Lyons, No. 854, December 1; No. 862, December 7; Admiralty, December 22, 1863.

[‡] Lord Lyons, No. 901; No. 901; No. 908; No. 916, December 29, 1863.

No. 199.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 27, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant stating that with reference to our Report of the 15th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons,* and also a further letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office, respecting the case of the "Chesapeake;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, transmitting for our consideration a further despatch from Lord Lyons respecting this case (No. 21, January 12, 1864).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us expedient to make some observation upon the construction put upon the Treaty of Extradition, and of the Statutes 6th and 7th Vict., cap. 76 (which should be read in connection with 8th and 9th Vict., cap. 120), by his Excellency the Governor of New Brunswick, in his despatch to his Grace the Duke of Newcastle.

1st. We think that the opinion of his Excellency, that he ought to issue the original warrant upon a bare requisition of the proper United States' officer without reference to any depositions, is not quite correct. We think that, though the office of his Excellency in this matter is to a great degree ministerial only, nevertheless he must exercise some discretion as to the reasonableness of the requisition, and must satisfy himself that it is founded upon some primâ facie evidence of an offence within the meaning of the Statutes; and the 2nd Section of the Statute (6th and 7th Vict., cap. 76), appears to contemplate the laying of some depositions before the Governor previously to the issue of the original warrant.

We think, also, that care should be taken to adhere in all such cases to the rule (laid down in the Report of the Law Officers, dated 27th December, 1852), that the requisition should show upon the face of it that the particular case is within the terms of the Statute. We make this observation, because the requisition addressed by the United States' Consul at St. John's to the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick on the 22nd December last is, on the face of it, defective, as not showing that the alleged offence of piracy was committed within the jurisdiction of the United States; which is an indispensable requisite to bring the case within the Treaty and the Statute. It is true that the defect is not one which can vitiate the subsequent proceedings; and the depositions of Wade, Wollest, and Daniel Henderson, which accompanied the requisition, showed that the acts alleged to constitute the offence were done at sea, on board a ship (and therefore within the jurisdiction) of the United States; but this ought to have appeared on the face of the requisition itself.

2nd. We agree with his Excellency that the Magistrate to whom the Governor's warrant is produced must, before, in the first place, issuing his own warrant for the apprehension of the person accused, and afterwards, before committing him for trial, receive evidence which, in the language of the Statute, "would justify the apprehension and committal for trial" of the accused person, if he were to be tried for the crime of which he is accused in New Brunswick.

3rdly. We think that his Excellency is not, as he supposes himself to be, absolutely without discretion when the Magistrate shall have certified to him the committal of the accused person; for although, generally speaking, it would be his duty forthwith to order the person so committed to be delivered up to the proper United States' authority, yet cases might possibly arise in which it would be his duty to refer the matter to Her Majesty's Government before taking that step.

4thly. We agree with the opinion of his Excellency, and of the Law Officers of New Brunswick, that the Governor ought not to issue the original warrant unless it is alleged that the accused party is actually at the time within his jurisdiction.

5thly. The question whether the Counsel for the accused person are entitled to a copy of the requisition and accompanying depositions upon which the original warrant was founded, is not without difficulty. We incline, however, to the opinion that inasmuch as the requisition is the foundation of all the proceedings under the Statute, and as the accused person may be heard by his Counsel before the magistrate, and as the matter affects his personal liberty, it would be generally proper that his Counsel should be allowed a copy of these papers.

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 920, 1863; No. 929, 1863; No. 5, 1864.

1864

With respect to the new despatches from Lord Lyons, it does not occur to us that they call for any detailed expression of opinion, over and above that which we have already had the honour to offer respecting the subject in our former Reports in the case of the "Chesapeake." The apology made by the United States' Government for the violation of British territory by their officers appears to have been ample and unreserved; and on this point nothing further seems to be required. The only new statement of fact which seems to call for notice by Her Majesty's Government is Mr. Seward's allegation (see Lord Lyons' despatch of 31st December, No. 929), that Braine, and several others of the alleged pirates, are "themselves Nova Scotians;" in connexion with which, we may also notice the statement appearing in Mr. Gordon's despatches, or in some of the papers transmitted by him, that others of the same party are natives or inhabitants of New Brunswick. If this be so, it will be difficult for natural-born British subjects who have acted as these persons seem to have done to exonerate themselves from the charge of piracy; and the defence, that they were in the service of the Confederate States, involves (at the very least) an addition that they violated the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 200.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 27, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 907), inclosing a copy of the opinion delivered by Judge Betts in the case of the "Stephen Hart," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous papers relating to this case were also inclosed for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that this vessel and cargo were lawfully condemned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 201.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th January instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th instant respecting the case of the "Saxon," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers,* a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York,† inclosing a copy of a deposition made before him by the second mate of that vessel respecting the circumstances of her capture, and also respecting the shooting of James Gray, the first mate of the "Saxon," by an officer of the "Vanderbilt" named Donohoe; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the deposition of David Aitchison contains the truth, the United States' officer Donohoe ought to be tried without delay for the wilful murder of an innocent British subject. It is hardly necessary to observe that this deposition, although it throws no new light upon the cause of the capture, imparts a still graver character to the case of the "Saxon," which was, independently of it, one which called for a prompt and careful investigation into all the proceedings of the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 202.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th January, and its inclosures, from the Admiralty, respecting the case of the "Saxon" and the shooting of the chief mate by an officer of the United States' ship "Vanderbilt;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration together with those on the same snbject which were referred to us on the 20th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That our Report upon the papers transmitted with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant had been already prepared, and was in course of signature, when these further papers arrived.

That the only point of importance to which we have not adverted in our former Reports on this subject is the character of the Penguin Island, near Angra Pequena. We are desirous that it should be understood that we think ourselves at present bound to consider both these places as not forming part of Her Majesty's territories.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 203.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 12th instant, respecting the recent seizure of British vessels at Matamoros by United States' cruizers, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing copies of a letter, with other papers, received from Vice-Admiral Milne upon the same subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take into consideration the additional information furnished by Vice-Admiral Milne, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 20th and 26th instant, transmitting to us further despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons on the same subject.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional information now furnished by Admiral Milne tends strongly to confirm the opinion which we have had the honour to express both as to these vessels and in the case of the "Sir W. Peel."

We agree with Admiral Milne that the conduct of the American cruizers in the waters of Matamoros, and still more the principle upon which that conduct appears to be justified, require to be brought under the most serious consideration of the United States' Government; and we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed, with all convenient speed, to lay before that Government the opinion of Her Majesty's Government as to the facts disclosed in the despatch of Admiral Milne, and the inclosures accompanying it.

---

* Admiralty, December 22; Colonial Office, December 24, 1863; Messrs. Hamilton, January 4, 1864; Consul Archibald, No. 218, 1863.

† No. 2, January 5, 1864.

* Admiralty, January 14, 1864; Messrs. Gallichan, December 17; Messrs. Bateson and Robinson, December 18; Messrs. Bischoff, December 18; to Messrs. Gallichan, December 26; to Messrs. Bischoff, December 26; to Messrs. Bateson, December 26; to Lord Lyons, No. 639; Mssrs. Bennett, December 30, 1863; Messrs. Lizardi, January 6, 1864.

† Lord Lyons, No. 917, December 29, 1863; No. 16, January 12, 1864.

1864

It is at least satisfactory to observe, that whatever errors in point of law the letter of the United States' Commander Woolsey to Mr. Vice-Consul Paul Ziern may contain, it is written in the most unobjectionable tone and spirit.

We return to the despatch of Admiral Milne for the purpose of considering, in their order, the various paragraphs relating to facts and law which are contained in it.

As to the first, namely, as to vessels seized in United States' waters with contraband of war actually on board. In these cases we agree with Admiral Milne that the action of the captors and of the Prize Courts should not be interfered with.

With regard to the second paragraph, we also agree with him, that vessels supposed to have carried contraband on their outward voyage, but which are found to have none on board, and which have wholly or partially shipped a return cargo of cotton, or other innocent merchandize, ought not to be seized. The true maxim of law respecting the carriage of contraband is, that it constitutes no just cause of capture, unless the vessel is taken in delicto, and that the offence is deposited with the cargo; and we think that vessels seized, avowedly either because they have shipped a cargo of cotton, after having deposited, as appears to have been the case of the "Science," on shore, without seizure, a cargo of contraband (more especially if that cargo has been landed, as seems to have been the case with the ship in question, in Mexico and not in Texas), ought hereafter to be made the subject of an immediate application for release and redress by Her Majesty's Representative at Washington to the United States' Government.

As to the third paragraph, the "Volante" appears to have had cloth suited for regimental purposes on board, and, unless she was seized in neutral waters, her case is one which might fairly be taken before the Prize Court.

As to the fourth and fifth paragraphs, the "Dashing Wave," like any other neutral vessel, ought not to have been seized before a search instituted by the captor had established that she had contraband of war on board, or that there was some other primâ facie ground for capture; and this is a point of law the practical breach of which by the United States' cruizers should be again pressed on the United States' Government.

The sixth paragraph of Admiral Milne's letter relates to the alleged determination of the United States' Government to direct their cruizers to seize neutral vessels in United States' waters for trading simpliciter with the Confederates, and apart from all considerations connected with questions of contraband or blockade. The allegation, unfortunately, seems to be but too well founded, as appears both by the passage cited from the letter of the United States' commander, Woolsey, and by the fourth article of the Instructions, marked E, referred to in Captain Maguire's letter to Admiral Milne (Inclosure No. 17 in Admiral Milne's letter, No. 797).

This is an untenable and erroneous position of international law. It does not seem even to be qualified, in the documents to which we have referred, by any reference to the question whether the ships seized are, or are not, carrying enemy's goods; and even if it were limited to cases in which the neutral vessel had enemies' goods on board, it would be at variance with the rule laid down on that subject by the Declaration of Paris, upon which the United States' Government have repeatedly declared their intention of acting during the present war.

It would certainly also appear from Commander Woolsey's letter, that he considers himself instructed to seize neutral vessels carrying goods bonâ fide destined for Mexico, which would be contraband if the ship were carrying them to the Confederate States.

This also is a matter for grave remonstrance with the United States' Government.

As to the seventh paragraph, we are not aware upon what principle the United States' Government claim jurisdiction for the distance of three leagues from the coast of Texas. We have often had occasion to remark that three miles is the distance settled by existing international law, and which must be adhered to during the present war. This also is a matter on which explanations ought to be requested.

In conclusion, we have to observe that the instructions of Admiral Milne to Captain Maguire appear to us proper in the circumstances, but that if the practice of seizing British vessels in Mexican waters should be persevered in, we think Her Majesty's Government would be perfectly justified in giving instructions to the Admiral on the station (notice of which, if given, should be communicated to the United States' Government), to prevent, even by force if necessary, the seizure of British vessels in Mexican waters by United States' cruizers.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 204.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to the Law Officers' Reports of the 31st of March and the 3rd of July last, respecting the case of Mr. Shaver, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 906), relative to a proposal of Mr. Benjamin that Mr. Shaver's claim should be compromised; and to request that we would take this case again into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to Mr. Benjamin's proposal.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe from the instruction addressed to Lord Lyons on the 9th of July, that his Lordship was informed that Her Majesty's Government would reserve Mr. Shaver's claim for further discussion hereafter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, although we feel strongly that Mr. Shaver has been unjustly dealt with by the United States' Government, we agree with Lord Lyons that no benefit could accrue to that gentleman, in the present circumstances, from attempting to propose what Mr. Benjamin calls a "compromise" to the United States' Government. His Excellency would of course avail himself of any opportunity that might unexpectedly present itself for obtaining any favourable settlement of Mr. Shaver's claim.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 205.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a letter, dated the 26th ultimo, from the Treasury, inclosing a copy of a letter from Messrs. Laird; and with reference thereto Mr. Hammond was to request that we would inform your Lordship when the case of the iron-clads is likely to come before the Court of Exchequer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, in reference to Messrs. Laird's letter, we have the honour to report—

That the "information" in the case of the iron-clads will be filed in a few days; but as it may probably be necessary to send a Commission abroad to take evidence, it is not possible now to say when that case is likely to come on before the Court of Exchequer.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 206.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that before it was possible to address an instruction, in conformity with our Reports of the 23rd instant, to Lord Lyons respecting the case of the British vessel "Sir William Peel," further papers, namely, those inclosed in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 16 of the 12th instant (ultimo), relative to British vessels captured by United States' cruizers in the Rio

1864

Grande (referred to the Law Officers, January 26); and the despatch and its inclosures which accompanied this (Mr. Hammond's) letter were received from Lord Lyons (No. 17 of January 12), and that your Lordship thinks it desirable that we should have an opportunity of perusing these papers before the instruction to Lord Lyons respecting the case of the "Sir William Peel" is sent off. Mr. Hammond was, consequently, to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any further observations which we may have to offer upon the case. The previous papers were also sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the further papers referred to, and have the honour to report—

That these further papers do, in our opinion, strengthen the expediency of the course of action which, in our last Report, we had the honour to suggest as proper to be pursued.

The letter of the United States' Commander avows as the reason for the seizure of this neutral British vessel, that she "had been landing a portion of her cargo, contraband of war, and was receiving Confederate cotton from Confederate agents at Brownsville."

This is in accordance with the intercepted and printed letter, to the effect that he relied upon the United States' Government supporting him in the seizure of neutral vessels laden with Confederate cotton, as being contraband. It is true, that he now adds, that on searching the ship after taking possession of her, he "found sufficient contraband of war to justify the seizure." But, in the first place, it has been seen that this officer considers what he calls "Confederate cotton" to be contraband of war; and secondly, the search, which is to justify a seizure, ought, by international law, to precede, and not to follow, the act of taking possession. Confessedly, therefore, Commander Rolando disregarded, at the time of making this capture, the rules of international law; and with his intercepted letter before us, and with the fact that the Prize Court at New Orleans was unable to find any justification for the capture without further proof, we think that no weight ought to be attached to the pretext, that contraband was found on board the vessel.

It does not seem to us, unless the authenticity of the printed letter be denied, that, in the face of such positive avowals of a violation of international law on the part of the captor, it is any sufficient answer from the belligerent's Government to the neutral Government, that this case is before the Prize Court, and that certain statements as to the demeanour and subsequent conduct of the captors, comparatively immaterial, and entirely unconnected with the question whether the capture was justifiable or not, are now denied. The printed letter shows that the seizure was made upon a wrong principle, on which the captor intentionally acted, and which seems also to have been acted upon in a similar manner by other United States' cruizers at Matamoros, in open defiance of neutral rights.

For this reason, as well as on the ground of the injustice done to the owners of this particular vessel, we think that Lord Lyons may properly be instructed to make the remonstrance which we advised in our former Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 207.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 3.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 28th of October last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a further note from Mr. Adams,† again calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the circumstances connected with the capture of the barque "Sea Bride," of Boston, by the "Alabama," and putting forward a claim against Her Majesty's Government for compensation on account thereof; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Adams.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think an answer should be sent to Mr. Adams to the effect, that the Governor of the Cape of Good Hope was satisfied upon the evidence adduced before him, which has also satisfied Her Majesty's Government, that the "Sea Bride" was not captured within the territorial waters of Her Majesty.

That with respect to the claim founded upon "the general argument," to which his Excellency refers, Her Majesty's Government have only to repeat that they, in every respect, and most advisedly, adhere to the answer which they have on former occasions had the honour to address to that argument.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 208.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 3.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 19th ultimo from Mr. Adams, inclosing a printed paper which purports to be a copy of the Report for 1863 of the Secretary of the Navy of the so-styled Confederate States, and calling, by the direction of the Government of the United States, the attention of Her Majesty's Government to certain passages in the same; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would seem to us proper, in the answer which may be given to Mr. Adams, to point out that the document transmitted by him appears to Her Majesty's Government to contain the strongest proofs (if any were wanted) that Her Majesty's Government have endeavoured in good faith to observe, strictly and impartially, under circumstances of no small difficulty, the obligations of neutrality which they have undertaken; and that the practical effect of their doing so has been advantageous, in no slight degree, to the more powerful of the two belligerents, namely, the United States.

What is termed in Mr. Mallory's Report "the unfriendly construction of Her Majesty's laws," is therein made matter of grave complaint against England by the Government of the Confederate States; while to the same cause is ascribed the fact that the Confederate States have been prevented from obtaining the services of the greater part of a formidable war fleet, which they had desired to create.

We agree very much with Mr. Adams as to the nature and importance of the admissions made in Mr. Malloy's Report, of the endeavours of the Confederate Government, by their agents in this country and in Canada, to violate in various ways Her Majesty's neutrality. Her Majesty's Government have (we believe) already taken steps to make the Confederate Government aware that such proceedings cannot be tolerated: and, although the tone of Mr. Adams's letter is not such as to encourage Her Majesty's Government to communicate with him on that subject without much reserve, we think that he may, without impropriety, be informed that the admissions to which he invites attention have not failed to receive from Her Majesty's Government the consideration which they undoubtedly deserve.

We think it impossible to pass by without special notice the following portion of Mr. Adams' letter:—"I am further directed respectfully to represent that the toleration of the avowed enemies of the United States, whilst known to be carrying on these hostile practices, now fully revealed, within the British realm and its dependencies, without restraint of any kind, cannot be regarded as an exercise of the unquestioned right of sheltering political exiles, but rather as equivalent to permitting them to abuse that right for the purpose of more effectually availing themselves of British aid and co-operation, now notoriously given them, in waging war with a country with which Great Britain is at peace."

---

* Mr. Adams, September 29; Admiralty, October 21; to Mr. Adams, October 29, 1863.

† Mr. Adams, January 20, 1864.

1864

We presume that, in reply to this suggestion, your Lordship will think it right to state that Her Majesty's dominions must necessarily continue to be open to the subjects of both belligerents as long as Her Majesty is at peace with both of them; and that Her Majesty's Government will, at the same time, continue to put in force (as they have hitherto done), to the full extent of the means in their power, the laws of this country against those subjects of both belligerents who may be found, by transgressing them, to have abused the rights of hospitality and offended against the authority of the Crown.

With respect to the repetition by Mr. Adams of the old complaint, that Her Majesty thought fit, upon the original commencement of hostilities, to recognize the status of belligerents in both the parties to this unhappy contest, we can but repeat the observation which we have had occasion to make on many former occasions, that any other course would have justly exposed this country to a charge of violating the clearest principles and soundest precedents of international law.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 209.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that while your Lordship had before you our Report of the 19th ultimo containing observations upon the course pursued by the United States' authorities in the case of the "Labuan," the accompanying despatch was received from Lord Lyons (No. 4, January 12), reporting that he had been informed by Mr. Seward that, from explanations made by the judicial authorities, he had reason to believe that the decision in the case of the "Empress" would not preclude the Prize Court from entertaining the question of compensation in the case of the "Labuan." That Mr. Seward further informed Lord Lyons that peremptory orders had been given that the additional evidence sought for from Matamoros should be obtained without delay, and that he had given to the Consul charged with procuring foreign testimony positive directions to execute the commission so that the proceedings for the assessment of the compensation should be brought to a conclusion in time to enable the Executive Government to make application to Congress for an appropriation during the present session of that Body. That under these circumstances your Lordship proposes to send to Lord Lyons the instruction of which the draft is inclosed; but that before doing so your Lordship requested that we would take the proposed instruction into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this instruction into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter appears to us proper to be sent; but as we are not prepared to admit that the decision of the Prize Court in the case of the "Empress" is correct, so far as relates to the liability of the officers making an illegal capture, to damages, we would suggest the expediency of omitting the words "nor even against the captors," in the passage referring to that decision.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 210.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our consideration in connection with the other papers relating to the case of the "Saxon," a further letter dated the 1st instant from Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton, and Co., from which we should see that the second mate of that vessel is now in England and prepared to give evidence with regard to the death of James Gray; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would inform your Lordship whether we consider it expedient that we should see this person, and if so, on what day it would be convenient to us to examine him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose to us the draft of an instruction addressed to Lord Lyons on this subject by the mail of Saturday the 30th ultimo (No. 39, January 30, 1864).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the instruction proposed by your Lordship to be sent to Lord Lyons appears to us to be right and proper.

That we do not think any advantage would arise from our having a personal interview with the second mate of the "Saxon;" but any statement which the mate may be disposed to make might be taken down in writing by the Solicitor to the Treasury, and afterwards (if necessary) submitted to us.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 211.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to the case of the "Sea Bride," and the proceedings at the Cape of Good Hope of the Confederate steamer "Alabama," and her reputed tender the "Tuscaloosa," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous printed papers, a letter dated the 29th ultimo from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of an instruction which was addressed by the Duke of Newcastle to Governor Wodehouse on the 5th of November, in the terms of our Report to the Foreign Office of the 19th of October last, and a despatch which has been received from Governor Wodehouse in reply. That we should observe that it is stated that the Duke of Newcastle proposes to inform Sir Philip Wodehouse that it was not intended to censure his conduct in any respect, or to express a doubt as to its propriety in regard to the "Sea Bride:" but that his Grace wishes to be informed what instruction should be given to the Governor on the second and third points raised in his despatch, and also to be able to convey to the Governor such instructions as may be necessary by the mail of the 5th of February instant; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take Governor Wodehouse's despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, in time to admit of an answer being made to it by the outgoing mail, with our opinion on the points with regard to which Sir Philip Wodehouse asks for further instructions.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Sir Philip Wodehouse's despatch, and the other papers in this case, into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That, with reference to Sir P. Wodehouse's present explanation, that "the facts were not disputed, &c.," we cannot but observe that the possibility of a dispute about the facts relative to the "Tuscaloosa" was assumed in the opinion of the Colonial Attorney-General, dated the 7th August, 1863 (paragraph 4), where it was said, "no means exist for determining whether she has or has not been judicially condemned by a Court of competent jurisdiction."

It was with reference to the ground so taken by the Colonial Attorney-General that we suggested the propriety, under such circumstances, of making those inquiries which Sir Philip Wodehouse now says were rendered unnecessary by the notoriety of the real facts.

2. With respect to the passage, cited by the Colonial Attorney-General, from "Wheaton's Elements" ("Lawrence's Wheaton," second edition, page 663), and which was considered by us to have "no direct bearing upon the question, whether in the case of a vessel duly commissioned as a ship of war, after being made prize by a belligerent Government, without being first brought infra præsidia, or condemned by a Court of Prize, the character of prize, within the meaning of Her Majesty's orders, would or would not be merged in that of a national ship of war," we beg to submit the following remarks:—

1864

This passage, and the authorities referred to by Wheaton in support of it, relate to the construction placed by the Prize Courts of Great Britain upon particular words in certain English (and which also occur in certain American) Prize Acts (see particularly 45th Geo. III, cap. 2, sec. 7). By these Acts the rule, previously applicable in this country, to cases of recapture was extended, and provision was made for the restitution to the original owners on payment of salvage of all British or neutral vessels "taken as prize" by the King's enemies, at whatever subsequent time they might have been recaptured; subject, however, to the exception expressed in the following words:—"But if such ship or vessel so retaken shall appear to have been, after the taking by His Majesty's enemies, by them set forth as a ship or vessel of war, the said ship or vessel shall not be restored to the former owners or proprietors, but shall in all cases, whether retaken by any of His Majesty's ships or by any privateer, be adjudged lawful prize for the benefit of the captors." The passage in Wheaton relates solely to this statutory exception from the statutory rule of restitution. For this purpose, in several cases, the actual use and employment of a captured vessel as a fighting ship, in the capture of British vessels, and in other actively hostile operations, was held to constitute a "setting forth as a ship or vessel of war," although she had never been condemned, nor regularly commissioned, nor employed in such hostile service by the direct authority of the captor's Government. But these British Prize Acts (none of which are now in force) and the decisions upon them cannot be regarded as establishing any general rule for the interpretation of the word "prizes," in Orders of Her Majesty issued for quite a different purpose during a war in which she desires to remain strictly neutral, and which orders contain no exception of such prizes as may, after their capture, have been "set forth" by the captors "as ships or vessels of war." The word "prize" continues to be, in its natural sense, applicable to a captured vessel remaining under the power and control of the captor, whether it be "set forth" by him "as a ship or vessel of war," or not; and, but for the express exception in the 7th section of the 45th Geo. III, cap. 72, captured vessels which had been so employed would have been equally liable with all others to restitution, in case of recapture. We repeat, therefore, that the passage cited from Wheaton has no direct bearing upon the present question, though some argument from analogy might, perhaps, be founded thereon.

3. We do not think it would have made any real difference, in the case of the "Tuscaloosa," even if there had been no cargo on board. We are far, however, from being satisfied that any of the acts which are shown to have been done by Captain Semmes, with respect to this vessel, before she was brought within British waters, would have constituted, according to the doctrine of Wheaton, a "setting forth as a vessel of war," within the meaning of the exception already referred to, if the question had arisen under the English, or the corresponding American Prize Acts. The general statement made by Wheaton must be read in the light of the authorities to which he refers. There is no instance, of which we are aware, in which any ship has been treated by a Prize Court as "set forth for war," without either having a regular and independent commission as a ship of war from a belligerent Government, or having been actually employed as a fighting ship in offensive operations of war. In the case most like the present (the "Georgiana," 1 Dodson, page 397), the captured vessel was supplied by the captor with ten guns, in addition to eight which she already had, when taken, and sixty men were put on board her, "under a commissioned officer, who was directed to cruize against British vessels, which he did; and he suceedced in making three captures. The vessel, therefore," we quote the words of Sir W. Scott, at page 41, "was engaged in actual hostilities."

It was attempted, in the argument of that case, on the part of the owners claiming restitution, to compare this employment to that of a tender to a man-of-war, "which description of vessel is not commissioned, and is incapable of taking prizes for its own benefit." And there is nothing in Sir W. Scott's Judgment to lead to the conclusion that she would not have been restored to her original owners, if the only proof of her employment in hostile operations had consisted in the mere fact of her being used as a tender to the ship by which she was taken.

4. With respect to the general question, whether a captured vessel, regularly commissioned as a ship of war of the captor's Government, before being brought infra præsidia, or condemned, may not cease to have the character of a prize, within the meaning of Her Majesty's orders against bringing prizes within her ports, we are by no means prepared to say that circumstances might not occur (e.g., if the captured vessel were cruizing, under such a commission, as an independent ship of war, apart from the captors, and beyond their power and control) which would have that effect. But when the question is, whether Her Majesty's Orders have been observed or violated (and this is really the only question in the present instance), we think that a vessel which, having been captured and not condemned, nor brought infra præsidia, nor separately and independently commissioned, but remaining still under the control and power of the captors, is brought into a British port in a state of dependence upon the captors, with a crew placed on board by them, ought to be regarded and treated as a prize, within the meaning of those Orders; and that she cannot be withdrawn from their operation on the pretext that she has been converted into a tender to the capturing vessel. If Her Majesty's Orders are to have any force at all, such an evasion of them cannot, we think, be permitted.

Upon this point we adopt, and entirely agree with, the just and pointed remarks made by Sir Baldwin Walker, in his letter to Sir P. Wodehouse of the 8th of August, 1863. Nor can we fail to observe, that if there is any case in which the rule against bringing captured United States' vessels into British ports ought to be enforced with severity and strictness, it is that of a ship of war fitted out in, and principally manned from, this country, in violation of the neutrality laws of Great Britain.

We think it necessary, however, to guard these concluding remarks by adding, that, as the captain of the "Alabama" has been led to suppose that a rule, different from that which we think the correct one, will be applied within British waters to captured vessels in the peculiar circumstances of the "Tuscaloosa," it would not now be proper to enforce Her Majesty's Orders against captured vessels so situated (if hereafter brought by him into any British port), in the way suggested at the end of the Duke of Newcastle's despatch, withont some previous notice, offering him the opportunity of promptly removing such vessels beyond British jurisdiction, which notice (of course) need not be repeated on any subsequent occasion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 212.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 8, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 9th of May last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,[*] a despatch from Lord Lyons,[†] inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward forwarding explanations given by military officers of the United States with regard to the complaint of Mr. Alexander Nicol, that his property at Kingston, North Carolina, had been wantonly plundered by the Federal troops during their occupation of that town in December 1862; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the case, as represented in the papers now transmitted by Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Nicol in his affidavit (No. 1 in Mr. Walker's despatch No. 58) stated that in discovering the plunder of his house, he "immediately went to the Federal Provost Marshal, and informed him who I was, and what had been done during my absence. He seemed surprised, and said it ought not to have been done, and informed me that I should be indemnified for my loss," &c. But the Provost Marshal in the affidavit now submitted to me, entirely denies this statement.

In this conflict of evidence Her Majesty's Government can only desire Mr. Nicol to be apprised that they have caused his case to be laid befor the United States' authorities, and that they, and especially the Provost Marshal, deny the accuracy of his statement, and maintain that his house was not plundered by their troops. Her Majesty's Government can therefore only regret that Mr. Nicol has suffered, in common with other persons, the misfortunes incident to those who live in a city in which a battle has been fought.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Consul Walker, No. 58; to Lord Lyons, No. 278, May 12; Lord Lyons, No. 509, June 8, 1863.

[†] Lord Lyons, No. 9, January 12, 1864.

1864

No. 213.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that an intimation has been given to the Foreign Office by a member of the House of Commons of his intention to move for the production of the following papers, viz.:—"All correspondence with the Federal Government or Mr. Adams on the subject of the iron-clads seized at Liverpool;" and "all correspondence between the various Departments of Her Majesty's Government or offices in Her Majesty's service and Messrs. Laird Brothers:" That there has been no direct correspondence on this matter between Her Majesty's Legation at Washington and the Federal Government, with the exception of the official communication which Mr. Hammond inclosed; but as we are aware, there has been some correspondence between your Lordship and Mr. Adams: that that correspondence is printed in the confidential collection of papers respecting the iron-clads now in our possession, and it appears in the collection of correspondence on foreign affairs recently laid before Congress by the Government of the United States; that for our greater convenience Mr. Hammond inclosed it in a separate form; that the whole of the correspondence between the various Departments of Her Majesty's Government or offices in Her Majesty's service, so far as the Foreign Office is acquainted with it, with Messrs. Laird Brothers up to the time of the seizure of the vessels, is printed in the collection now in our possession, and the correspondence has since that time, doubtless, been laid before us by the Solicitor of the Treasury; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would state to your Lordship whether the presentation to Parliament of either or both of the two series of correspondence referred to, and its consequent publication, would be advisable, or would at all interfere with the legal proceedings which are being carried on against these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That having regard to all the circumstances of this case, we are of opinion that it would be inexpedient, and possibly productive of future inconvenience at the trial, to allow either or both of the series of correspondence referred to, to be at present laid before Parliament. The mere correspondence with Mr. Adams and with the Messrs. Laird might no doubt be produced, without disclosing the evidence for the Crown. But it appears to us that the Government would run the risk of exposing itself to the evil of a discussion in Parliament, in which they would be placed at great disadvantage; and that, moreover, by a partial publication of papers in this case, omitting those which constitute the real justification for these proceedings, and without which the action taken by the Government cannot be made fully intelligible, a mischievous prejudice might be created in the public mind.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 214.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

Doctors' Commons, February 9, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th February instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence with Her Majesty's Minister and the French Ambassador in this country, and a letter which has been received from Mr. Mott. That the letter relates to the wish of the French Government to be allowed to export through the blockade at Richmond a quantity of tobacco belonging to that Government said to have been purchased before the commencement of the civil war. That I should observe that, in the outset, Mr. Seward adverted in conversation with Lord Lyons to the effect which such permission, to export through the blockade, might have upon the general validity of the blockade; but that that question was dropped without any decision being taken on the point, and that the other condition adverted to by Mr. Seward was met by the acquiescence of Her Majesty's Government in the arrangement for the export of tobacco. That it appears, however, by the French Ambassador's recent communication that part of the tobacco was purchased by the French Government after the outbreak of hostilities, and the French Government now seek to obtain from Her Majesty's Government a like acquiescence in regard to that portion of the tobacco, the question of the effect of such a measure on the validity of the blockade being again raised by Mr. Mott; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion on that point.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this question into consideration and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the tobacco purchased before as well as that purchased after the institution of the blockade, it is to be observed that as neither class of tobacco was placed on board lighters or other vessels previously to the blockade, both were, strictly speaking, without the operation of the rule of law and practice which only permits such goods to be exported after the institution of the blockade. The latter class stands, however, obviously on a much less favourable position, and the license to export in this instance is certainly a greater stretch of power on the part of the belligerent who imposes the blockade. Having regard, however, to our own practice during the last war with France, with respect to licences, it would not be competent for Her Majesty's Government (even if they were so minded) to contend that such a special license of exportation, as is now sought for, invalidated the blockade. The law upon this subject was, I think, correctly laid down by Dr. Lushington in the last war (1855) as follows:—"With respect to the grant of licences I concur with Lord Stowell (the "Fox," 1 Edwards, 380), though I believe the question was never raised, that the grant of licenses has never been held to vitiate a blockade, and I am of opinion that where such licences were granted upon peculiar and special occasions, and for such only, the doctrine is true; and for this reason, because special occasions might arise, which might call for the grant of such licences, and be productive of no perceptible injury to the subjects of neutral States or their commerce." This doctrine appears to have been admitted by the Privy Council. (The "Franciska," 10 Moore Privy Council Reports, 49).

It will be observed that the remarks of the learned Judge apply to a relaxation of the blockade by the belligerent who imposed the blockade in favour of his own subjects. I am, however, clearly of opinion, upon general principles, that any relaxation in favour of particular neutral States which exceeds a special occasion might invalidate the blockade. But I am also of opinion that the permission now sought for by France, if conceded by the United States, would not authorize Her Majesty's Government to insist that the blockade was broken. I use the words "Her Majesty's Government" advisedly, because it must be remembered that it will be competent to any individual to raise the question before the United States' Courts of Prize, and they may (as our Judicial Committee of Privy Council did upon other grounds in the case of the "Franciska") hold, notwithstanding the permission of their Government, that the blockade has been, upon principles of international law, invalidated.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 215.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 918), respecting the case of the "H. G. Berry," which with other British vessels bound from New Orleans to Matamoros, was detained by the United States' authorities, in order to prevent their carrying intelligence of preparations which were, at the time, making at the former port for the expedition to the coast of Texas opposite Matamoros: and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon: and was to add that the instruction in the case of the "Labuan" referred to by Lord Lyons, was founded upon a Report from Her Majesty's Advocate-General, dated the 5th of January, 1863.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the opinion of ths Queen's Advocate in the case of the 1864

"Labuan" was well founded, and that the principle of it is applicable to the present case and others ejusdem generis.

The principle on which this detention is justified, is the urgent military necessity of the belligerent to prevent the issuing from his own ports of vessels which he apprehends will apprise his enemy of his strategic plans, and by so apprising him defeat the execution of them.

It is to be observed that the United States' officer, General Canby, states (Inclosure 19 in Lord Lyons' letter),—

1st. That the same restriction was placed upon all vessels, national and foreign;

2nd. That it was limited to a few days;

3rd. That it was limited to vessels going to that part of the enemy's coast to which the military expedition was about to be sent.

This detention, therefore, of the "H. G. Berry" must be assumed to be a bonâ fide act, if not of self-defence, of belligerent exigency; an act extending equally and impartially to all, native and foreign, subjects.

We think that such an act affords no grounds for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

Of course, if any compensation in the way of demurrage or otherwise should be granted by the United States' Government to native or foreign subjects, it must be accorded to the owners of the "H. G. Berry."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 216.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 10.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Board of Admiralty, respecting instructions which they propose to send this evening to the Commanding Officer in the East Indies, having reference to the conduct to be observed in regard to Confederate vessels of war in British ports; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience whether those instructions can properly be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed instructions are proper, and such as ought to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 217.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th February instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th of November last, on the case of the "Margaret and Jessie," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons inclosing a copy of the note in which he communicated to Mr. Seward the evidence showing that the pursuit of that vessel by the United States' gun-boat "Rhode Island" involved a violation of Her Majesty's territorial jurisdiction; and also a despatch inclosing a copy of the note of acknowledgment which he had received from Mr. Seward in reply; and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that notice had been given that this case is to be brought before the House of Commons on Friday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That upon these additional papers now submitted to us, we have only to observe that Lord Lyons should be instructed to keep a vigilant watch upon the proceedings of the United States' Government, and to avail himself of the earliest opportunity of pressing them for a decision, upon a subject which Her Majesty's Government have great reason to regret has not already been satisfactory disposed of.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 218.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 10, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th February instant, stating that he was directed to state to me that your Lordship has observed that in the course of the present civil war in North America, the Government of the United States and their authorities have declared cotton, and almost every article of food and material of clothing, to be contraband; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the United States have any right to extend the list of contraband as regards neutral nations.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this question into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That contraband, according to existing international law is of two kinds: that species which is unquestionably bellici usûs; that which is ancipitis usûs. With respect to the former species, though the enumeration of articles has varied in different Treaties, at different periods, with different States, there has always been the prevailing characteristic that they are articles capable of direct warlike use. With respect to the latter species, sometimes designated by jurists contraband per accidens, in this category are included articles which, the state of the war and the character and destination of the cargo being considered, may be fairly considered as intended for the use of the army or navy of the belligerent; e. g., provisions bound to a port besieged or blockaded, timber, naval stores, have been considered by the English Prize Court as such; and somewhat reluctantly, but finally, admitted so to be by the Prize Courts of the United States. (1 Kent's "Commentaries," 143, the "Commercen;" 1 Wheaton's "Reports," 387.)

In the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States (4th November, 1796), an enumeration of articles of direct contraband, bellici usûs, occurs in Article XVIII, under the two heads of "all arms and implements serving for the purposes of war by land or by sea," and "generally whatever may serve directly for the equipment of vessels, unwrought iron and fir planks only excepted; and with respect to contraband per accidens, there is a special stipulation as to "provisions and other articles" being regarded as contraband, though "not generally contraband," in certain cases; and an arrangement that, on account of the difficulty of ascertaining these cases, to prevent inconvenience, certain articles shall not be confiscated but subject to the right of pre-emption.

It is not unimportant to observe, that when the British Government issued, in April 1795, an Order in Council instructing its cruizers to stop all vessels laden with provisions bound to any port of France, that the United States strongly objected to this Order, which was afterwards revoked; that the question of its legality was afterwards made the subject of discussion before a Mixed Commission, which decided in favour of the view taken by the United States. The argument adduced by that Government, at that time, appears to be well worthy of your Lordship's attention, from its bearing upon the general subject of the competence of the belligerent to augment at his pleasure, and by refined inferences drawn from the possible indirect consequences of allowing the importation of particular articles, the catalogue of contraband. "If the mere hope," the United States' Government argued, "however apparently well founded, of annoying or reducing an enemy by intercepting the commerce of neutrals in articles of provision (which in themselves are no more contraband than ordinary merchandize) to ports not besieged or blockaded, would authorize that interruption, it would follow that a belligerent might at any time prevent, without a siege or blockade, all trade whatsoever with its enemy; since there is, at all times, reason to believe that a nation having little or no shipping of its own, might be so materially distressed by preventing all other nations from trading with it, that such prevention might be a powerful instrument in bringing it to terms. The principle is so wide in its nature that it is, in this respect, incapable of any boundary. There is no solid distinction, in this view of the principle, between provisions and a thousand other articles. Men must be clothed as well as fed, and even the privation of the conveniences of life is severely felt by those to whom habit has rendered them necessary. A nation, in proportion as it can be debarred its accustomed commercial intercourse with other States, must be enfeebled and impoverished; and if it is allowable to a belligerent to violate the freedom of neutral commerce in respect to any one article, not contraband in se, upon the expectation of annoying the enemy, or bringing him to terms by a seizure of that article and preventing it reaching his ports, why not, upon the same expectation of annoyance, cut off, as far as possible, by captures, all communications with the enemy, and thus strike at once effectually at his power and resources?" (Lawrence's "Wheaton on International Law," part iv, p. 794.)

1864

The sound and true inference from the history and practice of international law on this subject is, that no articles can be seized by a belligerent from a neutral vessel, as contraband, which are not directly or indirectly subservient to the military and naval uses, as distinguished from the ordinary and commercial uses, of the belligerent. And I am clearly of opinion that there is no authority derived from principle, the reason of the thing, authority, or precedent, which can authorize the United States' Government in adding, during the war and without the consent of neutral States, to the category of contraband cotton or articles ejusdem generis, or ordinary clothing, or materials for ordinary clothing, or provisions not destined for a blockaded port. To assume such a power is practically to assume the power of interdicting all commerce between the neutral and the belligerent States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 219.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo respecting the case of the "Chesapeake," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further letters dated the 4th instant, and their inclosures, from the Colonial Office respecting this case; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers now submitted to us do not appear to raise any question which we had not considered in our former Reports on this subject to your Lordship.

We think that his Excellency the Governor of New Brunswick exercised a wise discretion in allowing the accused persons copies of the Requisition and Warrant. The objections to the formal character of the Requisition were anticipated in our former Report.

The conclusion of the trial not being stated in these papers, we have no further observations to offer respecting them.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 220.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us

the accompanying further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 44, January 26) respecting the case of the "H. G. Berry," which he was directed by your Lordship to request us to have the goodness to take into consideration, together with the papers inclosed in his letter of the 20th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these additional papers do not affect the Report which we have had the honour to make on this subject; unless, indeed, it is to be understood from certain expressions in the protest that General Stone intends to detain indefinitely the ship, and prevent her altogether from pursuing at any time her voyage to Matamoros. That would be a stretching of the doctrine of "military necessity" beyond the limits within which it has usually been applied, and would warrant remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

It might be desirable that the attention of Lord Lyons should be directed to this point.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 221.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th ultimo from Mr. Adams, inclosing copies of papers taken in steamers engaged in running the blockade of the Southern ports, and which Mr. Adams states furnish another strong instance of the manner in which the insurgents habitually abuse the belligerent privileges conceded to them by this country. And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. Adams' note and inclosures into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Adams' note and inclosures into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we regret to observe the tone of menace in which this letter of Mr. Adams is written.

That Mr. Adams should be apprized that Her Majesty's Government are not prepared to allow any alteration in the well-established practice of international law to be introduced to the injury of neutral States on account of the exigencies or distresses of either belligerent.

That Mr. Adams must be aware, as every American jurist is aware, that it is not competent to a belligerent Government to treat the subjects of neutral States taken on board vessels (other than ships of war of the enemy) endeavouring, or alleged to be endeavouring, to break the blockade as prisoners of war; and that Her Majesty's Government cannot permit the subjects of Her Majesty to be made exceptions to the general rules and practice of international law on this or any other subject.

That the rights of visit and search and of blockade are belligerent rights, which press already with sufficient severity upon neutrals, and which (as Her Majesty's Government have before had occasion to observe in their correspondence with the United States' Government during this war) would be intolerable without a faithful and scrupulous observance on the part of the belligerent of his corresponding obligations.

That Her Majesty's Government can in no way be responsible for the conduct of the Confederate belligerent, and when it is said that they "habitually abuse the privileges which have been conceded to them by Great Britain," Her Majesty's Government have to observe that, not only Great Britain, but every other neutral State has, necessarily, recognized them as belligerents, and has, therefore, necessarily conceded to them, not "privileges" but the same "rights" as they are bound by international law to concede to all belligerents, and as they have conceded to the United States.

That Her Majesty's Government regret that any of Her Majesty's subjects should violate the blockade; but it must be remembered that the blockade is one of most unusual and gigantic proportions, severely affecting the welfare of no inconsiderable portion of Her Majesty's subjects; and that the penalty of confiscation and condemnation of British property to a very large amount has constituted, to say the least, no very inadequate punishment of the offenders. At all events, whether adequate or not in the view of the United States, it is the only penalty to which they are, or can be made, subject, according to the known rules of international law. If the fact be (as these papers seem to show) that some ships employed in running the blockade (but not navigated as vessels of war) are the property of the Government of the Confederate States, this fact cannot, in the judgment of Her Majesty's Government, furnish any justification whatever for the treatment of British subjects in a manner not warranted by international law, even if the British flag is improperly used to disguise the true character of such ships.

1864

With respect to the charge preferred against Lieutenant Rooke, Her Majesty's Government do not perceive that the facts alleged amount to a participation by that officer in any warlike service or operation on the part of the Confederate States. But Her Majesty's Government will not fail to take the proper steps against any officer bearing Her Majesty's Commission, who shall be proved to have illegally contravened Her Majesty's orders to all her subjects to observe a strict neutrality during the present deplorable war.

With respect to the alleged intentions of a certain iron-ship builder named James Ash, and of a firm called Stringer, Pembroke, and Co., to build steamers for the Confederate belligerents, Mr. Adams is well aware of the determination of Her Majesty's Government to put in force to the utmost of their power the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act against every subject in this country who shall violate these provisions, and as to whose offence they may be able to obtain legal and proper evidence; without which evidence it is (as Mr. Adams must be well aware) as impossible to act in Great Britain against the persons or property of British citizens, as it would be against the persons or property of citizens of the United States in that country under any circumstances other than those of the present civil war.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 222.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 13.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 13, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 15th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers received from the Colonial Office, and from Messrs. Hamilton and Co.,* respecting the seizure of the British barque "Saxon" by the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in addition to the Report which we have already had the honour to make upon this subject, we have only to state that we infer, from the papers now submitted to us, that Angra Pequena (the name seems to indicate that that it may have been, at one time, Portuguese territory) is now a deserted spot, and that the Proclamation of Sir G. Grey (12th August, 1861), purporting to extend the jurisdiction of the Crown over it, was not previously authorized, and has never since been recognized or confirmed by Her Majesty.

If this be so, no violation of British or neutral territory appears to have taken place; and the jurisdiction of the United States' Prize Court could not on that account be contested.

It seems, moreover, to have been admitted by one of the owners of the "Saxon," to Sir P. Wodehouse, that the "Saxon" had been actively engaged in taking on board part of a prize cargo landed from the "Tuscaloosa," for the purpose of conveying it to market, as the property, and on account, of Captain Semmes, of the "Alabama;" acting, in short, almost as a tender to the "Alabama," for that purpose.

If these facts should be established in evidence, a grave question of international law may be raised before the Prize Court, for the solution of which, perhaps, no exact precedent could be found. Until such question is distinctly raised, we do not desire to express any positive opinion respecting it. But we may observe that an argument to the effect that the "Saxon" had identified herself by such conduct with the enemy's ship, for the time at least, would seem to us (at present) to be not without plausibility; and we entirely agree with Sir P. Wodehouse, that the case must, under these circumstances, be left to the decision of the Prize Court.

---

* Colonial Office, January 28; Messrs. Hamilton and Co., January 29, 1864.

With respect to the murder of the mate of the "Saxon," the previous accounts are, unhappily, confirmed by these papers; and certainly pecuniary compensation to the widow ought to form a part of the redress which the United States' Government should be called upon to make for this atrocious act of their officer.

On the subject of the coals taken by the "Vanderbilt" from Penguin Island, it does not seem to be necessary to say more than that we fail to see any justification or excuse for the lawless way in which they were appropriated by the captain of that vessel. We collect from Sir P. Wodehouse's despatch that the act is not justified by the United States' Consul at the Cape Colony, and that a pecuniary compensation to the owners is likely to be made; but we should, nevertheless, think it proper that some notice should be taken of this subject in the representations which Lord Lyons may be instructed to make to the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 223.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 13.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 13, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons,* respecting the treatment to which British subjects found on board of vessels captured by United States cruizers for breach of blockade, are subjected by the United States' authorities; and to request that we would take this subject into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the instructions to Lord Lyons which were referred to by your Lordship were founded upon the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 23rd of June on the case of the "Granite City," and on our Report of the 29th of August last in the case of the "Victor."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to these cases generally, the systematic treatment of British subjects by United States' officers which they disclose appears to us to deserve the serious and immediate consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and the matter assumes an aspect of the gravest importance when we examine the terms of the letter from Mr. Adams of the 25th of January to your Lordship, on which we have already had the honour to report.

There is a very suspicious appearance of a determination having been secretly taken by the United States' Government to treat as prisoners of war the crews of all prizes in order to stop the continual violation of their blockade.

As to the case of O'Neill. The injuries inflicted upon this person are, in our opinion, most unsatisfactorily accounted for by the United States' Government; indeed, as to his detention for seven months as a prisoner, and during a portion of that time in a common jail, no excuse whatever is offered.

As to the severe wound which he received from the United States' officer, we think the justification offered is in itself incredible, and, as far as we can judge, unsupported by facts.

Unfortunately, it is not the only instance which has occurred in which a United States' officer has had recourse to the brutal act of shooting an unarmed and unresisting man on board a captured vessel; and we think it would be right to press that the officer should be put upon his trial for this offence.

With respect to Patrick Hamilton. The only defence for his imprisonment is to be found in the letter of Mr. Welles to Mr. Seward (Inclosure 21 in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 53), and we agree with Lord Lyons in considering this justification as entirely unsatisfactory.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 52, No. 53, No. 54, No. 55, January 26, 1864.

1864

With respect to the case of the master and crew of the "Banshee," the excuse for the imprisonment of these persons appears to us very suspicious, and to bear strong marks of having been devised to cover a transaction originally illegal and indefensible. But as Lord Lyons intimates that the Judgment condemning the "Banshee" may throw a light upon the whole subject it would be better to wait for the arrival of that Judgment in order that the validity of Mr. Seward's defence, if he still persists in it, may be more thoroughly sifted than it can be on the present materials.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 224.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 16, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us three despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons,* reporting the cases of Mr. Canty, Mr. Eneas, and Mr. Rahming, three British subjects who have been arrested and are now in confinement at New York.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that in requesting us to take these cases into our consideration, and to report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon, he was to state that your Lordship proposes to instruct Lord Lyons to state to Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government consider that they have a right to expect that, when a British subject is arrested, no delay should occur in giving Her Majesty's Minister, on his application, information of the grounds on which the arrest is made.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these cases into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the instructions which your Lordship proposes to send to Lord Lyons upon the general subject of the arrest of British subjects are right and proper.

With respect to the particular cases of Mr. Rahming, Mr. Eneas, and Mr. Canty, we are not of course able, upon the present papers, to form any opinion as to the sufficiency or insufficiency of the grounds upon which they have been arrested. But we must observe that the answers of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons seemed to us very insufficient, and scarcely consistent with the respect due to the gravity of the cases concerning which information is sought, or the position of Her Majesty's Representative.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 225.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 16, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 61) respecting a Military Commission which has been appointed to investigate the cases of persons under arrest at Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren, and before which it seems probable that several British subjects will be brought; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand that the Habeas Corpus Act is still suspended in the United States, and that British prisoners are to be tried in the same manner as native subjects and the subjects of other countries accused of political crimes. Assuming this to be the case, we do not think that Her Majesty's Government can enter into any valid protest against the proposed mode of investigation. But we think that the letter on this subject of Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward is very proper, and that he ought to be instructed to press for an answer to it; and that Her Majesty's Government should be informed of the result of the inquiry in every case in which it affects any British subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE

No. 226.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 18, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 57, January 26), respecting the case of Mr. James McHugh, a British subject who is imprisoned in Fort Lafayette; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Mr. McHugh's case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. McHugh's case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this case presents a different aspect from the others on which we have had the honour to report.

Mr. McHugh being domiciled in America at the breaking out of the war, appears to have so mixed himself up with affairs of the Confederate belligerent as to render his detention not altogether unreasonable. We shall, however, be in a better position to form a judgment as to this case when we have seen the explanations which he offers in answer to the accusation of Mr. Seward.

The intimation of Mr. Seward that the "Bermuda" and other vessels whose cargo is laden by Fraser, Trenholm, and Co. will be henceforth presumed to be war transports till the contrary is shown, opens a very serious and important question for consideration.

As at present advised, we are not prepared to admit that it is competent to the United States' Government, as against British subjects, to act, without further evidence, upon such a presumption.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 227.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Doctors' Commons, February 18, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that I would inform your Lordship, with reference to my Report of the 10th instant, whether the opinion therein expressed with regard to contraband of war applies to export from, as well as to import into, the so-called Confederate States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the opinion which I had the honour to express in my Report of the 10th instant, with regard to contraband of war, does apply to export of cotton from, as well as import of cotton into, the so-called Confederate States.

This opinion is of course irrespective of the operation of a blockade upon neutral vessels, and confined to the question of contraband, apart from any other consideration.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 58, No. 59, No. 60, January 26, 1864.

1864

No. 228.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th February instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 30th ultimo respecting the seizure of the British barque "Saxon" by the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers in this case as marked in the margin,* and to request that we would take them into consideration, together with those inclosed in his above-mentioned letter, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th February instant, stating, that with reference to his letter of the 12th instant respecting the case of the "Saxon," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton, and Co. dated the 17th instant, relative to the coals belonging to Messrs. Anderson, Saxon, and Co., which were appropriated at Penguin Island by the United States' ship "Vanderbilt;" and to request that we would take this letter into our consideration, together with those now before us, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that, in conformity with the advice tendered in our Report of the 13th February, Lord Lyons had been instructed to claim on behalf of Messrs. Anderson, Saxon, and Co., full compensation for the value of the coals taken by the "Vanderbilt," as well as for the loss they may have thereby sustained.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Messrs. Anderson, Saxon, and Co. are entitled to full compensation for the coals belonging to them, which were unlawfully taken by the "Vanderbilt," and we are further of opinion that the unlawful act itself ought to be the subject, as we have already had the honour to report, of a substantive remonstrance to the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 229.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th of February instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th of December last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 14, January 22, 1864), inclosing a printed copy of the Judgment of condemnation pronounced by Judge Betts in the case of the "Springbok," and to request that we would take this Judgment into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that as notice had been given that this case was to be brought before the House of Commons on Friday the 12th instant, it would be convenient if your Lordship could be put in possession of our Report on or before that date.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the printed Judgments in the case of the "Springbok," and that we see no reason to depart from the advice which we had the hononr to offer in our former Report, viz., that the Government are not called upon officially to interfere in this matter, but the owners must be left to the usual and proper remedy of an appeal; on the contrary, we are bound to state that a careful perusal of this elaborate and able Judgment, containing the reasons of the Judge, the authorities cited by him in support of it, and the important evidence properly invoked from the cases of the "Stephen Hart" and the "Gertrude" (which we now see for the first time), in which the same parties were concerned, go so far to establish that the cargo of the "Springbok" (containing a considerable portion of contraband) was never really and bonâ fide destined for Nassau, but was either destined merely to call there, or to be immediately transhipped after its arrival there, without breaking bulk and without any previous incorporation into the common stock of that colony, and to proceed to its real destination, being a blockaded port. The complicity of the owners of the ship with the design of the owners of the cargo is, to say the least, so probable on the evidence, that we should find great difficulty in contending that this ship and cargo had not been rightly condemned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Messrs. Sinclair and Co., February ; Ditto, February 3, Private; to Colonial Office, February 5; Colonial Office, February 8; Messrs. Sinclair and Co., February 8, and February 12; Colonial Office, February 12, 1864.

No. 230.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 220, December 28), reporting that the British steamer "Antona" had been condemned in the United States' District Court, on the ground of an attempt to break the blockade of the port of Mobile; and to request that we would take this decision into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience with your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, assuming the printed report of this case to be substantially accurate, the "Antona" appears to have been rightly condemned for attempting to break the blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 231.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 19, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 15th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further letter, dated the 12th instant, from Mr. Crutchett, requesting Her Majesty's Government to reconsider their decision not to interfere in regard to his claim on the Government of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose Mr. Crutchett's former application, and the answer, founded on my above-mentioned Report, which was returned thereto;* and was to request that I would again take this case into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I see any reason to alter my previous opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears upon the face of the petition addressed by Mr. Crutchett to the President, and by the other papers, that Mr. Crutchett has been for a great many years, by residence, by marriage, by occupation, by the investment of his fortune, domiciled in the United States; and I am clearly of opinion that in every sense, except as to political privileges, he must be so considered by the law of England, as well as that of the United States.

That about eight years ago he established on ground which he had purchased sixteen years ago (page 49) a factory, with machinery and necessary appurtenances at Mount Vernon, "in view" (to use the words of his petition to the President, page 5) "of ultimately aiding the building of the 'Washington National Monument,' and restoration of the Home of Washington."

---

* From Mr. Crutchett, January 5; to Mr. Crutchett, January 21, 1864.

1864

That after the battle of Bull's Run this factory and premises were, and continue to be, occupied by the United States' Government as a matter of military necessity.

A correspondence ensues between Mr. Crutchett and the military and civil authorities, the former demanding compensation, estimated at a certain amount, the latter asserting that the premises and machinery have not been damaged, and moreover denying the correctness of the estimate put by Mr. Crutchett upon the value of his factory, and offering what they allege to be ample compensation, namely, a rent of 50 dollars per month, but expressing great doubts (Mr. Camp to Quartermaster Meigs, April 9, 1862, page 38), as to the validity of Mr. Crutchett's title to the property in question, as the estate is encumbered, and creditors claim the rent which the military authorities are willing to pay.

Eventually, however, and after Mr. Crutchett has put his case into his hands of legal advisers, and with some assistance on the part of Lord Lyons, Mr. Crutchett receives, under protest, the 50 dollars per month, reserving to himself the right of taking further action against the United States' Government. He then comes to this country, and asks Her Majesty's Government to interfere officially, and to obtain for him what he considers to be proper compensation for the value of his house, factory, and land at Washington.

I must repeat my opinion that this is not a case in which Her Majesty's Government ought officially to interfere; that Mr. Crutchett must seek his remedy according to the law of the country in which he is domiciled, and in which his property is situated, against the alleged wrongdoers to that property.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Perhaps your Lordship would think it desirable in answering Mr. Crutchett's last letter to recapitulate the heads of this Report.

R. P.

No. 232.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a statement made to the Solicitor to the Treasury by Horace Carrew, late a seaman on board the "Saxon," respecting the murder of the mate of that vessel; and to state to us that your Lordship proposes to send a copy of this paper to Lord Lyons by the mail of this day, but would be glad to have any observations which we might see occasion to offer upon it, for Lord Lyons' instruction.

And that he was further to inquire whether we should wish any direction to be given to the Solicitor to the Treasury for communicating with this seaman.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the deposition of Horace Carrew bears upon the face of it evident signs of truthfulness; and it appears to us to throw more light upon this unhappy transaction than any of the other statements which we had previously seen.

It seems that the "Saxon," when captured, was engaged in taking on board from the rocks at Angra Pequena, with the assistance of some of the men belonging to the Cape schooner "Atlas," a number of bales of skins and cotton wool, which had previously been deposited there evidently for that purpose.

We know, from other sources of information, that these goods had formed part of the "Tuscaloosa's" or "Conrad's" cargo, and that the "Atlas" was a vessel then acting in concert with the "Alabama" and the "Tuscaloosa."

After the prize crew from the "Vanderbilt" had taken possession of the "Saxon," these men from the "Atlas" came off in their boat, bringing fish; and on their asking whether they "might have any meat," the American officer in charge gave the captain of the "Saxon" leave to let them have some.

Upon this permission they proceeded to act in such a manner as to make it apparent that they intended to take all the meat (of which there seems to have been a considerable quantity) out of the ship; and then, on the officer in charge saying that they should have no more, the captain of the "Saxon," both by word and act, openly resisted his orders, and for so doing was justifiably put under arrest.

It was during the excitement which immediately followed this event, that Mr. Gray, the second mate, came forward, and that the United States' officer Donaghan, having three times (with great rapidity) ordered him to "go down," threatening, finally, to shoot him if he did not, put his left hand on him, and pushed him, and then, as Mr. Gray fell back, "wheeling round to save himself as he fell, and turning his face towards Donaghan," the fatal shot was fired.

It will not surprise us if the United States' Government should look upon this narrative, as tending, in its general effect, to excuse Donaghan from the guilt of deliberate murder. It may, perhaps, be contended that the indications of resistance on the part of the captain of the "Saxon," which had led to his being placed under restraint, might have caused the action of Mr. Gray to be misinterpreted; and what immediately followed when the senior American officer in charge called out, "Draw swords!" and when the prize crew drew their cutlasses, and presented their pistols at the breasts of the men who had gathered round Mr. Gray's body, asking "whether they wanted to take the ship back," may be said to be consistent with this view of the case.

If any such view as this (which of course is not one to be suggested on the part of Her Majesty's Government), should be taken of this evidence by the Government of the United States, the proper answer (as it seems to us) would be, that as there does not appear to have been any reason for supposing that the "Alabama" was then in the neighbourhood, the apprehension of any attempt at rescue, in the presence of the "Vanderbilt," could not be seriously entertained; and as no violence was actually attempted or threatened against the persons of any of the prize crew on board, the misbehaviour of the captain would not, in our judgment, afford any admissible excuse for the employment of deadly weapons, even if the demeanour and conduct of Mr. Gray had been much more equivocal than they were.

Be this as it may, we think it would be right to all parties that the evidence of so fair and honest a witness as Horace Carrew should be forthcoming on the inquiry which is about to be held; and we think, therefore, that it would be well for the Solicitor of the Treasury to be instructed to make such arrangements as will enable his evidence to be taken on that inquiry.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 233.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Consul Archibald (No. 16), inclosing a copy of the Judgment of the Circuit Court, reversing the decision of the District Court in the cases of the "Alliance" and "Gondar," which formed the subject of the Law Officers' Reports of the 25th of June, 1862; and Mr. Hammond was to call our attention to the case of the "Empress," contained in Judge Nelson's decision inclosed in Mr. Archibald's above mentioned despatch.

With reference to the above we have the honour to report—

That we are glad to be informed that the Court has reconsidered its powers as to costs and damages, and does not adhere to its opinion in the "Empress," so far as relates to the award of costs and damages against the officers making the capture, on which point that Judgment was, in our opinion, erroneous; although it was perfectly correct in deciding that the Prize Court could not award costs or damages against the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 234.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 15th instant and its inclosures from the Admiralty, reporting the detention of the barque "Tuscaloosa" by the British authorities at Simon's Bay on her return to that anchorage on the 26th of December last, and requesting to be informed, with reference to the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 8th instant respecting that vessel, what instructions should be given to Sir Baldwin Walker; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the "Tuscaloosa" ought in the particular circumstances of the case to be restored to the Lieutenant of the Confederate States who lately commanded her. In our last Report we expressly stated that, inasmuch as neither the Captain of the "Alabama" nor the officer in charge of the "Tuscaloosa" had received any intimation of the altered course which Her Majesty's Government might be about to adopt respecting her, good faith would require that she (or any other vessel under similar circumstances*) should not be seized without due notice being previously given. We think that the protest of Lieutenant Low is well founded in this respect. We are of opinion that when the "Tuscaloosa" is restored, Lieutenant Low should be duly warned that if she re-enters any of Her Majesty's ports or harbours she will be liable (unless Her Majesty's Government should see any reason to the contrary) to be detained and restored to her original owners, as a prize vessel captured by a ship fitted out and manned in violation of the laws made for the preservation of British neutrality, and brought into British waters in contravention of Her Majesty's orders. We may refer to our last Report on this subject, as to the circumstances which might make a difference in the proper mode of treating such a vessel. A condemnation in a Prize Court, or a regular and independent Commission as a public ship of war direct from the Confederate Government would (in our opinion) certainly have that effect.

If, in any future case, there should be reason to entertain serious doubt as to the true character of any vessel which, having been captured by any Confederate ship fitted out in or manned from this country in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, has afterwards been employed as a vessel of war, and brought as such into a British port (or if there should be probable reason for supposing that such vessel, after previous recognition as a ship of war, has come in inadvertently, without knowledge of Her Majesty's orders), we think the most advisable course will be to order her immediate departure, with a similar notice as to the consequences of her continuance or return within British jurisdiction; and not to proceed to make an actual seizure, until such notice has been given, and disregarded.

We think it necessary to add, that the suggestion made in our Report of the 19th October last (as to the course which it might have been most consistent with Her Majesty's dignity, and most proper for the vindication of her territorial rights, to pursue in such a case as that of the "Tuscaloosa") is to be understood only with reference to prizes taken by the "Alabama," or by any other ship known to have been fitted out or manned in violation of the laws of Great Britain. If it should happen that any duly commissioned ship of war, either of the Federals or of the Confederates, not known to have been fitted out or manned in violation of the laws of Great Britain, should bring any Prize taken by her into British waters, in contravention of Her Majesty's orders against bringing in prizes, the proper course (in such a case) would be, not to seize or restore the prize, but simply to require the immediate departure both of the captured and of the capturing vessel. It is only when the capturing vessel has been fitted out or manned in violation of our own laws that the right or obligation of taking possession of the prize, for the purpose of making restitution, supersedes the general obligation to respect the public commission, and the actual possession of the capturing vessel.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* i.e., a vessel which had been on a previous occasion deliberately, and with knowledge of the circumstances, admitted into Her Majesty's ports as being a recognized ship of war, and not a prize.—R. P.

No. 235.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 30th ultimo, from the Board of Trade, inclosing an application from Mr. John Mulholland, requesting Her Majesty's Government to obtain from the United States' Government permission for the removal of certain cotton stated to belong to British subjects, from the so-called Confederate States; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it would be proper that Her Majesty's Government should make the application which is requested to the United States' Government.

The facts that the cotton represents the dividend of a railway due to a foreign and neutral creditor, the contract having been entered into while the territory occupied by the railway was under the authority of the United States, and that a portion of the railway is now in the occupation of and used by the United States' authorities, afford sufficient reasons for the application; and it may reasonably be hoped that one alternative, at least, of it may be granted, namely, the protection of the cotton from belligerent seizure or destruction.

We think it necessary, however, to add, that this application can only be addressed to the equitable consideration of the United States' Government, and cannot be made as a matter of right.

The case is one of Confederate property, transferred to the British creditors of the Company after the commencement of the war, and still remaining (as it has always been) within the territory of the enemies of the United States.

On general principles it is not competent for a belligerent, by a transfer made during war under such circumstances, to confer upon the subject of transfer a title to the special protection and privileges of neutral property.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 236.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 15, January 12), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Mr. Seward on the subject of an order of the Navy Department, published in the "National Republican" newspaper, containing regulations respecting captures made by "armed vessels in the service of the United States, under circumstances which would entitle a vessel of the navy to prize money."

That your Lordship thinks it right we should see these papers, and that if we should have any observations to offer, your Lordship requests we would furnish your Lordship with them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this correspondence, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as we are able to understand the explanations of Mr. Welles and Mr. Seward, the United States' Government have armed vessels in the service of the United States not belonging to the navy, and not entitled to the privileges of commissioned cruizers, and these vessels are "authorized to make prizes" from belligerents, not from neutrals. But for the statements in Mr. Seward's note to Lord Lyons of 4th January, 1864, that "there are no private armed or non-commissioned vessels," and that the vessels referred to are either commissioned through the United States' War Department as transports, or through the United States' Treasury for the purposes of the revenue, we should have understood them to be a species of privateers with limited powers. It is impossible not to foresee that serious questions may arise from such an anomalous class of vessels, which will probably seize as a belligerent some neutral vessel; but we cannot say that the Act in question is beyond the power of the United States' Government, or that, as explained, it is intended to affect (whatever may be its practical result) neutral States.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 237.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 8th and 20th instant, respecting the case of the "Tuscaloosa," prize to the Confederate steamer "Alabama," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our consideration, the draft of a despatch to Lord Lyons, founded on those Reports; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would state to your Lordship our opinion at our earliest convenience on this draft, particularly with reference to the bearing that it may have in the discussion with the Government of the United States in regard to the case of the "Alabama," and also as to the expediency of entering into the question with Lord Lyons at such length.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken the liberty to make certain alterations in and additions to some passages in the draft despatch, which we venture to recommend to your Lordship's adoption; and that the despatch so modified may, in our opinion, properly be sent, and that we think the adoption of the course thereby announced on the part of Her Majesty's Government will not be an admission of, and will not tend to involve this country in, any liability for captures by the "Alabama," not brought into British ports.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 238.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, from which we would learn the particulars of a question which has arisen with regard to the proposed issue to Mr. Dumas, as the London agent of Messrs. R. Wood and Son of New York, of a British licence to collect, for a period of five years, certain phosphatic substances found on the Island of Sombrero in the West Indies; and Mr. Hammond was to call our attention to the letter from the Colonial Office of the 28th ultimo, from which it appears that the Commissioners of Land and Emigration have been instructed to take the necessary steps for issuing the licence, which has been approved by the Attorney and Solicitor-General: and Mr. Hammond was to state that as it is proposed that your Lordship should address to Mr. Adams a communication respecting the reservation of the United States of any claim that State may pretend to have over Sombrero, your Lordship requests we will peruse the correspondence, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, and more particularly as to the terms in which we would advise that the communication to Mr. Adams should be couched.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have perused the correspondence in this matter, and have the honour to report—

That we think your Lordship might properly state to Mr. Adams that Her Majesty has granted a lease of the island for certain purposes, and under certain conditions, to the agent of Messrs. Wood and Co. of New York.

That your Lordship is aware that the United States' Government desire to reserve to themselves the right of calling in question (if they should think fit hereafter to do so), the title of Her Majesty to that island; and that on the present occasion it is mutually understood between the two Governments that the acquiescence of the United States' Government in this particular act of Her Majesty's Government is not to prejudice or affect any claim which the United States may hereafter think fit to advance with respect to the island.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 239.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr Hammond's letter of the 10th of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches as marked in the margin,* respecting the case of Lieutenant Rooke, an officer in Her Majesty's service, who has, under the circumstances therein set forth, been arrested at New York, and confined in Fort Lafayette; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That on the present evidence we are of course unable to form any decided opinion upon the case, but enough appears to show that regard being had to the commission he holds, and to Her Majesty's Proclamation, Lieutenant Rooke has acted with great indiscretion and imprudence, of which it is only just to say he appears to be himself aware.

If his statements may be relied on (which we see no reason to doubt), he seems to us to have already suffered as much as his fault deserves; and unless the contents of the letters of which he was the bearer should turn out to have been of real political importance, his prolonged detention as a prisoner would, in our opinion, be a very harsh proceeding on the part of the United States' Government.

We think, however, that no further steps can be taken until Mr. Seward has again made a report to Lord Lyons upon the subject, especially as it is reasonable to conclude that he will do so in a short period of time.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 240.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th February instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 12th and 13th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would inform you whether, supposing a vessel belonging to the Confederate Government, and which, accordingly, was not a British vessel, having no British owner, was captured by a Federal man-of-war, and the fact of the Confederate ownership was proved in an American Court, the crew could be claimed as British subjects, and were not prisoners of war according to usual international law.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th February instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 12th and 13th instant, and to his letter of the 19th, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 73, 74, 75, and 85), in the cases of the "Banshee," and of Mr. Patrick Hamilton; and to request that we would take these papers into our early consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the instructions which your Lordship was about to address to Lord Lyons, in conformity with our Report of the 13th of February, and the answer which you were about to return to Mr. Adams, in conformity with our Report of the 12th of February, should in any degree be influenced by the further reports from Lord Lyons then transmitted to us.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 930, December 31, 1863; No. 6, January 4; No. 22, January 12; and No. 56, January 26, 1864.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these matters into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if a vessel belonging to the Confederate Government were captured by the Federal belligerent, and on board of her were found British subjects, not merely passengers, but employed in connection with the vessel and her cargo, in circumstances which rendered it practically impossible that they should be ignorant of the ownership of the vessel, we are of opinion that such persons might be lawfully treated as prisoners of war; and that, primâ facie, the Federal belligerent would have a right to consider them as such. But we think Her Majesty's Government would have a just right to remonstrate if British subjects engaged as seamen on board a ship ostensibly British, and which they have had every reason to suppose to be really and bonâ fide such, should be treated by the United States' Government as enemies, merely on the ground of the subsequent discovery of a concealed interest of the Confederate Government in such vessel.

With respect to the reports of Lord Lyons in the cases of the "Banshee" and of Patrick Hamilton, we do not think that the letters which your Lordship proposes to address to Lord Lyons and Mr. Adams ought to be influenced by these further reports now transmitted to us. If these reports ought to produce any effect upon the proposed letters, it would be that of strengthening the expressions in which your Lordship would insist that no exigence of the belligerent would warrant him in departing from the observance of his obligations towards the neutral.

In matters of maritime prize, the relations of belligerent and neutral are, for the most part, clearly established; they cannot be disturbed without great danger. Not to speak of other and more serious results, it is obvious that, if one belligerent depart from the course of established usage and right towards the neutral, he cannot complain if the neutral should follow his example, and attempt to restore the just equilibrium properly incident to his position, by making a change in his relations to the other belligerent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 241.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 27.)

Doctors' Commons, February 27, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a Memorial from Mr. John Mirian Wilson, claiming the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain the restitution with competent damages of certain property of which he states that he has been unjustly despoiled in the State of Pennsylvania; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take Mr. Wilson's case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer should be sent to Mr. Wilson, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in a matter relating to landed property in Pennsylvania, and the decisions of the local or other tribunal respecting it. Mr. Wilson must seek his remedy in the Courts of the country in which that property is situated, for any injury that may have been inflicted upon him with regard to it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 242.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 27, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us letters dated the 25th instant from the Admiralty and Colonial Office, inclosing further accounts received from the Cape of Good Hope respecting the case of the "Tuscaloosa," recently seized by the British authorities in Simon's Bay.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to return to us the draft of the proposed instruction to Lord Lyons which formed the subject of our Report of the 22nd instant, and to request that we would take into our consideration the further accounts now received, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, whether they contain anything to render necessary an alteration in the proposed instruction to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers now laid before us do not, in our opinion, require any alteration to be made in the proposed instruction to Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(In the temporary absence of the Solicitor-General),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 243.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 1, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th of February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 94, February 9), inclosing copies of a further correspondence with Mr. Seward, and of a despatch from Mr. Consul Archibald respecting the case of the "Saxon," and the violent death of Mr. James Gray, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that the deposition of Horace Carrew, which formed the subject of our Report of the 20th February, was sent to Lord Lyons by the previous Saturday's mail, and that Carrew himself would sail for New York that evening, and also that your Lordship was anxious to have sent Aitcheson back to America also, but it was doubtful whether this would be possible.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideratian, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the course pursued by Lord Lyons has been right. It is certainly most desirable that Lord Lyons should in no way recognize the court-martial as a tribunal by whose decision Her Majesty's Government can be bound, though, on the other hand, we think that Her Majesty's Government ought to do whatever is in their power to facilitate the proper conduct of that inquiry by the United States' Government, and to cause all such evidence as they are able to command to be forthcoming for that purpose. The observations of Mr. Consul Archibald on this point appear to us very sensible.

It would seem to us expedient that an early opportunity should be taken by Lord Lyons of stating to Mr. Seward that his (Lord Lyons') instructions are, to represent that Her Majesty's Government, while willing to wait for the answer of the United States' Government such a reasonable time as may enable that Government to inquire into the circumstances of the case in whatever way they think best, with which Her Majesty's Government can have no concern, nevertheless feel, and hope the United States' Government will feel, that the murder of a British subject on board a British vessel is a subject which demands the promptest reparation that can be made.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 244.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 3.)

Doctors' Commons, March 2, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,* respecting the complaint of Mr. H. A. Lewers, a British subject resident at Missouri, that certain property belonging to him has been seized by the military authorities of the United States; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter.

Mr. Lewers is domiciled in the United States. He complains that certain portions of his property in Missouri have been unlawfully taken from him by certain soldiers of the United States. He has received every assistance from Her Majesty's Consul that could be rendered to him in the matter; and there appears to have been no indisposition on the part of the United States' authorities to do justice. But there has been, as would probably be the case amid the irregularities and troubles of a civil war, no identification of the individual soldiers, or the companies, whom he charges as having been concerned in the unlawful act.

I entirely agree with the advice offered Mr. Lewers by Mr. Consul Wilkins, namely, that he has no privilege over American citizens, and that he must ascertain and adopt the course which they pursue in claims like his own.

It certainly is not a case which calls for the special intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 245.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 2, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, with reference to our Report of the 9th February, a further despatch and its inclosures received from Lord Lyons (No. 77, February 1) respecting the case of the "Chesapeake;" and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations and suggestions as might occur to us on perusing them.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship at the same time to acquaint us that copies of our previous Reports on the matter had been sent to the Colonial Office for such directions as the Duke of Newcastle might see occasion to give to the British authorities in North America thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 20th February, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, in connection with the papers then before us, a further letter dated the 26th ultimo from the Colonial Office respecting the case of the "Chesapeake."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we entirely agree with the observations of Lord Lyons upon the letter of Mr. Seward.

Mr. Seward must be well aware that so far as the extradition of the men (whom he assumes to be pirates) is concerned, it would have been improper, and was in fact impossible, for the Government of Nova Scotia to proceed otherwise than in the course pointed out by law; and he cannot seriously intend to suggest that the Provincial Government charged with the duty of vindicating Her Majesty's territorial rights, when invaded in a manner for which the United States' Government have since found it necessary to apologize, could adopt or ratify the unauthorized exercise of power over the persons found on board the "Chesapeake" (even to the extent of putting and keeping them in irons), by which the invasion of Her Majesty's rights was accompanied and aggravated.

So far as the vessel is concerned, although we have already expressed our opinion that she might have been delivered up without judicial proceedings, we do not think that the United States' Government have any present right to complain, especially as the general practice of the United States themselves is to investigate the title to ships of which restitution is claimed from the persons found in possession of them, through the action of their Courts. Probably the best answer to the concluding part of Mr. Seward's letter would be, that it is unnecessary to discuss by anticipation the question to which it refers; inasmuch as Her Majesty's Government feel confident that any proceedings which may be taken before the Judicial Tribunals of Nova Scotia will result (if they have not already done so) in the restitution of the vessel, unless there should prove to be any legal and valid reason to the contrary.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Mr. Fortescue, March 4, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 126; Mr. Fortescue, December 14; to Lord Lyons, No. 631, 1863; Lord Lyons, Nos. 35 and 92, 1864.

No. 246.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th ultimo from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of a correspondence which had passed between the Governor of Newfoundland and the Duke of Newcastle in regard to an application made to the Governor by the Consul of the United States in that Colony, that in case the "Alabama" or the "Chesapeake" should proceed to Newfoundland they should respectively be detained, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any further instructions which should be addressed to the Governor of Newfoundland on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Governor of Newfoundland should be informed, that though it is competent to the Vice-Admiralty Court to try questions of piracy committed on the high seas; yet, in the event of the alleged pirates being claimed under the Extradition Treaty,* he must deal with the matter in the manner provided by the Statute 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76. No other instructions appear to be needed. There is clearly no ground on which the "Alabama" can be ordered to be detained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 247.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 8th, 20th, and 27th ultimo, respecting the case of the "Tuscaloosa," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 2nd instant from the Admiralty, inclosing two drafts of instructions which have been drawn up for the guidance of Her Majesty's naval officers, in regard to belligerent cruizers and their prizes and their treatment in the ports of Her Majesty's dominions, and that as the Board of Admiralty are in some doubt, owing to the difficult nature of the subject, as to the exact purport of the instructions which should be sent, they request to be informed which of the two draft instructions would meet the views of the Law Officers of the Crown.

---

[*] i.e., as having committed the crime within the jurisdiction of the United States.—R. P.

1864

Mr. Layard was accordingly to request that we would take these two draft instructions into our consideration and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that either of the two draft instructions, as sent to us, would meet our views.

We have, therefore, endeavoured to embody our views in a separate paper, marked C, which is sent herewith, and which, if adopted, may be preceded by the two first and followed by the two last paragraphs of the paper A.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 248.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th and 13th January, respecting the case of the British ships "Dashing Wave" and "Volant," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers and the draft of the instruction to Lord Lyons founded on our above-mentioned Reports, the accompanying further papers, as marked in the margin,* which had since been received; and to request that we would take the inclosed correspondence into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer upon the cases of these vessels.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter and its inclosure from Messrs. Gallichan and Co. respecting the case of the "Volant;" and to request that they might be added to the other papers respecting captures in the Rio Grande, on which our opinion was asked in his letter of the 23rd February.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to add that copies of Messrs. Gallichan's letter and its inclosure would be sent to Lord Lyons by the mail of that evening.

Mr. Layard was also pleased, in a note dated the 2nd of March instant, to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further despatch from Lord Lyons respecting the British vessels seized off the Rio Grande.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed letter of your Lordship to Lord Lyons should be sent (if not already sent) according to the draft as now written.

The further facts in these papers do not affect the general principles laid down in that letter. And it is, we think, desirable that the instructions respecting the "Sir W. Peel" should not be altered.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To Lord Lyons, No. 50; Admiralty, February 1; Messrs. Bennett and Wake, February 13; Lord Lyons, No. 70.

No. 249.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the drafts of a letter to Mr. Adams and Lord Lyons respecting the treatment to which British subjects taken on board vessels captured for breach of blockade are subjected by the United States' authorities. That these drafts are founded upon our Reports of the 12th, 13th, and 26th ultimo; and he was to request that we would take them into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether they are right and proper to be sent.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that your Lordship hoped we should be able to furnish your Lordship with our Report in time to admit of the instruction to Lord Lyons being sent off by the mail of this evening.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these proposed letters into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed letters to Mr. Adams and Lord Lyons are fit and proper to be sent. We have suggested a slight insertion in the letter to Mr. Adams.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 250.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an instruction which, in conformity with our Report of the 18th February, your Lordship proposes to address to Lord Lyons respecting the case of Mr. James McHugh, and respecting Mr. Seward's statement that vessels freighted by Messrs. Fraser, Trenholme, and Co., will henceforth be presumed to be war transports of the Confederate Government until the contrary is shown, and to request that we would take the proposed instruction into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed letter of your Lordship to Lord Lyons is, with the slight alterations which we have ventured to make, proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 251.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 18th ultimo, and to his other letter of the 23rd ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 93, February 9), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, setting forth the circumstances under which it has been determined, as a temporary system, that "persons captured on entering the insurgent line with munitions and supplies, under whatever flag, should not be at once discharged as heretofore, upon a superficial examination, on the ground of their claim to neutrality, but shall be detained in military custody until a full and thorough investigation of their cases can be made," and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have in our former Reports expressed at length our opinion as to the unlawfulness of treating British subjects captured on board vessels breaking the blockade as prisoners of war: to that opinion we steadily adhere, and it is not affected by the character of the cargo on board the vessel in which they are captured. The extract from Mr. Seward's letter (contained in the letter of Mr. Hammond to us) is ambiguous and unsatisfactory in its language; and while, on the one hand, it is not unreasonable that in cases of real doubt as to whether a particular person be a neutral or an enemy, time should be allowed for necessary investigation, it is, on the other hand, not to be conceded that a system shall be adopted by the belligerent towards the neutral which is to have the practical effect, though for a limited period, of placing neutral subjects in the same condition as those of the enemy. That is not the penalty which the law of nations has affixed to the breaking of a blockade, or to the importation of contraband; and Her Majesty's Government must refuse altogether to assent or consent to any alterations of this law. This statement we think cannot be too plainly made, consistently, of course, with proper courtesy. As to the rest of Mr. Seward's letter, it consists of a recapitulation of complaints to which answers have been already addressed; and with respect to the "Chesapeake," the statement is extremely inaccurate, and unaccompanied by any recognition of the lawless acts committed by an officer bearing the commission of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 252.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, with reference to our Report of the 29th of September last, a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 65), inclosing correspondence and other papers respecting the case of the "Echo;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are glad to find that the opinion of the Counsel of the "Echo" so entirely agrees with that which we, upon a much more imperfect acquaintance with the facts of the case, had been led to form. We think it is only reasonable to expect that the partial miscarriage of the Judge will be corrected by the Superior Court.

We think, however, that the present case does not present any features which should induce your Lordship to depart from what should be the general rule observed by Her Majesty's Government, namely, that of not interfering officially in these cases until the remedy of the Appeal Courts has been exhausted.

We presume that in this case the right of appeal still exists, and has not been lost through lapse of time, or otherwise. If we should be mistaken in this supposition, we should desire to be informed of the reason why no appeal was made within the time, or in the manner, allowed by the law and practice of the United States' Courts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 253.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th of September last, respecting the case of the steamer "Blanche," otherwise "General Rusk," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 48, January 26), inclosing a copy of the answer returned by the United States' Government to the note which was addressed to that Government, in conformity with our Report; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That we regret to perceive the apparent determination of the United States' Government to refuse the redress due to the Governments of Great Britain and Spain in this important case.

After carefully considering Mr. Seward's last letter to Lord Lyons, we see no reason to recall or qualify any part of the observations made in our two former Reports, of the 7th of July and the 16th of September, 1863, in which the whole facts were reviewed, and to which now we beg leave to refer. We have but little more to add to those observations.

Mr. Seward rests his answer to the demand of Her Majesty's Government mainly on the allegation that the "Blanche," at the time of her destruction on the 7th of October, 1862, was American, and not British-owned. She was, however, then sailing in neutral waters, where the British flag was not liable by the law of nations to aggression, visit, or search, with British papers, and under the British flag. Her registered owner was Mr. George Wigg, a natural-born British subject, residing at Liverpool; his title was by a regular bill of sale, dated 31st July, 1863, and executed at Havana by the duly constituted attorney of W. L. Smith, who appeared as sole owner on the 29th of May preceding, upon the permanent register of the port of Galveston, in Texas. The transfer was expressed to be made for a valuable consideration in money; and no evidence whatever tending to impeach the bona fides of the purchase by Mr. Wigg has ever been brought to the knowledge of Her Majesty's Government. The ship, therefore, being regularly documented as a British ship, and sailing as such under the British flag, within neutral protection, has been, and is now, recognized in that character, both by the British and by the Spanish Governments.

What evidence, then, is produced or offered by the United States' Government to show that she was (as they allege) a Confederate or United States' vessel, fraudulently transferred, and navigated under false colours, for the purpose of concealing her real ownership? If such a fact were indeed established, Her Majesty's Government could claim no redress, because no injury would have been done to any British subject. But the burden of displacing the prima facie title, shown by the flag and papers, and by the recognition of both the neutral Governments (which, until displaced by contrary evidence, would be sufficient for every legal purpose in every court of justice throughout the world), lies upon the United States' Government; and it appears to us that they have, as yet, neither produced, nor offered to produce, any evidence whatever having the slightest real tendency to displace it.

The only new fact now added by Mr. Seward to the former evidence consists in a copy of the registry of the "General Rusk" (afterwards called the "Blanche"), on the permanent register of New Orleans, dated the 8th April, 1857, by which it appears that she was then registered as belonging to "the Southern Steam-ship Company of New Orleans." We are at a loss to perceive how the fact that five years before the same ship was registered at New Orleans as the property of a different owner can prove that a British title, derived from W. L. Smith, who, on the 29th May, 1862, was the registered owner of the same ship on the permanent registry of Galveston, is fraudulent and void. Upon the history of the vessel between April 1857 and May 1862 no light is thrown.

Mr. Seward does not now revert to the untenable position which he seemed formerly inclined to maintain, as to the necessary invalidity of all Confederate captures from the United States, and of all sentences of condemnation by Confederate Prize Courts; nor does he enable us so much as to conjecture what are the alleged wrongful proceedings on account of which the apparent title of the Confederate owner in 1862, from whom this ship was purchased by Mr. Wigg, is considered by the United States' Government to be liable to impeachment.

1864

Our difficulty in following Mr. Seward's argument on this point is not diminished by the fact that for a considerable period after the separation of the Confederate States from the United States (until its capture by the forces of the United States), New Orleans, where this vessel appears to have been registered in April 1857, was itself a principal city of the Confederate States. Still less does he show that the purchase by Mr. Wigg was in any sense colourable or fraudulent.

We can, therefore, only recommend that Her Majesty's Government should firmly maintain the position hitherto assumed by them, at all events until some more satisfactory disproof of the title of the British owner to this vessel shall be given on the part of the United States' Government; and that they should continue, as hitherto, to act in concert with the Spanish Government for this purpose.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 254.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that Her Majesty's confidential servants having fully considered the matters relating to the case of the "Tuscaloosa," on which we reported on the 8th and 21st of February, are disposed to come to the conclusion that it would be more desirable to conform the communication to Lord Lyons, of the original draft of which we signified our approval in our Reports of the 22nd and 27th ultimo, to the terms of the draft which Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose; but that before any formal decision is taken, your Lordship would be glad to receive our opinion on the draft, which, if concurred in by us, will also form the basis of the Instructions to be addressed to Her Majesty's Colonial and Naval authorities.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this draft, and have the honour to report—

That we presume Her Majesty's Government, after considering the nature of the instructions contained in the Duke of Newcastle's despatch to the Governor of the Cape, of the 4th of November last, have come to the conclusion that cases similar to that of the "Tuscaloosa" (except as to the special grounds on which she is now to be released) are to be dealt with, if they should again occur, according to those instructions.

Assuming this, we think that the despatch, as altered, is unobjectionable.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 255.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the despatches therein referred to,* a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia,† inclosing a list of the British vessels brought for adjudication before the United States' District Prize Court which sits in that city, and containing remarks respecting the proceedings of that Court in these cases; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear that Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia complains of the injustice of any of these decisions. That the practice of not printing or publishing reports of the sentences of this Prize Court is certainly very inconvenient, and may tend to cause much embarrassment and difficulty, in cases where the justice of the sentence is disputed, and it becomes necessary to examine the reasons of the Judge. It is to be remembered that in the case of the "Princess Royal," it would appear that the cause was undefended; and of course the presumption is strong that the vessel and cargo were rightly condemned. There are words in the sentence which might tend to the inference that enemies' goods, found on board neutral vessels, are condemned by this Court. This may, however, very possibly not be the case; but it might be worth while to inquire of Her Majesty's Consul at Philadelphia whether that principle has been acted upon in the condemnation of the cargoes of any of these vessels. It would also be desirable to ascertain whether the vessels of any other nation besides those of Great Britain (some few American cases are adverted to) have been condemned in this Court.

It only remains to remark that the number of vessels brought into this Court tends to rebut the assertion that the blockade is de facto inefficient.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 256.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 99, February 12), respecting the treatment to which British subjects and others are subjected who are confined in Fort Lafayette, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in remonstrating with the United States' Government against this treatment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it would be proper to instruct Lord Lyons to call the attention of Mr. Seward to the sufferings, mental and bodily, which the condition of the prison, as described by Mr. Consul Archibald, must inflict upon subjects of Her Majesty confined upon charges of political offences. With the single exception of not being in irons, persons accused of the most atrocious crimes would not be differently treated.

It appears, indeed, that Lord Lyons has already taken some steps in this matter, and probably all that it may be necessary to take; but it would be in any case desirable that Her Majesty's Government should express an opinion to Lord Lyons that the matter is one as to which a friendly State is entitled to offer a grave and temperate remonstrance.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 257.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 84, February 5), respecting the case of Mr. John Ring, and the conduct of Mr. Butterfield, the British Vice-Consul at Key West, in relation thereto.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's

---

* Mr. Kortright, No. 11, March 11; No. 21, May 6; No. 25, June 16, 1862.

† Mr. Kortright, No. 8, January 2, 1863.

1864

letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 18th ultimo, inclosing papers respecting the conduct of Mr. Butterfield, the British Vice-Consul at Key West, in the case of John Ring, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note, dated the 8th instant, and its inclosures from Mr. Adams, complaining of the improper interference of Mr. Butterfield in the case of a native American named Edward T. Rich, and to request that we would take this case into consideration with the case of John Ring, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have the honour to agree in the opinion of Lord Lyons that Mr. Vice-Consul Butterfield's conduct in the case of John Ring has been proper, and has not in any respect merited animadversion. The protection of British seamen is primâ facie within the province of the Vice-Consul of the port; and in this case we think there were fully sufficient grounds for his intervention, nor can we discover anything at all unbecoming or disrespectful in the tone or manner of his letters to Admiral Bailey. The explanations, since given, while they show some probable grounds for the belief of the United States' authorities that Ring either was, or had acted as, a naturalized citizen of the United States, are still consistent with the fact that he was by birth a British subject. It is, in our opinion, impossible to admit the position assumed in Mr. Seward's letter of the 28th January last, that the British Consuls are to delay making any representations in favour of prisoners claiming the rights of British subjects, until they are provided with evidence sufficient to establish their title to that character, independent of the declarations of the prisoners themselves. Nor could there well be a less favourable case for such an assumption than that of the master of a captured British vessel, whose right to communicate with the British Vice-Consul for the purpose of his defence in the Prize Court was not denied. With respect to the case of Edward T. Rich, mentioned in Admiral Bailey's letter of the 29th January last, and in the communication made by Mr. Adams to your Lordship upon the 8th instant, we think it will be proper to ask for an explanation from Mr. Butterfield.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 258.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers of which a list was annexed respecting the claim of Mr. W. H. Ross on the Government of the United States, on account of certain property near Washington belonging to him having been taken possession of for military purposes by their officers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive from the drafts of instructions to Lord Lyons, the view which, after consultation with the late Queen's Advocate,* Her Majesty's Government took of this case, and that we should also perceive from the last letter of Mr. Ross how it now stands; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with view taken upon this subject by the late Queen's Advocate. The case of Mr. Ross appears to be one of considerable hardship, but it is of importance that the principle upon which we have had the honour to advise your Lordship with respect to this and to similar cases should not be departed from, namely, that British subjects who have purchased landed property in a foreign State must have recourse to the laws of that country for redress on account of injuries done to that property, and must not rely, in this matter, upon the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government. We think, however, that consistently with the observance of this principle, Lord Lyons might be instructed again to use his friendly offices (as he may see opportunity) with the United

---

* Reports dated June 17, 1861, and January 27, 1862.

States' Government, in order to obtain the arrears of rent which appear to be clearly due to Mr. Ross for the military occupation of his property and the amount of damages (23,539 dollars 45 cents) certified by Brigadier-General Sherman; and at the same time to mention that as the Indemnity Bill (to which Mr. Seward on a former occasion referred his Lordship) is for the present at least laid aside, Mr. Ross' just claim for general compensation remains unsatisfied. We think an answer to this effect should be sent to the letter of Mr. Ross.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 259.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Doctors' Commons, March 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 27th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,* a further letter from Mr. John Mirian Wilson,† requesting that the decision come to by Her Majesty's Government with regard to his claim on account of certain property in Pennsylvania may be reconsidered; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer to be returned to Mr. Wilson's further application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have considered Mr. Wilson's further letter, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that an answer should be sent to Mr. Wilson to the effect that his case has been again carefully considered, and that your Lordship is again advised that Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in the matter of his memorial; that he must seek redress for alleged injuries inflicted upon him with respect to his property, from the laws and in the courts of the United States, in which country, according to his own statement, having left England in 1825, he has been "settled" since 1827.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 260.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 16, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's note of the 5th of March instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 23rd ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further despatch from Lord Lyons relative to the case of J. McHugh (No. 103, February 12, 1864).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That these further papers do not affect the Report which we have already had the honour to make to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Wilson, February 22 and February 27; to Mr. Wilson, March 3, 1864.

† Mr. Wilson, March 4, 1864.

1864

No. 261.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 17, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th January last, he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 23, February 2), inclosing a certified copy of the evidence on which the "Stephen Hart" was condemned, and to request that we would take this evidence into consideration and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose for our perusal a despatch from Mr. Archibald, inclosing copies of the formal decrees of condemnation in the cases of the "Antona" and "Banshee."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence now laid before us confirms the opinion which we had formed on perusing the sentence, that this vessel was rightly condemned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 262.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 12th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for our consideration the accompanying further despatch from Lord Lyons, respecting the case of the "Saxon" (No. 142, February 29, 1864).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this further despatch, and have the honour to report—

That although our Report, in reply to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, has not yet been made, we have thought it expedient not to defer, on that account, an answer to the present communication.

That we presume the trial of the United States' officer by a court-martial, for the killing of Her Majesty's subject, Mr. J. Gray, is the mode of trial by which an United States' officer would be tried for the alleged murder of a subject of the United States under similar circumstances; and, if so, we are of opinion that, at present, Her Majesty's Government have reason to be satisfied with the step taken by the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 263.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 29th of August, 26th of November, and 4th of December last, respecting the case of the "Victor," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and with other correspondence which has since passed on the subject, two despatches from Lord Lyons, the one (No. 47, January 26) inclosing copies of the Reports received by the United States' authorities respecting the cruel treatment which the master, mate, and engineer of the "Victor" were stated to have undergone at Key West, and the other (No. 95, February 9) transmitting a copy of a note from Mr. Seward declining to release the "Victor," pending the Appeal to the Supreme Court; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the release of the "Victor," we have nothing further to add to the observations contained in our former Reports;

That, although there is a passage in Colonel Hood's letter which, taken by itself, might lead to the conclusion that the crew of the "Victor" who were detained for examination "were treated as prisoners," yet, on comparing this passage with other portions of the letter, it appears to be distinctly denied that they were treated "as prisoners of war," or as "felons," and maintained that they were detained in close confinement for the purpose only of being examined as witnesses, without previous communication with each other, and were released after the lapse of three days; and on this assumption we do not recommend your Lordship to instruct Lord Lyons to prefer any complaint on this head to the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 264.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 21.)

Doctors' Commons, March 19, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th March instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 20th of August and 16th of November last, respecting the case of Mr. R. Atkin, the master of the "Dennis Hill," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 29th ultimo from Mr. Atkin, in which he requests that his case may be reconsidered; and to request that I would again take Mr. Atkin's case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any further observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have carefully re-considered all the facts and circumstances stated in the papers laid before me, relative to the complaint of Captain Atkins. They involve the consideration of two questions:—1. Whether the United States' Courts had jurisdiction in the matter; 2. Whether they so exercised jurisdiction as plainly to defeat the ends of justice. Upon the first question I cannot say that the United States' Court did, in the circumstances of this case, act ultra vires. The legal American adviser of the Consulate is of opinion that they did not. The cases cited appear to support this opinion. Mr. Atkins at all events appeared by counsel, with whom he afterwards quarrelled, and an Appeal lay to, and appears to have been entered in, the Supreme Court, but not to have been prosecuted. I should also observe that the authority of the American Admiralty Court in cases of this description was inquired into by your Lordship on the occasion referred to by Lord Lyons, in the case of the "Excelsior."

In that case the Board of Trade, after communication with the authorities of the High Court of Admiralty, informed your Lordship that the English Admiralty Court exercised a similar jurisdiction, and your Lordship thereupon declined to object to the jurisdiction of the United States' Admiralty Court.

Upon the second question, it is to be observed that Mr. Consul Archibald, who certainly bestowed very great pains and care upon this case of Captain Atkins, but with whom the Captain also quarrelled, described in his letter to Lord Lyons (April 28, 1862; Inclosure 4 in No. 757) the character of Captain Atkins in these words:—"Captain Atkins appears to be a very irascible and intractable man, which will account for the trouble he has brought upon himself. His demeanour since he has been here has been by no means discreet. With every disposition to aid him as far as I consistently can, it is, nevertheless, my duty to see justice done to the seaman. Could I have withdrawn the matter from the purview of the local Court, and have myself decided it, I would gladly have done so, in order among other things to avoid the scandal (I am happy to say a rare one) of an action in a foreign court of law against a British shipmaster for cruelty to a seaman. But such a proceeding has not been open to me, and the action must now take its course, and Captain Atkins will have to make the best defence in his power, as well on the law as on the merits of the case."

1864

It appears, however, that the Consul did hold a naval Court of Inquiry, which found that Captain Atkins had acted with illegal and most reprehensible violence on board his ship towards the seaman Broom, who afterwards brought his action against him. The most material part of their finding was, "That by the preparations which the master made with deadly weapons for a conflict, and the cruel use of those weapons in the beating of Broom, he incurred the hazard of provoking a revolt on the part of the crew. We are also of opinion that the keeping of Broom in irons for the long period of forty-two days, a part of that time on bread and water, and the rest of it on a half allowance of provisions, as stated by the master himself, was not required for the maintenance of the discipline of the ship, and was in our judgment unnecessarily severe and vindictive."

It appears to me, therefore, that upon the merits of the case, there was no miscarriage of justice in the United States' Court. And I must report to your Lordship that neither upon the question of jurisdiction, nor upon the question of merit, can I advise your Lordship to interfere in the matter in Captain Atkins's complaint.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 265.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* two further despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons,† respecting the Military Commission to be appointed to investigate the cases of persons under arrest at Fort Lafayette and Fort Warren; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think the answer of Mr. Seward, or of the War Department, sufficiently explicit to be satisfactory. If New York be under martial law, and the ordinary forms of civil trial be suspended universally, and without exception or distinction of persons, the subjects of Her Majesty who are to be so tried are in the same condition as native subjects, and no adequate ground of complaint upon this particular subject will exist. But then, this should be distinctly stated; for if this be not the case, and if Her Majesty's subjects are to have charges against them investigated by an exceptional tribunal, and not allowed the protection and safeguards of the ordinary civil trial, when such protection and safeguards are still open to the United States' citizen, the fact, if it be so, may give rise to very grave and serious considerations. We are, therefore, of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to apply to Mr. Seward for a more distinct statement upon this matter, and for a plain answer to the questions, whether martial law universally prevails at New York, and whether it suspends, for all persons equally, the right of being tried before the ordinary civil tribunals.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 61, January 26; to Lord Lyons, No. 82, February 20, 1864.
† Lord Lyons, No. 100, February 12; No. 120, February 23, 1864.

No. 266.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated February 13th, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, respecting the proceedings of a steamer of war belonging to the United States, supposed to be the "Vanderbilt," towards a British schooner named the "Dart," the latter being at the time within British jurisdiction in the Bahamas; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to lay this protest before the United States' Government, and request that an investigation may be made into the averments contained in it.

It appears, at present, that Her Majesty's territorial rights have been intentionally violated, and injury inflicted upon Her Majesty's subjects within Her Majesty's territory, by a cruizer of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 267.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Receved March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 114), respecting the case of Mr. James Gray, a person claiming British protection, who was taken in the "Ella and Annie" steamer, captured for endeavouring to violate the blockade of Wilmington, and who has since been tried by court-martial and condemned to imprisonment for two years with hard labour; and to request that we would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken into our careful consideration all the facts and circumstances stated in these papers. That we are of opinion that, having regard to the length and character of Mr. Gray's residence in Georgia, to the manner in which he has for so many years incorporated himself with that territory, and latterly identified himself with the Confederate interests, Mr. Gray has been lawfully treated by the United States' Government as an enemy. It is true that he is probably a British-born subject, but we do not advise Her Majesty's Government on this account alone, and in the face of the other facts to which we have adverted, to direct Lord Lyons to interfere officially on Mr. Gray's behalf.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 268.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us copies received from the Admiralty of communications which have passed between that Department and M. Bravay respecting the proposed sale of the iron-clads at Birkenhead; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our views upon the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That from the tone of the letters of Messrs. Bravay (which speak of large claims for damages against Her Majesty's Government for the detention of these vessels, and imply that such detention has been, and is, illegal) we are led to doubt whether the overture made by them has been intended for any other purpose than that of prejudicing Her Majesty's Government in the pending litigation. Under these circumstances, we think it is to be regretted that the replies should not have been more carefully guarded against any possible misconstruction. They do not, indeed, commit Her Majesty's Government to any course of action; but, on the other hand, they are replies which might have been given, with equal propriety, to any similar offer from a shipowner whose title to the vessels was undisputed. If any further correspondence should take place on this subject, we think it ought to be upon a distinct understanding, to be embodied in writing on both sides, that the whole correspondence, from the beginning, is to be entirely without prejudice to the claims of either party in the pending litigation, and is not to be used or referred to, for any purpose, in that litigation by either party. The Board of Admiralty, before making any reply to Messrs. Bravay's last letter, ought, in our opinion, to require an assent in writing, on the part of Messrs. Bravay, and (through them) of Messrs. Laird also, to this understanding; and it should, at the same time, be distinctly explained that if Her Majesty's Government should be disposed, after receiving the assent of Messrs. Bravay and Messrs. Laird to that understanding, to enter into any treaty at all upon the subject, it can only be upon the footing of a compromise of the pending litigation, and under the influence of a desire, on their part, to avoid, as far as possible, the infliction of pecuniary loss upon individuals by the enforcement of the extreme rights of the Crown, if the objects of the law can be otherwise sufficiently attained; Her Majesty's Government being (as should be also stated) perfectly prepared to justify, in law, the seizure which they have effected, and denying the existence of any legal title in Messrs. Bravay or Messrs. Laird as against the seizure, and, a fortiori, any claim for damages on the part of either of those firms.

We think it would be desirable that any future letters on this subject should be submitted, before they are sent, to the Law Officers or to the Attorney-General.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 269.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our immediate consideration, a letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office, respecting some doubt which has been raised in New Brunswick respecting the manner in which the parties concerned in carrying off the "Chesapeake" should be dealt with; and to request that we would take these papers into immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship what instructions should be sent to the Governor of New Brunswick on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That we think the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick is mistaken in supposing that any allegation or proof of the issue of a warrant in the United States for the apprehension of the persons whose extradition is demanded, is either required or contemplated by the Ashburton Treaty (6 Hertslet, 859, 860), or by the Imperial Statute (ibid., 862). In the Xth Article of the Treaty we cannot discover anything to that effect; the delivery is to be "upon requisition by the United States, or their Ministers, officers, or authorities, made;" within which words the requisition of the Consul, acting under the authority of his Government (whether that authority may be proved antecedently or by their subsequent recognition of his acts), seems to us to be included. It would have been extraordinary if the Statute had introduced, as a necessary condition of the delivery, any act to be done within the United States, which is not stipulated for by the Treaty, and we do not find that it has done so. We presume Mr. Gordon may have interpreted the words "the original warrant," in section 2, as referring to some warrant issued in the United States; but it seems to us clear that this means the warrant of the Secretary of State, &c., or the officer administering the Government of the Colony, mentioned in the first section.

2. With respect to the points which seem to have been made at the hearing before the Police Magistrate, we apprehend it to be clear (as the Law Officers in this country have uniformly advised) that "piracy" in the Treaty means only piracy according to the Law of Nations; and also, that an United States' ship at sea is "within United States' jurisdiction," in the sense of those words as used in the Statute and the Treaty. But, until copies of the evidence are sent over, we find it impossible to judge whether the conclusion of the Magistrate, that the acts proved were of a piratical and not a belligerent character, was right or not. We should desire to see copies of the whole evidence, and also of the proceedings on habeas corpus (which may possibly have disposed of the case by discharging the prisoners), before we express an opinion upon this point.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 270.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with a copy of the papers which have been laid before Parliament in the case of the "Saxon," two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons,* the last of which contains the answer returned by the United States' Government to his Lordship's inquiry, made under instructions from the Foreign Office, as to the grounds on which the seizure and detention of the "Saxon" was supposed to be justified.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That assuming the statement of Mr. Secretary Welles to be correct, namely, that the "Saxon" had on board a large portion of the cargo belonging to the "Conrad," which had been recently captured by the "Alabama," we think that the question whether or no, in the circnmstances, the "Saxon" had acted so much in concert with the "Alabama" as to have been practically pro hac vice a sort of tender to that vessel, might fairly be submitted to the Prize Court.

We are also not prepared to say that the rule as to enemies' property on board a neutral vessel, laid down by the Declaration of Paris, and on which the United States' Government have professed their intention to act, generally, during the present war, might not, consistently with a bonâ fide adherence to that rule, in ordinary cases, be held inapplicable to goods taken by a war vessel as prize, and placed, for the captor's convenience, on board a neutral vessel.

On both these grounds, we are of opinion that, at present, Her Majesty's Government ought not to insist on the restoration of the "Saxon," or on compensation for her owners.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 108, February 15; No. 117, February 23, 1864.

1864

No. 271.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 26th ultimo, and its inclosures, from Messrs. Miller and Mosman, representing the hardship of their case as owners of the barque "Hiawatha," which has been condemned in the United States' Prize Courts for breach of blockade.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship also to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence which has passed respecting this case since the date of our Report of the 24th July last,* and from which we should observe that the appeal made by Lord Lyons to the equitable consideration of the United States' Government is still before that Government.

And to request that we would take Messrs. Miller and Mosman's letter (which is accompanied by the Judgment of the Supreme Court), into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon; and with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Miller and Mosman.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this is certainly a case of which the hardship, on the admitted facts, cannot be denied, as is sufficiently proved by the dissent of four Judges of Appeal (including Chief Justice Taney) from the sentence of condemnation. Nevertheless, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government can only appeal, as Lord Lyons has done, to the comity of the United States' Government, in order to induce them not to carry the sentence into effect, and, certainly, stronger reasons have seldom existed for expecting the success of such an application.

We think that an answer should be sent to Messrs. Miller and Mosman, to the effect that Her Majesty's Government have instructed Lord Lyons to make as strong an appeal as he can to the United States' Government to take into their equitable consideration the peculiar circumstances of this case, and that they have no other course to adopt; as the case, though involving several difficult and doubtful questions, has been fairly tried, upon principles recognized in our own Prize Courts; and that they will not fail to apprise Messrs. Miller and Mosman, as soon as they receive it, of the result of this application so made by Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 272.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers relative to the "Amphion,"† a frigate sold last year out of Her Majesty's service, which it has been represented to Her Majesty's Government is being fitted out for sea under suspicious circumstances; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest possible convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That no case for interference seems to us to be at present made out, in this instance.

---

* Messrs. Barr and Williamson, January 18, 1864; Lord Lyons, No. 363, 1863; Mr. Stuart, No. 37, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 809, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 810, 1863; to Messrs. Barr and Co., January 25, 1864; to Lord Lyons, No. 32,

† To Home Office, January 18; Home Office, January 18 and 22; Mr. Adams, March 18; to Mr. Adams, March 18; to Home Office, March 18; Home Office, March 21, 1864.

Whatever may be the nature of the "fitting-out" now going on, there is nothing to show that it is in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 273.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 7th instant, from Mr. Andrew Scott, Writer to the Signet, putting forward, on behalf of his clients, the beneficiaries under the settlement of the late Mr. John Purvis, a claim against the Government of the United States, on account of the devastation, by Federal troops, of certain property at Oakland, Warren County, Mississippi; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere in this matter.

1. The injury complained of is the devastation of real property, and its accessories and produce, in a foreign country, which has become the scene of a civil war. Both belligerents are charged with being at different times the authors of this devastation. In any case, the owners or parties interested in this kind of property should be apprised that they must resort to the legal remedies (if any) which the law of the country in which their estate is situated affords to the native-born residents within it. The utmost length to which Her Majesty's Government could be advised to go, in any case of this description, would be to instruct Lord Lyons to use, unofficially and informally, his good offices on behalf of the Memorialists with the Federal Government.

2. But it further appears that a considerable part of the damage complained of is the taking or driving away of slaves (156 negroes) from the estate, a property which, by British statute law, it is criminal in a natural-born British subject to possess anywhere.

3. It also appears that the executor, Mr. Bruce, has taken the oath of allegiance to the Federal Government of the United States: from them he must claim, on behalf of those whom he represents, in whatever way he is advised, indemnity for the injury done to this property.

For these and other reasons, and upon general principles applicable to all cases ejusdem generis, we do not advise Her Majesty's Government officially to interfere in the matter of this claim.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 274.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th March instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith, with reference to our Report of the 23rd instant, a letter from the Board of Admiralty, stating the substance of a communication they are prepared to make to M. Bravay respecting the iron-clads; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether such a letter may properly be sent to M. Bravay.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken the liberty of suggesting some slight changes in the letter proposed to be sent by the Board of Admiralty to Messrs. Bravay; and have, for greater clearness, noted these proposed changes in red ink in the accompanying copy of Mr. Romaine's letter. Subject to these alterations, we think that the letter may properly be sent.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
And for the Attorney and Solicitor-General.

No. 275.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 125) inclosing a copy of papers laid before Congress relative to the arrest of the Consul-General for the United States at Montreal, and to the enforcement on the Canadian frontier of the prohibition to export live stock from the United States, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the arrest of the United States' Consul Giddings, the law is correctly laid down in the letter of Mr. Seward to Mr. Bates (page 3 of printed papers). With respect to the seizure of the hogs of Messrs. West and Davies by the United States' Custom-house officers, on the ground that their exportation to Canada by way of the Niagara suspension-bridge was illegal, we shall be in a better condition to advise your Lordship on this head when we have seen the Reports which Lord Lyons intimates his intention of sending to your Lordship. But in the meantime we would refer to our Report of the 4th August, 1863, in which we expressed our opinion that the Orders prohibiting the exportation of live stock cannot be dated earlier than the Order of the 13th May, 1863, but would take effect from that day.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 276.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 31, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th March, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, two further letters, dated the 26th and 29th instant, and their inclosures, from the Home Office, respecting the "Amphion;" and to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think there is still a total deficiency of evidence tending to show any actual or contemplated violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act in this case. When ships of war have been sold to private purchasers by a Department of Her Majesty's Government during a war in which Her Majesty is neutral, it is, in our opinion, impossible to treat the subsequent fitting out for sea (with new fittings not distinctly warlike) of the same ships as primâ facie illegal in the absence of any evidence that they are being so prepared for sea on the direct account of a belligerent Power with a view to their employment as cruizers, storeships, or transports, in the service of such Power. Upon the prudence or consistency of the practice of selling ships of this kind at such a time, it is not perhaps for us to advise; but we think it clearly estops the Government which made the sale from treating the mere existence of the same warlike character which belonged to the vessel when sold as (in itself) raising any fair presumption against the purchaser or outfitter of an intention to violate the law.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
For self and Attorney-General (during temporary absence of Solicitor-General from London.)

P.S.—The further Report of the Thames Division of Police, transmitted to us in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th instant, does not induce us to make any alteration in this Report.

R. P.

No. 277.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st April instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter dated the 31st ultimo, from Mr. Adams, requesting that the United States' steamer "Kearsarge" may be permitted to effect some repairs to her boilers in the Victoria Docks, together with the draft of the answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Mr. Adams, stating the grounds on which Her Majesty's Government feel themselves unable to comply with his application; and to request that we would take the inclosed draft into immediate consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances of the case, it is such a reply as it is right and proper to address to Mr. Adams.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us certain other papers relative to the movements of the "Kearsarge" in the neighbourhood of the United Kingdom, the first two of which, namely, the Admiralty letters of the 10th and 15th of December, formed the subject of our Reports of the 12th and 22nd of that month.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the answer proposed to be sent by your Lordship to Mr. Adams appears to us to be right and proper.

We have, &c.
In the absence of the Solicitor-General,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 278.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th ultimo, stating that adverting to that part of our Report of the 24th April last which deals with the question of the right of a ship of war of a neutral Power to communicate with a port under blockade, and to a correspondence on the subject which passed between the Admiralty and the Foreign Office in the month of August last,* and which was sent therewith, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters from the Admiralty, and a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons,† respecting the refusal of the United States' authorities to permit Her Majesty's men-of-war any longer to communicate with the Southern ports.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of an instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons by the mail of Saturday (then) last, directing him to ask permission for a man-of-war to take Mr. Consul-General Crawford to Charleston or Wilmington, in order that he might proceed to Richmond to remonstrate with the authorities of the so-styled Confederate States, concerning certain grievances affecting British subjects and the Confederate agents in this country; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take into our consideration the decision of the United States' Government no longer to permit Her Majesty's cruizers to communicate with the blockaded ports, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

* Admiralty, August 21; to Admiralty, August 31, 1863.

† Admiralty, March 3, A and C; Lord Lyons, No. 122, February 23, 1864.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although it is not easy to find any direct and positive expression of opinion in the books on internationl law, or the judgments of International Courts, upon this precise point, namely, the right of the belligerent who has duly instituted a blockade, to deny all access to neutral ships of war, as well as to neutral merchant ships, to the blockaded place, nevertheless we are, after much and careful consideration of the subject, of opinion that this right does, as an abstract proposition of international law, belong to the belligerent who has thus instituted a blockade. This right seems to flow from the reason of the thing, and to be supported by the usage (upon which much of international law is founded) of civilized maritime States.

From the reason of the thing,—because the right of blockade is the right of cutting off, so far as necessary for the objects of the war, all communication whatever with this part of the enemies' dominions, and carries with it, therefore, as in the case of a siege by land, the right, primâ facie at least, of interdicting the access of the neutral foreigner, whether he approach with the authority of the State to which he belongs, or merely as an individual, whether the object of his access be official communication or the interchange of private commerce.

The usage of States, as far as we have been able to prosecute our inquiries, also supports this right.

We are informed that, at the last siege of Acre (1840), and the blockade of the adjoining Syrian coast by the British fleet, a French man of war which proposed to pass within the line of circumvallation was interdicted from doing so by the blockading force; and that the French Government of that day fully recognized the exercise of this right on the part of the blockading force. In accordance with, and previously to, this recognition, we find that, in 1838, Count Molé (then Minister for Foreign Affairs), on the occasion of the French blockade of the coast of the Argentine Republic, issued instructions, or put forth a manifesto in the shape of a note, in which was the following passage:—"Un navire se présentant devant un port bloqué avant d'avoir eu connaissance du blocus, doit d'abord en être averti, et la notification doit en être fait par écrit, et sur son rôle d'équipage.

"Mais cet avis ayant été donné et cette formalité ayant été remplie, s'il persiste à entrer dans le port, ou s'il vient à s'y présenter de nouveau, le commandant du blocus a le droit de l'arrêter.

"Les bâtiments de guerre neutres se présentant doivent aussi être invités à s'éloigner; s'ils persistent, le commandant du blocus a le droit de s'opposer à leur entrée par la force; et la responsabilité de tout ce qui peut s'en suivre pesera sur les violateurs du blocus."*

We are therefore of opinion that, so far as the general question is concerned, the neutral man of war is under an obligation to respect the belligerent right of blockade, and not to attempt, without permission, to communicate with the blockaded places; and to this extent we think that the doctrine laid down in the Law Officers' Report of the 24th April, 1863, ought to be modified.

But the expression of this opinion does not free the present question from all embarrassment.

Not merely because the right of blockade by the United States has been carried to an unprecedented extent in this war: 3,000 miles of coast rendered inaccessible to the whole world is a state of things which has never before occurred, and might, perhaps, not unreasonably call for some mitigation of a right so severe in its operation upon the rest of the world.

But apart from this consideration, it is to be remembered that the neutral has an unquestionable general right, which the belligerent ought to respect, of communicating with the other belligerent, upon matters connected with the welfare of the neutral subjects, or generally of the neutral country. No belligerent State (so far as we are aware) has ever yet wholly denied the exercise of this right to the neutral; and we think that the neutral Government will have a just ground of remonstrance and complaint if the right of blockade is carried, in practice, to this extent.

It is not, we think, reasonable or consistent with the comity of nations that the United States' Government should say to the Government of Great Britain, "You cannot approach the Confederate Government by land, and you shall not approach them by sea, even for the purpose of conveying a Consul, or of seeking redress for injuries done to your subjects; or of making representations on the subject of any acts tending to violate your neutrality on the part of the Confederate States."

It would probably be an indisputed proposition, that a neutral Government would have a right to have an Ambassador resident at the Court of the belligerent, if an independent State; and, in this event, it seems almost necessarily to follow that the neutral Government would have a right to communicate with him, and, if necessary for this limited purpose, to pass through a blockade of his entire coast.

"A blockade," Lord Stowell says, "is a uniform universal exclusion of all vessels not privileged by law" (the "Rolla," 6 Robinson, 372).

We are of opinion that a ship of war having the exclusive object of bearing communications from the neutral Government to its Minister resident in the belligerent State ought to be regarded as belonging to this privileged class.

In another case, Lord Stowell, when England was at war with France, in 1811, in the course of his Judgment respecting an American ship captured in the prosecution of her voyage from New York to Bordeaux, observed, in answer to a defence (set up, but not sustained by evidence), that the vessel was carrying official despatches from the American President to an American Minister resident in Paris, said, "This country makes no pretension to any right of interrupting the communication of the American Government with its Minister; and I should be extremely tender of interposing any difficulties in the way of such a correspondence" (the "Drummond," 1 Dodson, 104).

There is, as to this particular subject, no sound distinction in principle between the right of a neutral Government to communicate upon questions relating to its own concerns, or those of its subjects, with a belligerent whom it has formally recognized, and one whom it has only recognized as possessing a belligerent status.

If there were any such distinction in principle, it is manifest that the neutral State might be compelled, for its own security, to recognize formally and fully both belligerents as equally in the category of independent States.

The neutral State must exercise this right of limited communication so as not to interfere with the general right of the other belligerent, and in whatever way may be opened to it by the blockading Power; but it cannot be altogether debarred from its exercise.

We are of opinion that these are the principles upon which Her Majesty's Government ought to act in this important matter; and we think it right to add that, if the United States' Government should thus insist on cutting off all means of communication between Her Majesty's Government and the Confederate States, Her Majesty's Government will be entitled to throw upon the United States' Government the whole responsibility of impeding Her Majesty's efforts to repress and prevent any future violations of Her Majesty's neutrality by the Confederate States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Ortolan, 2 Dipl., 334–5.

No. 279.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd March ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th February, 1864, on the general question of the imprisonment by the United States' Government of British subjects captured in blockade-runners, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 146, February 29) respecting the case of James O'Neill, which formed the subject of one of the despatches, also therewith inclosed, on which our above-mentioned Report was founded; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think this is a case of great injustice and cruelty, and requires the grave attention of Her Majesty's Government. James O'Neill, a British subject, has been captured on board a British vessel, severely wounded by an United States' officer, imprisoned without, as far as we can see, any reasonable ground, first in a common gaol, in irons as a malefactor, then in Fort Lafayette; at last, after repeated promises, made and broken, released with an intimation that he deserved to be dealt with as a belligerent or pirate.

The excuse for all this is, that he attempted to light a train of gunpowder and thereby destroy himself and all on board. We adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Report that the story is, on the face of it, grossly improbable; it is denied on oath, with every appearance of truth, by the man himself. It is supported, as Lord Lyons observes, solely by the assertion of the United States' officer who is the person guilty of inflicting the wound, and who has, of course, the strongest motive for exonerating himself from a charge of savage brutality primâ facie warranted by his conduct.

1864

We cannot advise Her Majesty's Government that the matter ought to be allowed to rest here. We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the great dissatisfaction felt by Her Majesty's Government at the manner in which this grievous bodily injury inflicted upon one of Her Majesty's subjects has been treated by the authorities of the United States; that they cannot understand upon what principle of reason or justice the unsupported assertion of the person charged with the commission of a great crime is to be accepted, without trial or investigation, as a sufficient exculpation of himself from that crime. That Her Majesty's Government, upon the evidence now laid before them, are satisfied that no Magistrate or Court of Justice could come to the conclusion that O'Neill ever attempted or intended to do the act which it is alleged justified the United States' officer in endeavouring to take away his life; that the case appears to Her Majesty's Government to be one which calls for a full and searching investigation, by a proper tribunal, into all the facts and circumstances; and that Her Majesty's Government feel assured that the United States' Government will be as ready to do justice in the case of an alleged attempt at murder by one of their officers, as Her Majesty's Government would be if the circumstances were reversed; and that if it should turn out that this poor man has been unjustly wounded, unjustly charged, and unjustly imprisoned, the United States' Government will be as anxious as Her Majesty's Government would be, in similar circumstances, to make every reparation in their power.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above Report was copied for signature, we have also received Mr. Layard's further letter dated the 29th ultimo, inclosing two further despatches from Lord Lyons on this subject (Nos. 180 and 192); the consideration of which has only confirmed us in the opinion above expressed.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 280.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the reply, dated the 15th ultimo, received from Mr. Adams to the letter which, in accordance with the opinion expressed in our Report of the 5th instant, your Lordship addressed to him on the 9th of March, in answer to his communication of the 25th of January, relative to the course intended to be pursued by the Government of the United States towards British subjects taken on board blockade-runners; and Mr. Adams was to request that we would take Mr. Adams' further letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is necessary or desirable that your Lordship should prolong the correspondence on this subject with Mr. Adams.

Copies of the instructions which have been recently addressed on this subject to Lord Lyons accompanied Mr. Hammond's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken Mr. Adams' further letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is only one passage in the letter of Mr. Adams which may render it necessary to continue this correspondence. It is that in which he thus sums up what appears to be his general argument from the circumstances alleged in this and his former letter. The passage is, "For whereas in common cases it is the duty of the captor to presume the parties to be neutrals, by the new element now introduced it becomes his duty to presume them to be guilty until they can show the contrary."

If it be meant by this passage that captured British vessels or their crews, are generally to be treated henceforth on a different footing from that on which by international law all neutrals are placed (that is, if they are to be all presumed, in the first instance, to be engaged in the enemy's service, and to have thrown upon them the burden of proving the contrary), Her Majesty's Government ought, we think, very plainly to say that they will regard this as a violation of international law, to which they will not in any way consent; and that such a course cannot be taken by the United States' Government without placing in serious peril the friendly relations of the two countries.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 281.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the January (received on the 19th), respecting the case of the late Mr. Hardcastle, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Lord Lyons dated the 8th ultimo, calling attention to the circumstance that the instruction addressed to him, founded on our above-mentioned Report, appeared to have been drawn up on the supposition that Hardcastle had a written safe-conduct from the military authorities of the United States.

That your Lordship directed Mr. Hammond to state to us that, in transferring in the despatch to Lord Lyons, the passage which stands at the commencement of our remarks, respecting the privilege conferred by a safe-conduct, "It is admitted that Hardcastle arrived within the territory of the United States and within the Federal lines under a flag of truce, and with a safe-conduct pass from the military authorities," the words "of the United States" were inadvertently added at the end of the sentence; and your Lordship also desired Mr. Hammond to point out to us that it appears to be evident from the reports of Judge Advocate Turner (Inclosure No. 10 in Lord Lyons' No. 572 of June 22, 1863), and those of Superintendent Wood and Judge Advocate-General Holt (Inclosures No. 4 and 5 in Lord Lyons' No. 820 of November 17, 1863), that the safe-conduct in question was issued by the Confederate General Winder, and that Hardcastle was not provided with any document of that nature from the Federal authorities.

Mr. Hammond was consequently to request that we would take this instruction to Lord Lyons, which, together with the previous papers, Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose to us,* into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances above stated, any further modification should be made therein besides the omission of the words "of the United States" above referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this instruction into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the passages referred to by Lord Lyons must be considered as showing that Mr. Hardcastle had not a written safe-conduct from the Federal Government: and of course, therefore, the instructions to Lord Lyons should be corrected as to this assertion.

Nevertheless, the case remains in substance the same after this correction has been made.

The statement of this unfortunate man to Lord Lyons,† namely, that before crossing the Confederate lines he asked whether he should be received by the Federal authorities under a flag of truce, and that at the time of making this inquiry he forwarded all his papers, among them the Confederate pass, and obtained for answer that he would be received in the United States, appears to be uncontroverted.

To all intents and purposes, therefore, he was under all the protection that a flag of truce, and the deliberate permission of the enemy to enter their territory, could confer.

The United States' authorities practically and in substance as much gave him a pass of safe-conduct as if they had delivered to him a written instrument to that effect.

Indeed, the argument of the United States' authorities has been that they have a right to review papers of safe-conduct after they have granted them, on ascertaining certain facts in the previous history of the grantees.

---

* To Lord Lyons, No. 37, January 29, 1864; Lord Lyons, Nos. 572, 724, and 820, 1863.

† Lord Lyons, No. 572, Inclosure 7.

1864

We think, therefore, that the instructions to Lord Lyons should be amended in the manner in which we have ventured to point out in the margin, and in certain parts of the body of the draft; but that in other respects they should remain as before.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 282.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 138, February 29, 1864), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Galveston, reporting that, on the occasion of the seizure of a Confederate mail by a party of United States' troops in the town of Brookhaven, Mississippi, in the month of July last, certain despatches and packages, sealed with the official seal of that Consulate, were opened and thrown away; and to request that we would take the accompanying despatch and its inclosure from Lord Lyons into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That the conduct of the United States' troops, as represented in these papers, in opening the despatches of a Consul of a neutral and friendly State (some of them addressed to the Ambassador of his Government), and destroying or throwing them into the street, because they were found in the letter bag of a belligerent, is, of course, a subject for just remonstrance on the part of the neutral Government, and we must presume that the United States' Government will not hesitate to visit with censure those who have been guilty of this act, and to express their regret to Her Majesty's Government that it should have occurred. We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to this effect. His Lordship will, of course, satisfy himself, as far as he is able, as to the truth of the statement, before he makes it the subject of a formal remonstrance.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 283.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 128, February 23), inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, which puts an end to the blockade of Brownsville, in Texas, but placing at the same time certain restrictions on the trade of that port, and imposing penalties in case of their violation, and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we not clearly understand whether the port of Brownsville be, or be not, in the actual possession of the United States. If it be, the blockade of such a port is novel in practice, and appears to us, as at present advised, not easily defensible on principle. It is certain that the belligerent right of blockade cannot be used as a means of enforcing particular regulations with respect to the trade of a port which is not in the hands of the enemy. On the other hand, it is competent to a Power which is duly blockading a port to remit (as the United States' Government professes to do by this Proclamation) a part of its right; for instance, it has been holden that particular licences, granted to individuals, do not vitiate a blockade (the "Fox," 1 Edwards, 320). And there are relaxations of a blockade which do not necessarily vitiate the blockade, provided it be still supported by an adequate and effective de facto force. But these observations apply to the case of a place actually blockaded or besieged; and we are of opinion that the peculiar rights which enure to the belligerent from the constitution of a blockade cannot be engrafted, so as to affect a neutral State, upon a different state of things, or be made obligatory on a neutral with respect to a place which, not being in the hands of an enemy, cannot be properly the subject of a blockade.

It is therefore very important that we should be informed whether Brownsville be absolutely within the occupation, and under the control and government, of the United States, as New Orleans, or any other place of the like character, may be.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 284.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of March ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th of September last, on the subject of the restrictions placed by the Government of the United States on the trade between New York and the Bahamas, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the papers then considered by us, the accompanying further despatches which have been received since that date from Lord Lyons,* from which we would perceive that these restrictions have been extended to the trade between New York and other British American colonies.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office,† respecting a claim put forward by a person named Charles Harris, resident at Nassau, on account of expenses incurred by him in consequence of steps taken by the Acting Consul of the United States in this matter; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the individual claim of Mr. Harris, we do not advise your Lordship that it ought to be made the subject per se, or, indeed at all, of any formal complaint to the United States' Government, but that upon the general question referred to in these papers, we adhere to the opinion which we have expressed at great length in our former Reports.

These restrictions on the trade between New York and the British colonies, this attempt to enforce bonds having for their object to govern and regulate, not the immediate but the possible future, and contingent disposition of articles of lawful commerce, are a plain violation of the Treaty obligations of the United States to this country. Looked at from another point of view, their object is not less objectionable. They inflict a great hardship on neutral commerce; in fact and truth they are an unjustifiable extension of the belligerent right of blockade, which has been and still is strained to its utmost limits in this war. The letters of Mr. Cunard appear to us very just and sensible upon the whole matter (Inclosures 6 and 13 in Lord Lyons' No. 139).

The injurious and unlawful effect of these measures is not veiled by the attempt of Mr. Seward to describe them as the operations of "the right to suppress contraband trade in our own ports with our own insurgent subjects;" and their practical absurdity and injustice is carried to the highest pitch when the United States' Consul at Nassau refuses to grant the certificate for the cancellation of one of these new bonds (which never ought to have been exacted at all), upon the usual and stipulated terms, on the ground that the amount of "coarse heavy stores" exported from New York to Nassau, as to which the exporter desired to make the prescribed declaration, exceeded (in the Consul's private opinion) the want of the Bahamas for home consumption or any legitimate trade (Letter L in Governor Bailey's despatch No. 13, February 2, 1864).

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 20, 111, and 139.

† Colonial Office, March 15, 1864.

1864

The last letter of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons (January 7, 1864, Inclosure 7 in Lord Lyons' No. 20), in which the writer professes to learn for the first time the existence of any complaint with respect to the new restrictions on trade between New York and Newfoundland, and declares his intention of inquiring into it, seems to be intended to evade a plain demand for satisfaction for palpable injustice by a recriminatory catalogue of complaints against the British Government on the score of offences committed by British subjects, all of which are again traced to the original and fundamental wrong said to have been committed by the British Government in recognizing the Confederates as belligerents.

Into this catalogue it is unnecessary now to enter. We can only repeat that the opinion which we have had the honour to express in our former Reports on this whole subject is unchanged. That we think Lord Lyons should be instructed to continue to press (upon all proper and convenient opportunities) on the attention of the United States' Government the strong opinion which Her Majesty's Government entertain of the injury which has been, and still is being, done by these vexatious and unlawful proceedings.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 285.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th of March, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 21st ultimo, and its inclosures, from Mr. Adams, complaining of the proceedings of the police magistrate at Liverpool in reference to the men accused of piracy on board the "Joseph L. Gerrity," and for whose extradition an application was made by Mr. Adams on the 15th of February, under the Xth Article of the Treaty of Washington of the 9th of August, 1842. Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit a letter dated the 22nd ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Home Office explaining and justifying the proceedings of the Liverpool police magistrate in this matter; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the terms in which Mr. Adams should be answered.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th of March, transmitting the draft of a letter which had been prepared to be sent to Mr. Adams in answer to his note of the 21st of March, respecting this case, but which was suspended, pending the reference of the case to us. That it occurred to Mr. Layard that we might find it convenient to take this proposed answer into consideration, together with the other papers, making such alterations and additions to it as we might think desirable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have ventured to suggest certain alterations in the draft proposed to be sent by your Lordship to Mr. Adams, which we think, with these modifications, would be proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 286.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 192, March 8), requesting to be furnished with instructions as to the manner in which he should proceed in the event of the imprisonment of the British subjects found on board the Confederate steamer "Antonica" being prolonged, and whether he should insist on the restoration of certain property which appears to have been taken from one of these individuals.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that this case formed part of the subject matter of Lord Lyons' despatches Nos. 55 and 93 of this year, on which our Report of the 7th March was founded. And that these despatches together with the answer returned to them, in accordance with our above-mentioned Report, were also inclosed. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Lord Lyons should be instructed to make the necessary application for obtaining restitution of the private property of Barnett and Jones; and that he should also be instructed to endeavour to obtain the release of the British portion of the crew of the "Antonica" from prison; pointing out to the United States' Government the great length of time they have been already detained, and requesting an early answer on their behalf.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 287.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 170 and 178), with their inclosures, relative to the destruction of the British schooner "Sylvanus" of Nassau, while attempting to run the blockade, and the imprisonment of the master and crew, who would appear to have been treated with considerable harshness; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of the full communication which Mr. Seward (March 8, 1864, in Lyons' No. 178) promises to make to Lord Lyons upon the subject of these papers, we are not in a condition satisfactorily to advise your Lordship thereupon.

If the "Sylvanus" was fired upon and sunk in the first instance without being properly summoned to lie to, and without any special and extraordinary necessity, the act was illegal, and warrants per se a very grave remonstrance.

If, as unfortunately appears clearly to have been the case, the crew were put in irons and imprisoned without being examined, another grave illegality has been committed; and with respect to this last wrongful act, the recurring frequency of it renders it necessary that Lord Lyons should be instructed to address to the United States' Government a very strong remonstrance, in which a hope may be properly expressed that Her Majesty's Government may not again have to complain of this plain and offensive violation of the rights of neutral subjects.

We have, &c,
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 288.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th of last November, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the further despatches as marked in the margin,* respecting the case of the British schooner "Don José," which was seized and taken into Key West by the United States' cruizer "Juniata," and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons (February 12, 1864), is entirely unsatisfactory, if it be intended as final.

There can be, and is, no dispute as to the flagrant illegality of the capture. The United States' Attorney-General could find no ground whatever upon which the vessel could be libelled as prize in the Prize Court. This fact alone is sufficient to found the claim for compensation, which it must be presumed the Court, if the case had come before it, would, in the execution of its duty, have awarded in the form of costs and damages.

We cannot but observe upon the extraordinary character of the justification which seems to be attempted in the Reports of Commander Clitz and Acting Master Stimpson. Those officers allege, in effect, that there was evidence in the ship's papers of an intention to run the blockade. But if so, why was not the ship brought to trial? After releasing her without trial, it is impossible for the United States' Government now to plead, as against the duty of making compensation, that there were good grounds of capture, and that the District Attorney came to a wrong conclusion.

What the proper measure of compensation may be, is of course a matter upon which the United States' Government must form their opinion, after an examination of all the facts; and in our former Report we observed upon the exaggeration with which the claimants had overlaid their case.

We are of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to renew and press his application for proper compensation in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 289.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th March ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th of last October, upon the proceedings in the United States' Prize Court in the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers,† a despatch from Mr. Consul Archibald,‡ inclosing a printed copy of Judge Betts' Judgment in this case.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the pamphlet also contains Judge Marvin's opinions in the case of the "Dolphin" (see Law Officers' Reports of April 22 and 27, May 29, and July 29, 1863), and the "Pearl" (see Queen's Advocate's Report of March 3, 1863); and to request that we would peruse these papers, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the decisions of the Prize Courts in the cases of the "Peterhoff" and the "Dolphin," by which those vessels were condemned as lawful prize, do not, in our opinion, call for any intervention on the part of Her Majesty's Government. Without binding ourselves to an adoption of all the reasons assigned in these Judgments (indeed, there are some of them in which we do not concur), we are not prepared to say that the decisions themselves, under all the circumstances of the several cases, are not in harmony with the principles of the Judgments in the English Prize Courts.

---

* To Lord Lyons, No. 601, November 28, 1863; Lord Lyons, No. 3, January 24; No. 69, February 1; No. 115, February 23, 1864.

† Mr. Stuart, No. 92; to Lord Lyons, Nos. 566 and 595; to Mr. Hodgson, November 27; to parties arrested, November 28, 1863; 3 Volumes.

‡ Consul Archibald, No. 37, March 11, 1863.

With respect to the "Pearl," the course pursued by the Judge appears to us most fair and equitable.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 290.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th of March ultimo, stating that with reference to that part of our Report of the 26th of February, which related to the case of the "Banshee," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 141), reporting that the master and crew have been released from prison.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose the previous despatches from Lord Lyons respecting this case,* and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not perceive in these papers any attempt to justify the long imprisonment of the crew of the "Banshee," who have been now, at last, released. Upon the general subject we have nothing to add to the opinions contained in our former Reports.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 291.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd of March ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 31st January of last year, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 137, February 29), inclosing a copy of the new Conscription Act passed by the Legislature of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a volume of the United States' Statutes containing the former Act on the subject (pp. 731–7), and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer with regard to those portions of the present law which may affect British subjects.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that the instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons founded on our above-mentioned Report was therewith annexed (No. 79, February 12, 1863).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not seem to us that the recent American statute, or the observations of Lord Lyons thereupon, call for any further instructions from your Lordship to Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 54, 73, and 74, 1864; Consul Archibald, No. 209, November 27, 1863.

1864

No. 292.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 15.)

Doctors' Commons, April 15, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 15th January and 19th February, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,* a further letter from Mr. Crutchett† relative to his claim on the United States' Government, and to request that I would take the same into consideration and inform your Lordship whether the statements contained in it induce me to alter in any respect the opinion expressed in my above-mentioned Reports with regard to Mr. Crutchett's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the statements contained in the last letter of Mr. Crutchett do not induce me to alter in any respect the opinion which I have already had the honour to express to your Lordship in former Reports with regard to this claim.

I have, &c
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 293.

The Lord Advocate to Mr. Layard.—(Received April 19.)

1, New Street, Spring Gardens,
April 19, 1864.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your communication of the 18th instant, inclosing copies of letters from the American Consul at Liverpool and the American Minister relative to the vessel "Hawk," now in the course of construction at Renfrew.

My attention was first called to this vessel by a telegram received by the Crown Agent from Mr. Underwood, the American Consul at Glasgow, received on the afternoon of Saturday, the 9th.

The telegram simply expressed Mr. Underwood's belief that the vessel was intended for hostile purposes, and that she was to sail the following day.

In consequence of this telegram I directed the Crown Agent to send the telegraphic messages which were referred to in Mr. Trevor's letter, a copy of which was sent to me by Mr. Hammond last week.

On receipt of Mr. Hammond's communication of the 13th, I directed the Crown Agent to transmit the papers inclosed in it to the Procurator Fiscal at Paisley, with instructions to inquire and report any information he received, but not to act without further instructions. I have received no further information.

From the letters I received from Mr. Trevor, the Collector at Glasgow, and the Procurator Fiscal there, in reply to the Crown Agent's telegrams of the 9th, I infer that this vessel is intended to run the blockade, and not for a cruizer, if she is built for the Confederate States, or for American purposes, and I do not think at present there is ground for detaining her. But I shall probably receive further information in a day or two. Meanwhile, I gather from Mr. Trevor's letter that she has not obtained her certificate, without which she is not entitled to sail.

I have, &c.
(Signed) J. MONCRIEFF.

No. 294.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 136, February 29), requesting to be furnished with general instructions with regard to the claim for exemption from military service in the United States put forward by persons born of American parents in British territory, and especially with regard to the case of a person named Charles Cole, the particulars of which are contained in the correspondence inclosed in Lord Lyons' despatch; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that in the cases of children of American citizens born in British territory, but being in American territory, and claiming there exemption from military service, of which cases Cole's is one, Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 295.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd ultimo, and our previous Reports respecting the case of the "Saxon," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Consul Archibald (No. 41, March 18), reporting that Judge Betts had directed a decree to be entered for the restitution of that vessel and her cargo to their respective owners, and a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 199, March 22), on the subject of the killing of Mr. James Gray, and also respecting the coal carried off from Angra Pequena; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon, and also favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions to be sent to Lord Lyons respecting the claim for the coal.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the restitution of the vessel and cargo, we do not see any reason at present to complain of the sentence, the question of damages and, as we understand, of costs being still open; and we are not prepared to say that if these should be refused there would, in the peculiar circumstances of the case, be any necessity for an official complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government. With respect to the murder of Mr. James Gray, the conduct of Lord Lyons appears to have been perfectly proper, as far as we can collect from his despatch to Mr. Seward of the 22nd March, 1864.

With respect to the coals, we are unable to assent to the position of Mr. Seward, that if they were sent to Angra Pequena for the purpose of supplying the "Alabama," the owner of them is disentitled to compensation.

It was as lawful to send coals to Angra Pequena for the purpose of supplying the wants of the "Alabama" as it would have been for the purpose of supplying the wants of United States' men-of-war; and at present we do not see upon what principle the position of Mr. Seward is founded, and we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to this effect.

We think, however, that the owners of the coals should be prepared with proof that they belonged to them at the time when they were taken.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Crutchett, January 5; to Mr. Crutchett, January 21; Mr. Crutchett, February 12; to Mr. Crutchett, February 26, 1864.

† Mr. Crutchett, April 5, 1864.

1864

No. 296.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Doctors' Commons, April 22, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 14th instant from the Colonial Office inclosing copies of a correspondence between the Governor of the Mauritius and the United States' Consul at that island relative to some goods which were taken out of the Confederate prize "Sea Bride," and brought to Port Louis in the French barque "Sirène;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the Governor of the Mauritius was rightly advised by the Procureur-Général in this matter, and that it was not competent to the Governor either to take possession of this property, which is alleged to have been a portion of the cargo of the "Sea Bride," or to take any legal steps against Christopher Elmstone.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 297.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the draft of an instruction (founded upon our Report of the 7th ultimo) which it is proposed to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, respecting the refusal of the United States' Government to grant satisfaction in the case of the "Blanche."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that this instruction, as we would perceive from the annexed correspondence with Sir J. Crampton,[*] had been submitted to and was concurred in by the Government of Her Catholic Majesty, which would appear to have obtained the reparation which it had demanded of the United States' Government; and to request that we would take the proposed instruction to Lord Lyons into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed instruction is right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 298.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th instant, respecting the case of the "Saxon," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 217, March 24) respecting the court-martial to be held upon Mr. Danenhower, the United States' officer who is charged with having killed Mr. Gray, the first mate of that vessel; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

[*] To Sir J. Crampton, No. 32, March 19; Sir J. Crampton, Nos. 94 and 96, 1864.

That the course pursued by Lord Lyons appears to us to have been in every respect perfectly discreet and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above was written we have received Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd instant, with the documents therein referred to (Lord Lyons' No. 235, April 5), which, however, do not appear to us to require any alteration in or addition to the foregoing Report.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 299.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th of April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Lord Lyons, Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, stating that the United States' Government would be able and willing to employ cruizers on the Coast of Africa, in execution of the Treaty of 1862 between this country and the United States for the suppression of the Slave Trade; but that, if the stringent regulations laid down in the Queen's Neutrality Proclamation of the 31st of January, 1862, are to be literally construed and carried into effect, it will necessarily prevent the employment by the United States' Government of any squadron for that service upon the African Coast.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that Her Majesty's Government propose to give directions that the rules laid down for restricting the entry of Federal cruizers into Her Majesty's ports may be relaxed in all British ports on the West Coast of Africa between Sierra Leone and Lagos, including those places, in favour of United States' cruizers bonâ fide employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade, and provided with the necessary warrant to that effect.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that before, however, taking any steps for giving effect to this decision your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with our opinion whether there is any objection in law to the contemplated proceeding.

Mr. Layard further added, that a correspondence, as marked in the margin,[*] which had passed on this subject between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office, and the Admiralty, was inclosed, together with drafts of letters which your Lordship proposes to address to those Departments and to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letters to the Colonial and Admiralty Offices, and to Lord Lyons, seem to us, with the slight addition suggested, proper to be sent; subject, nevertheless, to the following observations:—

It would be desirable to require that these vessels should be not only bonâ fide, but also exclusively employed in the suppression of the Slave Trade.

If this be deemed an impracticable or an unreasonable condition, we submit to your Lordship's consideration that it should be clearly understood by United States' cruizers, and by the Governors of Her Majesty's territories on the coast of Africa, that the relaxation of Her Majesty's orders will not be granted to United States' cruizers, though duly warranted for the suppression of the Slave Trade, which may attempt to bring into port, together with captured slavers, prizes taken from the other belligerents in this war; and also that it would be a breach of the good faith of this engagement if these cruizers were to use in any way Her Majesty's ports for the purpose of enabling them to carry on hostilities against the ships of the other belligerent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 6, February 23; Admiralty, March 11; Colonial Office, March 15; to Admiralty, April 2; Admiralty, April 5, 1864.

1864

No. 300.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 12th and 30th of January, and 2nd of February, respecting the Matamoros seizure, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing the explanation given by the United States' Government with regard to the instructions under which the United States' naval officers are acting in the Rio Grande.

And Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose further despatches from Lord Lyons,* respecting the cases of the "Sir W. Peel," and the other vessels lately captured in these waters; and was to request that we would take these several papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration and have the honour to report—

That the explanation given by the United States' Government as to the meaning of the instructions given to their cruizers, is, in terms, satisfactory, and we trust will henceforth be acted upon; but we must observe that Captain Rolando, in the case of the "Sir W. Peel," and other United States' naval officers appear either not to have understood, or not to have acted upon, their instructions as so explained.

It would have been more satisfactory if Mr. Welles' letter had also noticed (in order to disclaim) the extraordinary notion (of which the influence is apparent, both in Captain Rolando's intercepted letter, and in the depositions taken under the order for further proof in the case of the "Sir W. Peel") that the exportation from Matamoros, by neutral vessels, of cotton grown in the Confederate States, and brought from thence for exportation to Matamoros, can constitute a lawful ground of capture.

With respect to the "Sir W. Peel," we have have nothing to add, at present, to the opinions contained in our former Reports; except that the taking of depositions from persons not on board at the time of capture, and giving principally hearsay evidence is a very objectionable innovation on the course of Prize practice hitherto followed in the United States, as well as England; and that if such hearsay evidence were treated by any Prize Court as of any weight for the purpose of condemnation, it would be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to refuse to acquiesce in any sentence founded thereon.

Lord Lyons should, we think, be instructed to continue to press for the release, with proper costs and damages, of this vessel.

We are only informed that the "Matamoros" and her cargo have been restored; on what ground, and whether with or without costs and damages, we have yet to learn.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 301.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd ultimo, and previous Reports relative to the case of the "Chesapeake," he was directed to transmit to us, together with a copy of the papers lately laid before Parliament, three letters from the Colonial Office,† inclosing copies of further correspondence respecting this case, and to request that we would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st April instant, transmitting a further letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of two despatches from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, together with a printed copy of the proceedings in the case of the persons charged with the illegal seizure of the "Chesapeake," and also inclosing a private communication relative to this affair which has been placed in your Lordship's hands.

* Lord Lyons, No. 182, March 11; No. 183, March 11; No. 191, March 14, 1864.

† Colonial Office, March 6, March 29, and April 1, 1864.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the conduct of Major-General Doyle in this difficult and novel matter, was, upon the whole, very prudent and proper.

With respect to the observations of Judge Stewart as to the payment of the judicial discharge of his duty by fees, we think that they merit the careful attention of Her Majesty's Government, and that it would be very expedient that this practice should be discontinued, and a permanent salary be substituted for such a remuneration; this is an improvement which has been for many years effected in the High Court of Admiralty in England.

With respect to the proceedings in the extradition case in New Brunswick, we see no reason, practically, to regret the result of the application for habeas corpus, as the impression upon our minds has throughout been that the case was not really one of piracy. The grounds, however, of Judge Ritchie's decision are not, in our opinion, sound or satisfactory. The conduct of the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick appears to us to have been, throughout this affair, judicious, vigilant, and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 302.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 27.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers marked in the margin,* relative to the case of a vessel named the "Hawk," which has been constructed at Renfrew, in the Clyde, and is reported to be now at Greenhithe.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to point out to us that the circumstances with regard to this vessel are very suspicious; that she has had no measurement and no registry; and that she left the Clyde in the same manner as the "Alabama" left the Mersey, on a trial trip, permitted under promise that she should not go to sea, whereby a penalty of 100*l*. has been incurred: and to request that we would take these papers into immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion whether there is any ground for detaining or otherwise proceeding against this vessel.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's further letter of the 25th instant, stating that with reference to his former letter of that day's date, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter dated the 25th instant and its inclosures from the Treasury, relative to the case of the ship "Hawk;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those already before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That whatever suspicions may be entertained, it is clear that there is at present no evidence whatever to justify the seizure or detention of this vessel, as having been equipped or fitted out, &c., in violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act. Mr. Begbie, who claims to be the owner, is a person whose name has been connected with some of the ships or cargoes condemned in the United States' Prize Courts for breach of blockade; but this is, obviously, no reason for inferring that he is acting in this matter on behalf of the Government of the Confederate States, or that he intends to employ the "Hawk" as a privateer in their service.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Treasury, April 4 and April 12; Mr. Begbie, April 13; to Lord Advocate, April 13; to Treasury, April 13; to Mr. Begbie, April 15; Mr. Adams, April 16; to Lord Advocate, April 18; Treasury and Home Office, to Mr. Adams, April 18; Lord Advocate, April 19; Treasury, April 20, April 22, and April 23

1864

No. 303.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 16th instant from Mr. Adams, covering a copy of a letter from the United States' Consul in London, together with copies of twenty-one depositions of persons, mostly British subjects, who, Mr. Adams states, have been enlisted in the service of the insurgents at various places in this kingdom; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that there is evidence to convict Seymour, Bradshaw, Cunningham, and Buchanan, of offences against the 2nd Section of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and that they ought to be proceeded against.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 304.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us therewith the proof of a Return your Lordship proposes to make to an Address of the House of Lords for Return of claims made by British subjects upon the United States' Government, [for losses] sustained, either in person or property, since the secession of the Southern States; specifying how, and the grounds on which, such claims have been disposed of; and to request our particular attention to this Return, as well as to the memorandum at the foot thereof, and that we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to whether the reserve made in the Memorandum is sufficient to guard from prejudice the cases of any British claimants which may not be included in the Return.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose, on blue paper, another copy of the Return, with an explanatory Memorandum annexed to it, containing a summary of the several categories into which the claims may be divided. That your Lordship does not propose to present this Return to Parliament, but that your Lordship thought it desirable we should see it, as well for our information as in order that we may make any observations which may occur to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Memorandum at the foot of the Return appears to us sufficient for the purpose of protecting the claims of British subjects which may not be included in that Return; and that the Return itself appears to us proper to be laid before Parliament.

At page 13, No. 329, there is a deficiency to be supplied.

With respect to the Memorandum on the blue paper, it does not occur to us to offer any observations, except upon the passage at the top of page 7 of that Memorandum. It is, perhaps, not quite accurate to say that, "in all the cases of which copies of the proceedings have been sent home, the Law Officers have expressed their concurrence in the Judgments." In several of those Judgments there have been some reasons given and some doctrines propounded with which the Law Officers have not agreed; and, in other cases, they have considered the question whether the evidence warranted the decree to be open to much doubt. But in none of those cases has the Judgment, in its practical result, appeared to them to depend upon any erroneous proposition of law; and their view generally has been that while the facts considered by the Prize Court to have been established would (if established) have warranted the decree, there was evidence before the Court upon which it was at least open to a Judge, without any such miscarriage of justice as ought to be redressed otherwise than by a regular appeal, honestly to come to that conclusion upon the facts which was actually arrived at.

We agree in the opinion expressed by your Lordship that this paper should not be laid before Parliament.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 305.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our several Reports respecting the pretension of the United States' Government to treat as prisoners of war British subjects captured in blockade-runners, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (Nos. 232 and 239), respecting the imprisonment of the crews of two British vessels, the "Marianne" and the "Don," and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 233, April 5), inclosing a copy of a note which he had addressed to Mr. Seward respecting this and other subjects, was annexed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand that the crew of the "Marianne" are not imprisoned, having escaped; and that the crew of the "Don," after having been discharged by the Commissioners of Prize, were detained by orders from Washington, and confined in Fort Warren, but that they have been since released. We are of opinion that this detention, and the order in consequence of which it has been made, are illegal. We must refer to our former Reports, in which we have fully stated our opinion that it is not competent to the belligerent to treat the prize crews of neutral vessels as prisoners of war.

The letter of Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward on this subject appears to be very proper; but we are of opinion that he should be instructed to press Mr. Seward for a revocation of the general order to detain British subjects (whose evidence has been taken or is not required), even temporarily, as prisoners.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 306.

The Queen's Advocate to Mr. Hammond.—(Received May 7.)

5, Arlington Street, London, May 7, 1864.

THE Queen's Advocate presents his compliments to Mr. Hammond, and with reference to the claim of Mr. Turner against United States' Government on account of proceedings of Custom-house authorities at Boston, would be glad to see some gentleman from the Board of Trade or Customs in order to obtain exact information as to the practice of the English Custom-house in a similar case. The Queen's Advocate would suggest 2 o'clock on Monday, at 5, Arlington-street, for the interview.

No. 307.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 241, April 8), relative to the case of the "Chesapeake;"

1864

and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, together with the papers inclosed in his letter of the 21st April.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers sent to us in this case do not render it necessary to vary the opinion which we have had the honour to express to your Lordship in our recent Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 308.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 7, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th April ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter dated the 11th ultimo from the Colonial Office, stating that Mr. Secretary Cardwell proposes to communicate to the Governors of the Colonies the correspondence recently printed for Parliament in the case of the "Tuscaloosa," and is desirous to accompany it with instructions, as full and definite as it may be possible to frame with safety, for the Governor's guidance in future cases of this kind.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit some further papers, as marked in the margin,* and to request that we would consider and advise Her Majesty's Government as to what further instructions it would be proper to issue to Colonial Governors.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the preparation of these instructions unavoidably involves a question of policy, which can only be determined by Her Majesty's Government, viz., whether Her Majesty's Government will, or will not, upon this occasion, recognize and adopt the rule acted upon by the United States since the year 1793, of restoring to the original owners prizes brought into the waters of a neutral Power, if it shall be alleged and found that such prizes have been taken within the waters, or by ships illegally fitted out or equipped within the territory of that Power, which rule was, in our opinion, well founded upon principles of international and public law.

Upon this subject, it seems proper for us to observe that, some practical difficulty might, perhaps, arise in the application of this rule within Her Majesty's dominions, from the circumstance that there are no Courts in any part of those dominions of which it can be affirmed that they have direct jurisdiction (as the Courts of the United States have) to investigate and determine judicially the questions of fact arising in such cases, and to adjudge restitution when it may be found due. On the other hand, it appears from the public transactions of the years 1793-95, between the United States and Great Britain and France, and from the speech of Chief Justice Marshall in the appendix to the 5th volume of Mr. Wheaton's Reports, that this rule has been always considered in the United States to be matter of international obligation, resting on international and not on municipal law, and to be one which, if the constitution of the Courts of the United States had not enabled them to take judicial cognizance of it, would have been competently and properly enforced by the Executive authority under such regulations, as to the mode of conducting inquiries into disputed facts, as the Government of the United States might have thought fit to establish. And we think that this view is, in principle, well founded; the question in such cases being really one between the Government of the neutral State on the one hand, and the Governments to which the capturing and captured vessels respectively belong, on the other.

Under these circumstances we have prepared, in an alternative form, the drafts of two sets of instructions, which we submit for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government; the shorter form being one which it assumes that it may not be determined now to adopt and apply the American rule, and the longer form proceeding upon the opposite hypothesis.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Parliamentary Paper; Admiralty, March 11; to Admiralty, March 12; Colonial Office, March 11; to Colonial Office, March 23; Memorandum, March 26, 1864.

Inclosure 1 in No. 308.

Form 1.

Rules.

1. IF any prize captured by a ship of war of either of the belligerent Powers shall be brought by the captors within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, notice shall be given to the captors immediately to depart and to remove such prize out of Her Majesty's jurisdiction, except in the cases in which provision is made to the contrary by any of the following Rules:—

2. Every captured merchant-ship remaining in the possession or under the control of the captors, or of a prize crew put on board by them, which has never been condemned by a competent Prize Court nor brought intra præsidia of the captors' territory, shall be deemed to be a prize within the meaning of these Rules, unless she has been actually and bonâ fide converted into, and armed and used as, a public ship of war.

3. Goods or cargo, captured at sea, remaining in the possession or under the control of the captors, uncondemned by any competent Prize Court, and brought by the captors, either on board the captured vessel or otherwise, within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be prize within the meaning of these Rules.

4. If any prize shall be brought within Her Majesty's jurisdiction through mere stress of weather, or other necessity arising from accidental causes, such time as the Governor may think reasonable, under the circumstances, may be allowed to the captors to remove such prize beyond Her Majesty's jurisdiction.

5. If any prize shall not be duly removed beyond Her Majesty's jurisdiction after notice given for that purpose, the Governor may detain such prize until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be made known concerning the same, if, in his discretion, he shall see fit to do so.

6. If any such prize shall have been captured by means of any violation of the territory or territorial waters of the same Colony or Government within which such prize shall be brought, the Governor shall, of his own authority, detain such prize until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be made known concerning the same.

7. These Orders are to be applied and carried into effect, subject to all such proceedings (if any) as may lawfully be taken, and to all such orders (if any) as may be made, in or by any Court of competent jurisdiction, in any of Her Majesty's colonies or other possessions, concerning any prize.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

Inclosure 2 in No. 308.

Form 2.

Rules.

1. IF any prize captured by a ship of war of either of the belligerent Powers shall be brought by the captors within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, notice shall be given to the captors immediately to depart and to remove such prize out of Her Majesty's jurisdiction, except in the cases in which provision is made to the contrary by any of the following Rules:—

2. Every captured merchant-ship remaining in the possession or under the control of the captors, or of a prize crew put on board by them, which has never been condemned by a competent Prize Court, nor brought intra præsidia of the captors' territory, shall be deemed to be a prize within the meaning of these Rules, unless she has been actually and bonâ fide converted into, and armed and used as, a public ship of war.

3. Goods or cargo, captured at sea, remaining in the possession or under the control of the captors, uncondemned by any competent Prize Court, and brought by the captors, either on board the captured vessel or otherwise, within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, shall be deemed to be prize within the meaning of these Rules.

4. If any prize shall be brought within Her Majesty's jurisdiction through mere stress of weather, or other necessity arising from accidental causes, such time as the Governor may think reasonable, under the circumstances, may be allowed to the captors to remove such prize beyond Her Majesty's jurisdiction.

1864

5. If any prize shall not be duly removed beyond Her Majesty's jurisdiction after notice given for that purpose, the Governor may detain such prize until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be made known concerning the same, if in his discretion he shall see fit to do so.

6. Any prize brought within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, contrary to Her Majesty's orders, may be reclaimed by the original owners or owner in any of the following cases:—

(1.) If the capture was made within Her Majesty's jurisdiction, or by any lying in wait, attack, or pursuit, from waters subject to Her Majesty's jurisdiction:

(2.) If the vessel which made the capture was equipped, furnished, fitted out, or armed, in any part of Her Majesty's dominions with intent or in order that she should be employed in the service of the belligerent, under whose authority the capture was made, to cruize or commit hostilities against the other belligerent, contrary to the provisions of the Statute 59 George III, cap. 69:

(3.) If the vessel which made the capture has had her warlike force increased or augmented in any part of Her Majesty's dominions by adding to the number of the guns of such vessel, or by the addition of any equipment for war, contrary to the provisions of the same Statute.

7. If any such prize shall be claimed by or on behalf of the original owners or owner thereof, or by any Consul or public agent of the Government of such original owners or owner, on any of the grounds mentioned in the last preceding rule, the grounds alleged for such claim shall be investigated in such manner and by such persons as the Governor shall direct, and in the meantime such prize shall be detained in safe custody under the authority of the Governor; and if it shall appear to the Governor, after investigating such claim, that any of the grounds so alleged for such claim are substantiated, he shall report the facts with the evidence thereof to Her Majesty's Government, and shall further detain such prize until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be made known concerning the same.

8. If any such prize shall have been captured by means of any violation of the territory or territorial waters of the same Colony or Government within which such prize shall be brought, the Governor shall of his own authority detain such prize until Her Majesty's pleasure shall be made known concerning the same, without waiting for any claim to be first made thereto by or on behalf of the original owners.

9. These Orders are to be applied and carried into effect, subject to all such proceedings (if any) as may lawfully be taken, and to all such Orders (if any) as may be made in or by any Court of competent jurisdiction in any of Her Majesty's Colonies or other possessions concerning any prize.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 309.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 10.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 9, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a note, dated the 16th ultimo, which has been received from Mr. Adams in reply to the note which was addressed to Mr. Adams in conformity with our Report of the 6th ultimo, and in which he incloses copies of certain papers in confirmation of his position that British subjects captured in blockade runners may properly be treated as enemies of the United States; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch of Mr. Adams does not induce us to vary the advice which, upon the general question, we have had the honour to tender to Her Majesty's Government. There is really nothing in the Acts of the Congress of the Confederate States, or in the prospectus of the "Atlantic Trading Company, Limited," which either calls for or tends in any degree to explain or justify the orders of the United States' Government to which Mr. Adams refers. We think that Her Majesty's Government should continue to insist that it is not competent for the United States' Government to treat generally as enemies the subjects of Her Majesty captured in the act of trading with the other belligerent, whatever may be the regulations of the Confederate Government under which that trade is carried on. If the circumstances of any peculiar case should prove that any of Her Majesty's subjects have been taken while actively employed in the military service of the belligerent States, no just cause of complaint would be given if such subjects were treated as enemies. But the subjects of Her Majesty are entitled by international law to carry on the operations of commerce equally with both belligerents, subject to the penalty of the capture of their vessels, and to no other penalty, if they attempt to violate a properly constituted blockade, or to carry contraband of war to the enemy.

This is a proposition which it is incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to state with great precision and firmness to the Government of the United States, as one which they and the Governments of all other neutral States are bound to maintain and uphold; and we are decidedly of opinion that the circumstances under which the trade between the Confederate States and this country is now carried on, are in no respect so exceptional as to entitle the United States' Government to depart in their manner of dealing with it from the ordinary course of procedure.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 310.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 10.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 9, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (Nos. 236 and 246), respecting the case of the "Scylla," a vessel which would appear to have been inveigled into American waters and there seized as a prize; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Lord Lyons in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Lord Lyons has taken a most just view of his duty in this matter. That we think his Lordship should be instructed, that Her Majesty's Government have felt much surprise and sorrow that so dishonourable an act of avowed treachery and bad faith on the part of an officer should not have been immediately repudiated by the United States' Government, and that there should have been any delay whatever in the immediate restoration of the vessel which was so disgracefully seized; unless any grounds can be shown for the allegation that the "Scylla" was really not a British vessel.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 311.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 10, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to our Report of the 6th instant, relative to the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on trade between New York and the British Colonies in America, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 221) inclosing a copy of a further note from Mr. Seward on this subject; and to request that we would take the same into consideration together with the previous papers, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be advisable to address any further instructions to Lord Lyons on this matter, in addition to those contained in the despatch, also inclosed, founded on our above-mentioned Report.

1864

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letters of the 26th ultimo and 5th instant, transmitting a letter, dated the 22nd ultimo, from the Colonial Office, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 267), and a letter, dated the 3rd instant, and its inclosure from the Colonial Office, respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to find any answer in the letter of Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons of the 17th March last, to the objections conveyed in your Lordship's despatch founded upon our former Report. It is manifestly no answer to the objections of a neutral and friendly State, that Treaty obligations have been violated by the State which was the other party to the Treaty, to allege that a municipal law of that State has rendered necessary this violation. We retain the opinion which we have had the honour to express in our former Report on this subject. It is to be hoped that Lord Lyons' endeavour to induce the United States' Government to dispense with the exaction of the bonds in question, so far, at all events, as relates to the trade between the United States and the Provinces of New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, may be successful; and if this should be the case, it may probably not be expedient to prolong, at the present time, the discussion on the general question, as to which the views of Her Majesty's Government have been fully and repeatedly expressed. But if this hope should be disappointed, we think his Lordship should be instructed to apprise Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government regret to be obliged to state that his explanations continue to be entirely unsatisfactory, and that Mr. Seward must be aware that no municipal law can justify a departure from the obligations of a Treaty, so far as the other party to that Treaty is concerned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 312.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 10, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 14th December, 1863, from Mr. John Turner, respecting a claim put forward by Mr. James Turner against the Government of the United States on account of certain proceedings on the part of the Custom-house authorities at Boston, in regard to some boxes of artificial flowers shipped by him to that port; also a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 177) containing the explanation given by the United States' Government of the proceedings complained of by Mr. James Turner: and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which it would be proper that Her Majesty's Government should pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that Mr. J. Turner has not made out any case against the Custom-house authorities at Boston, which requires any application by Her Majesty's Government on his behalf to the Government of the United States.

I should have formed this opinion upon the papers submitted to me, but I am fortified in it by a conference which I have had the advantage of having with Mr. Ogilvie (whom the Board of Customs were so obliging as to send to me), as to the old law and practice of the English Custom-house in similar cases. The case of Mr. Turner, shortly stated, is this:—he has imported certain cases of artificial flowers into Boston, and has tended the invoices as proof of the value of these articles upon which the duty was to be paid. The usual appraisers at the Custom-house were of opinion that the real value was understated to the amount of 8 per cent. in the invoices, and that he must pay the duty upon this increased value; he has not done so, and the Custom-house detains the article till he does. An officer called "the General Appraiser" was of opinion that the value was fraudulently understated in the invoices; in which case, according to the law of the United States, they would be liable, I believe, to absolute forfeiture; but the Collector appears to have over-ruled this opinion, and without charging fraud, to have added 8 per cent. to the value.

It is, of course, not a question for Her Majesty's Government whether the law and practice of the United States' Customs be wise or unwise, just or unjust in its practical application, in accordance or not in accordance with the improved law and practice of the Customs in this country. But as Mr. Turner refers to the practice of our Customs as illustrating the wrong which he has suffered, it may be as well to make the following observations:—

The United States persevere in the system of ad valorem duties, which we have abandoned. While that system was in force here, the merchant, upon importation, gave to the Customs a document called an "entry," showing the name of the ship, value of cargo, the amount of duty, and other particulars. The duty was received upon this document; it was sent to the Custom-house officer, who opened and examined the goods. If satisfied with the value the superior officer certified approval; if the officers thought the value incorrectly stated, they might detain the goods and pay the merchant the value he had declared upon, with 5 per cent. and repayment of the duty. The goods were then sold for the benefit of the Crown (57th section of 16 and 17 Vict., cap. 107.) But they did not call for, or think themselves bound by the invoice, and were perfectly aware that the invoice prepared for the Custom-house did not, from various causes, always accurately represent the price actually paid for the goods.

The United States' Customs authorities do require the invoice to be presented, but they do not, and never did consider it, as Mr. Turner seems to think they ought, unexaminable or necessarily binding upon them. They submit the goods, as they have done in this case, to the examination of their officers, and are guided by their report. In cases of fraud they confiscate, I believe, the goods. In cases of undervaluing without fraud, they increase the value and detain the goods till the duty on the increased value be paid. This law and practice of the United States' Customs is well known, of course, to all merchants who trade with that country. It is no new law or new practice. It is applied, indiscriminately, I presume, to the merchants of all countries. It may operate to check trade, it may be a bad fiscal measure; but it certainly does not, in my opinion, call for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this particular case, to which it seems to have been applied without any circumstance of aggravation in the ordinary course of practice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 313.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 11, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin,* respecting some goods which had been brought to the Mauritius in the French barque "Sirène," and for the detention of which application was made by the United States' Consul to the Governor of the Colony, on the ground that they had formed part of the cargo of the Confederate prize "Sea Bride;" and Mr. Murray stated that we should observe from the letter from the Colonial Office of the 5th instant, that Mr. Secretary Cardwell is of opinion that as the question of the general instructions to be issued to the Governors of Her Majesty's Colonies was brought under our consideration in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th ultimo, it is desirable that we should also have before us the papers now sent to us relative to the disposal of the cargoes of prize-vessels brought into a colonial port in British or other neutral vessels; and Mr. Murray was accordingly to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with those lately before us, and embody in the proposed instructions to the Colonial Governors such directions as we may consider advisable on this particular head.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, after considering these papers, it does not appear to us to be necessary to make any change in or addition to the draft instructions prepared by us, pursuant to the request conveyed in Mr. Layard's letter of the 16th ultimo.

Questions such as that lately raised at the Mauritius by the United States' Consul with respect to the cargo of the "Sea Bride" must be left, in our opinion, to the Civil

---

* Colonial Office, April 14; Queen's Advocate, April 22; to Colonial Office, April 25; Colonial Office, May 5, 1864.

1864

Tribunals. The Executive Government has no authority to disregard or call in question the primâ facie title, evidenced by possession, of a private non-belligerent person, who brings property of this description into a neutral port, whether he be a foreigner or a British subject. And there is no foundation in law for the idea that a valid title cannot be made to property taken in war, by enemy from enemy, without a prior sentence of condemnation.

The absence of such a sentence may be material, when the question is, whether captured goods brought by a belligerent ship of war, exempt from civil jurisdiction, into a neutral port from which prizes are excluded, ought to be regarded by the neutral Government as still having the character of prize; but this is altogether different from a mere question of property in the goods themselves.

We have, &c.
Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 314.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 5th and 16th of March last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons† respecting the case of Mr. James McHugh, a British subject confined as a prisoner in Fort Lafayette; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the British nationality of Mr. McHugh appears now to be clearly established; and, although he is admitted to be interested as a partner in a commercial house in the Confederate States, it seems clear that, as far as residence is concerned, he was never domiciled there. He completely denies the charges of having taken an active or any hostile part against the United States, and of having been the bearer of any political correspondence. The charge against him of carrying photographs of Confederate Generals is frivolous, and we are surprised that any weight should have been attached to it by Mr. Seward. The rest of the accusations on which he is imprisoned, seem to rest on letters written by him while in the United Kingdom, for which he cannot be held responsible to the United States. Under these circumstances, although our original impression, formed on less perfect information, was that his original imprisonment might perhaps be justified, we think that no sufficient ground has been shown to exist for his detention: and that Lord Lyons may properly be instructed to press the case upon the attention of the United States' Government, with a view to Mr. McHugh's release.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 315.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 10th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence with the Treasury, and a letter from the Admiralty,‡ respecting the arrival in the port of Liverpool of the Confederate steamer "Georgia," the vessel which formed the subject of our Reports of the 30th April and 10th August, 1863. Also a note from Mr. Adams dated the 9th instant, making a representation respecting this vessel; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that it would be proper to ascertain that the ship "Georgia" is continuing, and about to continue in Liverpool for the purposes and only for the purposes sanctioned by Her Majesty's rules, which extends to repairs, but do not allow delay in the execution of such repairs or after their completion. If the rumour should prove to be correct that it is intended permanently to dismantle and sell her at Liverpool, it will be entirely for Her Majesty's Government to determine how far they will suffer her continuance in port for this purpose, which is certainly not within the scope of Her Majesty's rules. We would only suggest that if it should be thought fit to permit her continuance for such a purpose, it would probably be right to require good and substantial security against her future employment for belligerent purposes.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 316.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 16, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st April ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 19th February last, upon the Judgment of condemnation pronounced by Judge Betts in the case of the "Springbok," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a paper, accompanied by an English translation, which has been published in the "Mémorial Diplomatique," in which exception is taken to that Judgment.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that this paper was sent to us for our perusal, but your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with any observations which we might think it necessary to offer thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose the printed copy of Judge Betts' Judgment.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a careful perusal of the article in the "Mémorial Diplomatique" does not induce us to alter the opinion which we have already had the honour to express in our Report on the decision of Judge Betts in the case of the "Springbok."

That article condemns the Judgment upon the law applied to the facts of the case, and upon the inferences drawn from the facts of the case by the learned Judge.

We are of opinion that, upon both these points, the argument of the reviewer is unsound.

The main ground upon which the reviewer impugns the law of the sentence is, that it has laid down "that every transport of a contraband article between neutral ports is illegal, if these articles are destined to be ulteriorly forwarded to the enemy of the belligerent making the seizure." But that statement conveys an incorrect impression of the legal proposition which is the foundation of the sentence.

It has not been maintained by Judge Betts in this case that the bonâ fide transport of contraband from one neutral port to another is illegal; or that there can be contraband in articles carried bonâ fide, as articles of commerce, between one neutral State and another.

The legal propositions of Judge Betts are:—

1. That articles contraband of war, destined for the aid and use of the enemy, and on transportation by sea to the enemy's country, are liable to capture as lawful prize of war, if seized while being so transported.*

2. That if a cargo be despatched from a neutral port, with an intention on the part of the person despatching it, that, in violation of a blockade known to exist, it shall enter a port of the enemy, it may be captured as lawful prize.

3. That contraband articles destined, on their departure from a neutral port, to be delivered to the enemy, either by being carried directly into a port of the enemy in the vessel in which they leave the neutral port, or by being transhipped at another neutral port into another vessel, are the subject of capture.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 57, 103, and 111.

† Lord Lyons, No. 234, April 5, 1864.

‡ Treasury, May 2; to Treasury, May 3; Treasury, May 3; Admiralty, May 9, 1864.

* Judgment of Judge Betts in the case of the "Springbok," p. 20.

1864

4. That if the contraband articles are really intended to be delivered to the enemy at some other place than the neutral port named in the papers of the vessel as the destination of the cargo, and that neutral port is to be used merely as a port of call or of transhipment, and the goods are not to be delivered there for discharge and general consumption or sale there, and if, in that way, the representations contained in the papers of the vessel are false and fraudulent as to the real destination of the goods, they are liable to capture.

5. That, if the owner of a vessel places it under the control of a master who permits it to carry under false papers contraband goods, ostensibly destined for a neutral port, but in reality going to a port of the enemy, he must sustain the consequence of such misconduct on the part of his agent.*

6. That where contraband goods destined for the use of the enemy are found on board of a vessel, all other goods on board of that vessel belonging to the owner of the contraband articles, even those goods which are innocent, must share the fate of the contraband goods.

These are legal propositions which are, in our opinion, well founded upon principles of maritime international law; at all events, they are in accordance with the decisions of our own Prize Courts.

Lord Stowell applied the same rule to vessels sailing with contraband, with a real destination to an enemy's port, as to vessels sailing with the intention of breaking a blockade, namely, that both classes of vessels were liable to be taken in delicto, while in the actual prosecution of their voyage (the "Imina," 3 Rob., 167; the "Trende Sostré," 6 Rob., 390). And in considering what was the real destination of a cargo, Lord Stowell certainly did hold that the mere transhipment of a cargo at an intermediate port would not break the continuity of a voyage, which could only be effected by an actual importation of the cargo into the common stock of the country where the transhipment took place. He even held that where a cargo was sold at a port, whilst water-borne, and then immediately transhipped, there had been no legal importation at all. Such sale and transhipment were only stages towards the real port of destination: to use his own words, "they lengthen the chain, but do not alter its direction" (the "Thornyris," Edward's Admiralty Reports, page 20).

Lord Stowell also certainly held that a false destination, with contraband on board, subjected both ship and cargo to condemnation (the "Franklin," 3 Rob., 217); and that the penalty of contraband extended to all property of the same owner involved in the same unlawful transaction (the "Neptunas," 6 Rob., 409; the "Sarah Christina," 1 Rob., 242).

As to the facts of this case, and the inference drawn from them by the Judge, that learned person says:—"I am entirely satisfied, from all the evidence in the case, that the cargo of the 'Springbok' was intended to be delivered in the enemy's country, by transhipment, at Nassau, into a vessel in which it should be carried through the blockade, and that such was the intended destination of the cargo on its departure from England. The papers found on board the vessel, so far as they represent Nassau as the ultimate destination of the cargo, were false and simulated." (Judgment of Judge Betts, page 25.)

Now there can be no doubt that a large portion of this cargo, assuming that its real destination was to an enemy's port, was unquestionably contraband; and the evidence invoked, according to the usage of Prize Courts, from the cases of the "Stephen Hart" and the "Gertrude," in which the same claimants for cargo appeared as in the case of the "Springbok" (to which evidence no reference is made in the "Mémorial Diplomatique"), did, in conjunction with other facts, warrant the inferences which the learned Judge drew from all the circumstances of the case, that the real destination of the vessel was concealed by her papers.

These are the principal observations which it has occurred to us to make, in obedience to your Lordship's wishes, upon the criticism of the "Mémorial Diplomatique," upon the Judgment in the case of the "Springbok."

It is proper also to observe, that the authority principally relied on by the writer, namely, M. Hautefeuille, contradicts in his work most of the principles of maritime international law which have been maintained by the Prize Courts of England and America; and that the citations from English authorities are so applied as to misrepresent, in our judgment, the meaning of the passages quoted.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Judgment of Judge Betts, p. 25.

No. 317.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, May 21, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a correspondence,* partly in print, and partly in manuscript, respecting the enlistment at Portland and Boston of a number of Irishmen who were induced to proceed to America in consequence of the expectations held out to them by a person named Finney or Pheeney, as stated in the papers lately laid before Parliament, of which a copy was inclosed; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer upon the proceedings and Report of the Court of Inquiry at Portland, which are given in Lord Lyons' despatch No. 269 of the 19th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we entertain no doubt that the enlistment of these Irishmen was the result of a fraudulent scheme, contrived and executed in disregard of the laws and neutral rights of Great Britain.

Having been induced, in evident bad faith, and under false pretences to leave their own country for the purpose of an employment which was not really ready for them on their arrival in the United States, the men enlisted at Portland were designedly plied with drink, and then dealt with in a manner which (although it might be the legal consequence of their disordered condition) made it natural, and almost inevitable, that they should easily yield to the persuasions of the recruiting officers, who were on the look-out for them, and who obtained access to them while in confinement, by the aid of the police authorities.

Notwithstanding the Report made by the Provost Marshal and Board of Enrolment at Portland, we think that the facts are sufficient to warrant Lord Lyons in pressing his application to the United States' Government for the discharge of these men.

As between one Government and another, the testimony of Berwick and Bradley, annexed to the Report, and very properly referred to by Mr. Consul Murray, ought to suffice for this application. The latter proves that some one (name unknown) carried a large quantity of whiskey to the wharf, where the ship lay with the emigrants. It is clear that this man must have been concerned for the recruiting officers, whether they directly sanctioned the particular act or not. The former proves that at the liquor store there were "well-dressed men," who were "liberal with their money," not drinking themselves, but supplying drink to these unfortunate men, and requesting the police to aid them in enlisting the men, and giving them drink.

It seems to us, that upon this evidence, and upon the general circumstances of the case, Lord Lyons might reasonably expect to obtain the release of these men.

The case of the men landed from the "Nova Scotian" at Boston, although not similar in its particular circumstances, ought, in our opinion, to be dealt with on the same principles.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 318.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 21.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, May 21, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 8th of February last, he was directed to transmit to me, together with the previous papers,* a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons,† respecting Mr. Nicol's claim against the United States' Government for losses said to have been sustained by him at the time of the

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 189 and 269.

† Lord Lyons, No. 277, April 25, 1864.

‡ Lord Lyons, No. 9, January 12, 1864.

1864

occupation of the town of Kingston by the Federal troops; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further evidence now submitted to me in this case does not, in my opinion, render it necessary that any instructions should be given to Lord Lyons to interfere further officially on behalf of Mr. Nicol. Mr. Nicol must seek the same remedies as are competent to an American subject for the injuries alleged to have been inflicted upon real property in Kingston by soldiers in this time of civil war.

It might, I think, be left entirely to the unfettered discretion of Lord Lyons whether he can or cannot use informally any good offices on behalf of Mr. Nicol with the United States' Government; and if he thinks fit, in furtherance of that object, to submit to Mr. Seward's attention these affidavits. But I am of opinion that Lord Lyons ought not to be instructed to make any further formal application to the United States' Government in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 319.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 253), together with a despatch dated the 1st ultimo and its inclosure from Consul Wilkins, respecting a claim put forward by Mr. George T. Jones, a British subject resident at St. Louis, to be compensated on account of his imprisonment by the United States' authorities in that city; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a careful perusal of the papers submitted to us in this case leads us to the opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not required by the circumstances to support the claim of Mr. Jones for compensation. St. Louis, we presume, is under martial law, which is exercised equally over the native and the domiciled citizen. Mr. Jones puts in the form of a handbill, and sells in large quantities, an extract from a London newspaper, containing a severe and offensive censure of the United States' Government. For this he is arrested, and, after a short period of detention, released without trial. He is again twice arrested for acts connected with the distribution and circulation of papers deemed by the Provost Marshal to be seditious. Of these two latter arrests, the first was little more than nominal, as he was almost immediately released on his parol; the second was accompanied by an order to close his store, and was followed by his trial before a Military Court. In the result he was acquitted of all the charges against him, except that for which, after his original arrest, he had been released; and, on this point, the finding of the Court Martial against him was (for that reason only) not confirmed.

Looking to all the circumstances of the case, we cannot avoid coming to the conclusion that the losses and inconveniences which his temporary arrest inflicted upon him were in great measure the consequences of his own indiscretion in word and deed.

He is a domiciled inhabitant of the United States engaged in the trade of selling newspapers in a place under martial law, at the period of a furious and bitter civil war.

He cannot reasonably maintain that the country of his birth and native allegiance is bound to demand compensation for him, when his conduct in the management of his trade at this period has led to his arrest and trial, though that trial has ended in his acquittal and release, certainly not to the discredit of the United States' authorities.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 320.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 6), inclosing a copy of the proceedings in the case of the "Excelsior" recently tried in the District Court of Louisiana, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand this vessel to have been condemned for a breach of blockade, and on the ground of her being enemy's property. That we are not prepared, upon the present evidence, to advise your Lordship that she has been unlawfully condemned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 321.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th of May instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons[*] respecting the British vessels seized in the Rio Grande, together with a despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans,[†] respecting the case of the schooner "Matamoras."

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us letters which had lately been received from Messrs. Bischoff and Co. and Mr. Horsfall[‡] respecting these cases, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with the previous correspondence which was also inclosed, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the "Matamoras," we are apprised of her acquittal by the Prize Court, but not as to the decision (which had probably been delayed for consideration) as to costs and damages. We are still clearly of opinion that these ought to be awarded, for although there is considerable force in the observations of the Judge upon the peculiar position of Matamoras, and the neighbourhood of Matamoras to Brownsville on the opposite bank of the same boundary river, and though the decision of the "Twee Gebroeders" (3 Rob., 162) might be cited in favour of a refusal, it must be remembered that in this case the vessel had been twice visited, and twice released by United States' cruizers; that she was actually discharging her cargo in neutral waters and to a neutral port at the time, and that she was really seized, as appears from the depositions, because the seizor believed that cotton, cards, and boots and shoes were (which they certainly were not) contraband.

With respect to the opinion of Mr. Briggs that it is not competent to a neutral friend, any more than to a belligerent, to insist in a Prize Court that the capture of his vessel was illegal on account of its having been made in neutral waters (and which opinion he founds upon references to two writers), we think he has mistaken the sense of the passages to which he refers. It is clear that these writers are speaking of the enemy's and not of the neutral's position in the Prize Court. "This rule," says Wheaton, one of the writers cited (ed. Lawrence, p. 722, vol. i), "is founded upon the principle that the neutral State alone has been injured by the capture, and that the hostile claimant has no right to appear for the purpose of suggesting the invalidity of the capture."

The right of one belligerent to capture the ship of the other belligerent is, so far as he is concerned, unlimited by place; but the right of the belligerent to visit and search

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 263, April 19, 1863.

[†] Mr. Coppell, No. 7, March 18, 1864.

[‡] Messrs. Bischoff, April 16; to Messrs. Bischoff, April 22; Mr. Horsfall, April 20, 1864.

1864

the neutral is limited by place; it can only be put in force upon the high seas, or in the waters of one or other of the belligerents. The neutral, therefore, is entitled to claim restitution of his vessel on the ground that the captor had no right to visit, much less capture him, in the particular place of his capture.

With respect to the "Sir William Peel," "Dashing Wave," "Science," and "Volant," as no Judgment has yet been given in any of these cases, we are not in a condition to offer any opinion. But we must not pass by without comment the expressions ascribed to the Judge of the Prize Court by Mr. Briggs in his letter to Mr. Coppell (Inclosure 1 in No. 263 of Lord Lyons), as to the danger incurred by a vessel bound to a neutral port which "is tempted to approach interdicted waters." We do not clearly understand the meaning of these expressions. The only waters which are legally "interdicted" to neutrals are the waters of blockaded ports, an approach to which may or may not, in particular circumstances, lead to the conclusion that the vessel was intending to break the blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 322.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 25, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th of May instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 27th December, 1862, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence with respect to the case of the "York," which had passed since that date between the Foreign Office and Lord Lyons,* and with Messrs. Martin and Son, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which, under the present circumstances of the case, it would be proper for Her Majesty's Government to pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are compelled to arrive at the conclusion that the United States' authorities are determined to find excuses, which may ultimately enable them to evade the fulfilment of a plain duty, namely, that of making just compensation for the illegal and causeless destruction of this unfortunate ship.

We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to express, on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, deep regret at the course which the United States' Government have thought proper to pursue in this case. The case is that of the ship of a neutral and friendly State (which all the evidence conspires to prove was bound on a lawful voyage, and which met with a disastrous accident), fired upon and destroyed by the cruizers of a friendly State. This outrage is committed, and afterwards defended, upon the mere suggestions and allegations of supposed circumstances of suspicion, all of which are satisfactorily refuted by positive evidence of a character beyond suspicion.

It might have been reasonably supposed that a friendly State would have hastened to repair this grave and palpable injury, but a directly opposite course has been pursued. First, the papers were mislaid or put aside, and the claim forgotten. Then, when recalled to remembrance, a promise was given that it should be inquired into. Then it is said that the evidence as to the value of the property comes from "disloyal" persons, and cannot be believed; and that if the innocence of the vessel be proved (as it certainly is) aliunde, the question of value is still to be disputed, and that an inquiry by a Court or Commission may be necessary. Thus, for a gross outrage, whereby an innocent merchant's property was destroyed in January 1862, not a single practical step has been taken down to May 1864 to redress the wrong.

These are the observations which it occurs to us to make upon the present state of this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 262, April 19, 1864.

No. 323.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 25, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 4th May instant, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 16th of July and 19th of September last, respecting the case of the schooner "Clyde," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing a copy of the judicial proceedings with regard to that vessel, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to form a satisfactory opinion with respect to the merits of this case without a perusal of the Judgment in extenso, a copy of which does not accompany these papers; nor have we the opinion of the Counsel for the claimants, as to the ruling of the Court, that there were "probable grounds for the seizure" of both ship and cargo, and as to his consequent refusal of costs to the claimants. We do not understand that costs were given to the captors.

As the vessel was restored to an English owner, and the cargo of cotton partly to him, and partly to a Mexican claimant, the question, which the earlier stage of the case seemed to have raised, as to enemy's goods in a neutral bottom, does not appear to have been discussed. This, however, in the absence of the Judgment itself, can only be a conjecture on our part.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 324.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 27, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of the 2nd of August, 1862, and the Report of the Queen's Advocate of the 20th of December, 1862, relative to the case of the "Lilla," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 255, April 11), inclosing a copy of the Judgment of the Circuit Court of the United States with regard to this vessel; and that we should perceive from a previous despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 143, February 29), which, together with the former correspondence, Mr. Layard was pleased to transmit to us, that the British claimants have abandoned the appeal in this case; but that your Lordship is, nevertheless, desirous of receiving our opinion thereupon: and Mr. Layard was accordingly to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the peculiar feature of this case, which in the first instance requires attention, is the circumstance that the "Lilla" was a United States' vessel which had been captured by a Confederate cruizer and taken into a Confederate port, and there condemned (as we must presume) by a Prize Court of the Confederate States.

That it is not clear whether a regular sentence of condemnation in a Confederate Prize Court was, or was not, produced at the hearing of this case before the District or First Court of the United States. It is said that the "dates of the pretended condemnation and sale do not appear."

We do not, however, understand that the sentence of either Court proceeded at all upon the supposition that such a sentence, regularly proved, would have been ineffectual to change the title if it had been established that there was a subsequent bonâ fide transfer to a neutral purchaser: and we think the case must be considered upon the assumption (of the correctness of which we entertain no doubt, whatever doubts the authorities of the United States may affect to throw upon it), that such a neutral title would have been perfectly valid and unimpeachable.

1864

The Judgment seems to have proceeded on the ground that there was no real transfer of the property to the British owner, but that the beneficial interest in it still remained in the enemy, whose officer continued on board and navigated the vessel as the actual master, though there was another master appearing as such upon the papers and ready to act in the case of her being overhauled by a Federal cruizer. There was also great doubt whether, if the owner were British at all, the claimant, Mr. Bushby, was that owner, or whether she was not in fact owned by Fraser, Trenholme, and Co., who have a firm at Charleston as well as at Liverpool.

There seems further to have been evidence warranting the conclusion that part of the cargo belonged to a person domiciled in the enemy's counntry, and that other portions had been fraudulently covered under a neutral claim.

There was great reason to believe that the whole cargo was really destined to be delivered in the Confederate States, either by the "Lilla" herself or by transhipment at Nassau into another vessel; but we do not dwell upon this point, because the real ground of condemnation seems to have been that the ship and cargo were (subject to the claim of the original owners of the ship in the United States to restitution on payment of salvage) enemy's property.

Upon the whole, we think that there was adequate ground for the condemnation, and for the refusal of further proof; and we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to instruct Lord Lyons to make any application on behalf of the vessel or cargo to the United States' Government.

The claimants of both appear to have been aided by very efficient Counsel before the Courts.

It is for the executors to act on their advice with respect to the prosecution of the Appeal.

As we understand that Lord Lyons has already expressed the surprise of Her Majesty's Government that any doubt should have been thrown by the Judge upon the validity of a title resting on a regular decree of condemnation in a Confederate Prize Court, we will only observe that (as long as there appears to be any disposition on the part of the Courts or Government of the United States to call such a title in question), it would be well that Lord Lyons should avail himself of every opportunity to state that Her Majesty's Government consider a title so acquired to be as unquestionable as the belligerent right of the United States to maintain and enforce the blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 325.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, May 31, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 304, May 9), inclosing copies of a Bill which has been introduced into the United States' Senate to provide for the adjustment of claims of aliens on account of injury to their persons, or on account of the use, injury, or destruction of their property by civil, military, and naval authorities of the United States; and to request that we would take the provisions of this Bill into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Bill does not appear to us to call for any observation from Her Majesty's Government. It seems to be a very proper measure, and the omissions suggested by Lord Lyons to be judicious.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 326.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 1.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 1, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter dated the 28th ultimo from the Board of Admiralty, inclosing a despatch from Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope, reporting certain directions which he has given in regard to the Confederate steamer "Florida," and also a letter of the same date from the Colonial Office on the same subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Mr. Secretary Cardwell would much wish to be enabled to send instructions to the Colonial Governor by the mail which is made up to-day for the West Indies; and that he was accordingly to request that we would take the matter into our immediate consideration, and, if possible in the course of the day, report to your Lordship our opinion as to any communication which should be made by your Lordship either to the Board of Admiralty or to the Colonial Office, in regard to the course adopted by Sir James Hope.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our immediate consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the propositions of law relied upon by Admiral Hope in his confidential communication to the Commander of the "Florida" are perfectly accurate, and though it would be necessary for Her Majesty's Government to treat as unlawful the destruction of any British vessel by a Confederate cruizer in the circumstances supposed by him (if such a case were to occur), we are nevertheless of opinion that the Admiral has fallen into error, both in requiring any engagement from the Confederate captain on this subject, and also in proposing to cause the exclusion of the "Florida" from British colonial ports if such an engagement is declined. A neutral is not entitled to assume, a priori, that a belligerent will act contrary to international law, and still less to require security in the shape of an engagement against such a contingency. The circumstances as to the "Martaban" do not appear to us sufficient to introduce any exception in the present case to the general rule. Again, if there were any conduct of the Confederate captain which might require an exceptional course of action on the part of Her Majesty's Government, we conceive that it would not be within the province of the Admiral on the station, or of any Colonial Governor, to determine in what manner that conduct ought to be resented or met. We therefore think that it would have been a grave error if, in the event of the actual destruction at sea by a Confederate cruizer, of a merchant-ship bearing British colours or papers, the Admiral had (as he seems to have contemplated doing) treated the capturing vessel as an enemy, and taken her with a view to condemnation into a British port. It would be for the British and the Confederate Governments, in such a case, to discuss between them the question, and to decide, first, whether the ship destroyed was, under the actual circumstances, entitled to British protection (false colours and papers being not unfrequently assumed); and secondly, what the nature and amount of the proper reparation ought to be.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 327.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 6.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 4, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th May ultimo, stating that with reference to that portion of our Report of the 12th April which relates to the case of the steamer "Pearl," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, two further despatches and their inclosures from Mr. Consul Archibald respecting this case (Nos. 30 and 47), and a letter dated the 13th ultimo and its inclosures from Mr. Wigg, the owner of the "Pearl," complaining of the proceedings adopted, and urging Her Majesty's Government to interfere on his behalf; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer thereupon, and also with our opinion as to the answer to be made to Mr. Wigg.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That when this case was last before us, the Judge of the District Court of the United States (Mr. Marvin) expressed an opinion that though the state of facts raised a strong presumption against the "Pearl," he would allow the claimant to produce testimony, founded upon his own oath, and that of others connected with the vessel, to rebut that presumption; and we were of opinion that the Judge had acted fairly in so doing.

We presume that this further evidence (though we have no copy of it before us) was produced, for we find that the Judge released the vessel on the condition that the claimants paid the costs incident to the judicial investigation of the case.

Such a sentence has not been uncommon in the English Prize Courts; and indeed the general rule has been to decree to the captors, in cases of restitution of property, their costs and expenses, either where there has been probable cause of capture, or where, from the imperfect evidence adduced by the claimants, further proof has been required.

With respect to the appeal, prosecuted by the Attorney-General of the United States, from the sentence releasing the "Pearl," it was certainly competent to him to take this course, though it is not a very usual one, and though it appears to us to be a harsh proceeding in the circumstances of this case, and we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to represent to Mr. Seward the hardship which such a proceeding inflicts upon the owner of the "Pearl," and to endeavour to obtain an abandonment of the appeal.

We think that your Lordship might properly apprize Mr. Wigg that such instructions have been given to Lord Lyons, but, nevertheless, that the application has not been made as a demand of strict right, but has been a request made in a friendly spirit to the Government of the United States.

With respect to the sale, or order for sale, of the "Pearl," referred to in Mr. Wigg's letter of the 13th May, we are not informed as to the circumstances which might or might not justify this act, and we therefore reserve our opinion with respect to it.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 328.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th April, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons* and their inclosures, respecting the trial by court-martial of Acting Master Danenhower, on the charge of having murdered Mr. James Gray, the chief mate of the "Saxon;" and Mr. Murray was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a careful perusal of the papers in this distressing and important case leaves upon our minds the impression that the trial was conducted in a spirit of perfect fairness and impartiality.

It is difficult to form a certain opinion in a case of this nature, without an opportunity of observing the manner and demeanour of the witnesses, as to the finding at which the Court ought to arrive. We must also observe that we have not any portion of the documentary evidence laid before us, but a list of the instruments which were put in forms part of the papers.

One fact of grave importance is clear, from the acknowledgment of the accused himself, namely, that shortly before the firing of the pistol he had himself drawn it from his breast and cocked it, not, as he says, at Gray, but at the master, Sheppard.

According to the testimony of the witness for the accused, Belden, he drew it cocked from his coat and pointed it at Gray; but this witness is clearly uncertain in this part of his evidence. The witness Keith (also produced for the accused) deposes to having seen the pistol elevated towards Gray, and that when it went off and Gray fell, the accused said to him (Keith), "It was an accident; I did not know my pistol was cocked;" and that the accused did then utter words to this effect is proved by the evidence for the prosecution.

It seems clear that he did say so, and equally clear that he had cocked the pistol shortly before. The contradiction is not explained by the accused in his statement.

It is certainly possible that in the hurry and excitement of the moment he may have forgotten that he had only just before cocked his pistol; though in the case of a naval officer, this would hardly seem, a priori, probable.

The evidence, however, of what passed in conversation after the act had been committed, does, on the whole, tend to show that the impression generally made upon those who were present was that the killing of Gray was unintentional.

The result of the general evidence seems to be that, on the one hand, the United States' officers and men had no reason to suspect, and did not in fact suspect, that any rescue was possible, or was about to be attempted by the crew of the "Saxon," and they contributed (to say the least) to excite ill feeling and opposition on the part of the crew of that vessel by the display of arms, and by other ill-judged and menacing demonstrations, which were, under the circumstances, unnecessary and uncalled for; on the other hand, it is clear that the language and conduct of Captain Sheppard was indiscreet and unjustifiable; and that his resistance, by brandishing cutlasses and pistols and by other demonstrations of force, to the authority of the prize officer in command, together with the conduct of the men from the shore-boat, and of some of the "Saxon's" crew, would have justified measures of repression if any moderation had been used. The result was a state of confusion and excitement, by which Mr. Gray's life (whether he did or did not himself contribute to it, which, upon the evidence, seems uncertain) was unhappily sacrificed.

Upon the whole case, we think that if the finding of the Court should be that the accused was guilty only of manslaughter, there would be, as far as we are at present advised, no ground upon this point for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 329.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 6.)

Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 31st ultimo from the War Office, requesting that Her Majesty's Minister at Washington may be instructed to take the necessary steps for causing certain legal notices, therein inclosed, to be served on a Major Hoffman, who, it is stated, is now serving in the United States' army; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which it would be proper for your Lordship to pursue in this matter.

The previous correspondence referred to in the War Office letter Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that your Lordship may properly comply with the request contained in the letter from the War Office, and instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Washington to cause the necessary steps to be taken for serving the legal notices in question on Major Hoffman.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 245, April 8; No. 250, April 11; No. 264, April 19; No. 280, April 25; and No. 296, May 3, 1864.

1864

No. 330.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 7.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 7, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th May he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the further papers, as stated in the margin,* respecting the Confederate steamer "Georgia;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that it will not be incumbent on Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps at present with respect to this vessel. It appears to us that the evidence credibly shows that she has been dismantled, and her crew paid off, with a bonâ fide view to the abandonment of her warlike character; and that she is now offered bonâ fide for sale for the purpose of being converted into a mercantile vessel. At the same time notice should be given to the owner that Her Majesty's Government understand that the belligerent character of the vessel has altogether ceased, and, therefore, that the owner must not consider that she will be permitted to leave Her Majesty's ports in that character.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 331.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 9, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing the copy of a letter from Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope, with a copy of a revised code of instructions issued by him for the guidance of commanding officers of Her Majesty's ships under his orders, in the present state of affairs between the Northern and Southern States of America. That we should observe that the Board of Admiralty have not thought it right to approve of this code of instructions, but that they have gone carefully over the instructions issued by Admiral Milne, and have made such annotations in the margin, and such omissions and additions, as have been rendered necessary by later events; and that the Admiralty propose to forward to Sir James Hope, by the mail of the 11th instant, the instructions which accompany their letter, if your Lordship should see no objection thereto. And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these instructions into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience, at all events in time to allow of Admiral Hope being instructed in this matter by the mail of Saturday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands, we have the honour to report—

That the instructions proposed to be sent out by the Board of Admiralty to Admiral Hope appear to us to be proper and unobjectionable.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To Treasury, May 6; to Home Office, May 16; Home Office, May 20; Treasury, May 23; Admiralty, May 23; to Treasury, May 25, 1864.

No. 332.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 14.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 13, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that with reference to our several Reports respecting the imprisonment of British subjects captured on board blockade-runners, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 290, May 3) inclosing copies of correspondence in which he has been engaged respecting British subjects who have been so imprisoned.

Mr. Murray also transmitted to us a despatch (No. 256, April 11), inclosing a copy of the answer returned by Mr. Seward to the note which was addressed to him by Lord Lyons in conformity with our Report of the 7th March; and was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 25th ultimo and the 7th instant, inclosing further despatches and papers on this subject for our consideration.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That though the justice of the demand of Her Majesty's Government, that persons captured on board vessels seized for violation of blockade shall not be treated as prisoners of war, is not quite explicitly acknowledged by Mr. Seward (in his letter of the 6th April to Lord Lyons), it does appear to be acknowledged in terms: but it also unfortunately appears to be practically disregarded; and the objectionable practice arises, not out of any endeavours to discriminate between persons of doubtful nationality, and those whose British character is undisputed, upon grounds applicable to individual cases, but out of a former general order issued by the United States' Government for the express purpose of altering their former practice, and applied generally to all persons found on board ships captured for violating the blockade.

We are of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed with reference to Mr. Seward's letter of the 6th April (in Lord Lyons' No. 256) as to the "Cuba" and "Patrick Hamilton," to apprise Mr. Seward that Her Majesty's Government do not admit the right of the United States' Government to treat any of Her Majesty's subjects taken from vessels belonging to them as enemies, in the mere presumption that, if the circumstances of the case had been investigated, the ship, which was destroyed in order that it might not be seized for a violation of blockade, might have turned out to be the vessel of a belligerent.

With respect to the general subject, and the cases referred to in the several despatches of Lord Lyons now before us, we are of opinion that the practical question between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States is (properly stated by Lord Lyons in his despatch No. 330 to be) whether, "on the plea of investigating the validity of the claims of the crews of captured British vessels to be British subjects," the United States' Government can justify the continuance of a practice by which they "do, in fact, virtually inflict a long imprisonment on them, as a penalty to deter them from again engaging in attempts to violate the blockade." Her Majesty's Government hold this practice to be totally unjustifiable, and irreconcilable with the well-established position of international law, that persons taken on board what are called blockade-runners are not to be treated as prisoners of war, but as the subjects of a neutral State, liable only to the penalty of forfeiting their vessel or goods, if the offence of breaking or attempting to break the blockade, be duly substantiated.

This question ought, we think, be brought to some decisive issue; and it appears to us that Lord Lyons should be instructed to press for its settlement in such a way as effectually to prevent the recurrence of cases like those which have led to the correspondence before us. It might, in our opinion, be properly stated that Her Majesty's Government, holding the proposition of international law on which they rely to be incontrovertible, and observing with satisfaction that it is not in terms controverted by the United States' Government, are entitled to expect, and do expect, that for the future it may be more consistently adhered to in practice, and that British subjects so taken be not imprisoned like criminals in a common gaol; that those who are already so confined be forthwith liberated; and, in fine, that this is a question in which Her Majesty's Government feel the honour and interest of this country, and the rights of all maritime neutral nations, to be very nearly concerned, and in which it is neither convenient nor safe to prolong discussion; and that Her Majesty's Government therefore wait anxiously the final and definite answer of the United States' Government upon this matter.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 302, May 9; No. 329, No. 330, No. 331, No. 332, May 23, 1864.

1864

With respect to your Lordship's request that we would consider whether this violation of international law would not justify remonstrance to the Government of the United States on the part of the maritime Powers generally, we have to state that we think it would be most desirable that such a common action should be taken, and a joint representation should, if possible, be made by all the principal maritime States to the United States' Government on this subject; which is, indeed, one of common interest to them all: but we do not advise that the necessary instructions to Lord Lyons should be delayed until the result of an application to other maritime States upon the subject can be ascertained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 333.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 14, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 11th instant and its inclosures from the Treasury respecting a steamer called the "Dantzig," formerly a Prussian man-of-war, but now the property of Messrs. Dorset and Blyth, of London.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that this vessel is reported by the Assistant Surveyor to the Board of Customs to be lying in the Victoria (London) Dock, and to be fully equipped as a ship of war with the exception of guns, and ammunition, and crew, and that he states his impression that she is intended for some service which the owners are anxious to conceal.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the case of this vessel into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That on the present state of the evidence we can only recommend that the Comptroller at the Victoria Docks should be directed to continue to watch the proceedings of the steamer "Dantzig," and to make instant telegraphic report of any circumstance tending to confirm his present suspicions.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 334.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 17, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 28th of April he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter dated the 23rd ultimo from Mr. Adams, inclosing further depositions respecting the engagement of seamen for service on board the "Rappahannock," and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any steps which should be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Campbell, the boarding-house keeper, as well as the persons mentioned in our last Report, is liable to be proceeded against for contravening the provisions of the second section of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 335.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 17, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosure from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 11, May 6) relative to the case of the schooner "Betsey," a prize to the United States' gunboat "Antona;" and to request that we would take this case into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this vessel appears to us to have been condemned on very slender evidence. At the same time we do not learn, upon the proceedings, that it was contended on behalf of the claimants that the vessel had not been built in the enemy's country, or that the British ownership was strongly asserted; the defence seems to have been founded upon a different and (we agree with the Judges) untenable point. At all events, no application seems to have been made to produce further proof upon this point, and upon the present state of facts we are not disposed to advise your Lordship to interfere in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 336.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 17, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 10, May 3), inclosing a transcript of proceedings in prize, in the case of the United States versus the Spanish barque "Teresita" and her cargo; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these proceedings into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these proceedings into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Judgment, so far as it goes, appears to us perfectly just and satisfactory. We do not know whether the sentence was accompanied by a condemnation of the captor in costs, without which complete justice would not, we think, be done. But as the ship is a Spanish, and not an English vessel, this does not seem to be a matter with which Her Majesty's Government is concerned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 337.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 18, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 300, May 6), respecting the case of Mr. G. A. Mason, a British subject then imprisoned at Fort Warren, near Boston; and containing remarks respecting the treatment of British subjects by the Government of the United States; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, transmitting the accompanying further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 348) relative to the case of Mr. Mason.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with respect to the case of Mr. Mason, there appears good reason to hope, from the tenour of the last letter in this voluminous correspondence, that he may now be at liberty. As to the general subject, those cases of imprisonment of British subjects in the United States of which Mr. Mason's is an example, we think it impossible to read Lord Lyons' despatch of the 6th of May to your Lordship without being struck by the force and perspicuity, and by the perfect justice of his Lordship's observations. There can be no doubt that the great mass of British subjects who have settled and become domiciled in the United States, and who constitute, in the aggregate, no inconsiderable proportion of the population of those States, must submit, together with the citizens of the country in which they live, to those restraints upon personal liberty which have arisen in that country out of the present unhappy state of civil war; and that such persons are are not entitled (whether they have or have not become naturalized, or exercised political franchises) to invoke the power of the British Crown for the purpose of placing them in a position of greater safety and security than that of the general body of the residents in their adopted country.

With respect to the particular case of Mr. Mason, we desire to express our clear opinion, that a British subject, imprisoned at a time when the Habeas Corpus Act is, on account of State necessities, universally suspended, and not without primâ facie cause (as Mr. Mason was), and who deliberately refuses to accept his release from prison on the condition that he either leave the country or do not pass beyond a certain boundary in it, does thereby deprive himself of the right to insist upon the active intervention of Her Majesty's Minister on his behalf; and, at all events, has no just title to complain if such intervention has been unsuccessful. By his own confession, Mr. Mason, after voluntarily going to witness the operations of the Confederate army at Gettysburg, took service with them (though, as he says, under some degree of moral duress); and he has conducted himself, while in confinement, with almost insane violence and intemperance, both of demeanour and of language. Under such circumstances (even without taking into account the fact that he was twice released after being arrested, through Lord Lyons' intervention, and nevertheless again conducted himself so as to give the United States' authorities further cause of offence), we feel bound to say that he appears to us to be a person whose misfortunes are mainly due to himself. We have read with attention the ninety-eight letters which form the correspondence before us, and we think it right to express our decided opinion that Lord Lyons has done everything which it was possible to do on Mr. Mason's behalf, and much more than he was, in strictness, bound to do, under all the circumstances of the case.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Our Report had been prepared before the additional papers (inclosed in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant), containing the intelligence of Mr. Mason's release, had reached us. These papers do not, however, affect in other respects our Report.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 338.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 285, April 25), from which it will be seen that the United States' Government refuses to discharge from its service Thomas Tulley and the other Irish immigrants enlisted at Portland. Also a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 289, May 3), respecting the practices by which a considerable number of British subjects have been induced to enlist in the United States' army and navy; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon. That the draft of an instruction to Lord Lyons, which was to be sent to Washington on Saturday (then) next, was also annexed for our information.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letters of the 25th ultimo and 7th instant, transmitting further despatches and their inclosures respecting this matter, for our consideration (No. 303, May 9, and No. 333, May 23).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the perusal of these papers not only confirms our former impression that the practice of seducing and kidnapping Her Majesty's subjects into the United States' army has been carried to an extent requiring decided remonstrance from Her Majesty's Government, but also satisfies us that due attention has not hitherto been paid to the remonstrance so properly made by Lord Lyons, and that the United States' Government cannot be acquitted of tolerating and taking advantage of this unjustifiable system of recruiting their army, notwithstanding the wrong so done to the subjects of a neutral and friendly Power. It seems to us that the Report made (to his great honour) by Major-General Dix places the fact of these outrages having been habitually practised beyond all doubt, and certainly beyond the possibility of contradiction by Mr. Seward, to whom it ought also to furnish an irrefragable proof how little the statements of exculpation by recruiting officers can be relied upon.

This observation naturally brings us to the consideration of the enlistment of the seven men from the "Nova Scotia" emigrant ship. With respect to them we have already expressed our opinion in our former Report on this subject; and we participate in the deep regret and dissatisfaction expressed by Lord Lyons, that notwithstanding his Lordship's urgent and repeated requests, and even after an inquiry had been directed by the United States' Government into the conduct of "a prominent officer" concerned in these malpractices, several of those unfortunate men should have been compelled to serve in the field, where at least two of them have since been wounded, and at least one appears to have lost his life. In what mode the sense of this now irremediable wrong, which Her Majesty's Government must entertain, ought to be manifested, it is not for us to determine. But we cannot abstain from observing that, as the United States' Government has been at all times prompt and loud in its complaints when any violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act of their country was supposed to have taken place, or to be likely to take place, on the part of the other belligerent, it might have been expected, in mere consistency (if not from regard to the just rights of Great Britain), that a very different course would have been taken with respect to these enlistments.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 339.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 12th of March, transmitting to us a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, putting an end to the blockade of Brownsville in Texas, but placing at the same time certain restrictions on the trade of that port, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the above-mentioned despatch, a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 320, May 17), containing the additional information respecting the occupation of Brownsville by the United States' forces which was asked for in our Report of the 6th of April, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it necessary to repeat to your Lordship our opinion that the belligerent right of blockade cannot be lawfully enforced against neutrals by a belligerent who is in actual possession of the port alleged to be blockaded; and we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to intimate this opinion distinctly to the Government of the United States. It appears that the alleged blockade of Brownsville is at an end, but that certain commercial restrictions, stated to be required by the exigencies of the Government, are still in force. We are not disposed to deny the competency of the United States' Government to impose these restrictions, and to enforce them within the limits of their own territory, impartially against all persons, but we think that they should be placed upon their right footing, namely, as an act of State necessity, and not as an incident to the right of blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 340.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 24, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 3rd instant from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of a correspondence between the Governor of Canada and Lord Lyons, with other papers respecting the alleged abduction of a man named Peter Needham from the Canadian soil, and his subsequent trial and condemnation in the United States; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that his Excellency the Governor of Canada has taken a correct view of this case, namely, that there has been no violation of Her Majesty's territorial rights by the United States' authorities. We are of opinion that the Canadian Mayor of Clifton, and the constable, have behaved with great irregularity and carelessness in this matter; but that whatever rights of action Peter Needham may have against them, or however censurable they may be by Her Majesty's Government, there is no ground for stating that the United States' officers were any parties to the illegal proceedings by which Peter Needham was brought within the territory of the United States. The suggestion contained in the last paragraph of Lord Monck's letter to Lord Lyons (7th May, 1864), seems to us well worthy of the attention of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 341.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 27, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th of February, respecting the cases of Mr. Eneas and Mr. Rahming, British subjects imprisoned in Fort Lafayette, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the papers on which we then reported, the correspondence which has passed since that date between your Lordship and Lord Lyons with respect to these cases,* and to request that we would take the papers inclosed into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations that we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That at present the principal grievance relative to the cases of Mr. Eneas and Mr. Rahming appears to us to be the length of time during which they have been imprisoned on suspicion without being brought to trial. We consider the conduct of the United States' Government in this particular to be very objectionable. We do not think, however, that the right to try these persons before a court-martial for alleged military offences against the United States can be denied, without more information than we at present possess as to the manner in which military law is at present in force and administered in the State where these prisoners are confined, and where their alleged offences are said to have been committed. According to Mr. Seward's letter to Lord Lyons of the 9th May (in Lord Lyons' No. 349 of 1864), the military authorities are of opinion that Mr. Eneas, at all events, has been guilty of active participation in Confederate hostilities. It appears (Inclosure 13 in Lord Lyons' No. 349 of 1864) that on the 24th of May an order was given to convene immediately a Military Commission to try both these gentlemen; and, until we are apprized of the result of that trial, we are not in a condition to offer further advice to your Lordship on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 342.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 28, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th instant, relative to the case of the "Betsey," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the papers before referred to us, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 363, June 6), inclosing a copy of a despatch addressed to him by the Acting British Consul at New Orleans, calling attention to the Judgment of the United States' Prize Court in this case, and soliciting instructions, if that Judgment is held to be correct, as to any warning which he should give to British subjects with regard to the risk attending the purchase of vessels from citizens of the belligerent States; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we should not recommend the Acting British Consul at New Orleans to issue such a general warning to British subjects as he proposes. It would tend rather to mislead than to instruct them.

It is not very easy to say from the terms of the Judgment whether the Judge meant to decide the case of the "Betsey" on the broad ground that the property in a merchant ship is incapable of being transferred by an enemy to a neutral in time of war, so as to exclude the right of capture, or on the narrower ground (which would be more accurate) that an enemy not bonâ fide divesting himself of all interest cannot protect his ship from capture by a mere formal and ostensible transfer to a neutral. The former doctrine, though not admitted in the Prize Courts of this country, has been maintained by the French Prize Courts; it is not, however, one in which we should be disposed to acquiesce. But if the latter was the real ground of the decision, it is consistent with many decisions in the English and American Prize Courts, to the effect that a belligerent may not temporarily and collusively transfer his vessel to a neutral for the purpose of protecting her from seizure by the other belligerent; and that all transfers of this kind in time of war (especially by a belligerent unable to keep the seas against his adversary) are justly liable to be examined with much jealousy and suspicion, and are not entitled to have faith accorded to them without the production of a regular bill of sale, or other satisfactory evidence of the reality of the transaction. In the present case, it appears to us to be consistent with the facts (so far as they appear) to suppose that the Judge may have intended to proceed upon the latter ground. We have already said that the evidence appears to us very slender; but we must also repeat that neither does it appear that any defence was seriously and effectively taken on the ground that the property of the original owner had been really and bonâ fide divested, nor was further proof asked for on this important point. A wholly different and untenable line of defence was adopted.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 59 and 60; to Lord Lyons, No. 204; Lord Lyons, No. 83; to Lord Lyons, No. 164; Lord Lyons, No. 349.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 343.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 360), respecting the case of Mr. Richard Hall, a British subject, accused of having passed the military lines of the United States without permission. Mr. Hammond was pleased to observe that it is in connection with this case that Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore has been summoned to appear as a witness before a military Court in that city, a matter which formed the subject of his (Mr. Hammond's) letter of the 16th instant; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are afraid there is no ground for remonstrance as to that part of Mr. Hall's case which relates to his crossing the military line, contrary to express prohibition; whatever can be done by way of amicable interposition will no doubt be effected by Lord Lyons. If, indeed, the charges specified in Colonel Wolley's letter (Inclosure 17 in Lord Lyons' No. 360), of "running the blockade" and "engaging in contraband trade with the South" should be persisted in, and form any part of the grounds of his sentence, and if it should appear that the acts relied upon in proof of these charges were not done within the territory of the United States (as distinguished from neutral territory, or the high seas, or the territory of the Confederate States), there would be occasion for remonstrance on the part of Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 344.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 359, June 3), relative to a summons addressed by the military authority at Baltimore to Her Majesty's Consul at that place, to appear as a witness on the trial, before a Military Commission, of Mr. Richard Hall, a British subject, and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That so far as this question depends on general principles of public and international law, we are clearly of opinion that Her Majesty's Consul, in the absence of any special Treaty provision, does not possess the privilege of refusing to attend as a witness when duly summoned by a duly constituted Court. It is another question whether he could be compelled to bring with him papers from the Consular archives, which, as this demand has been abandoned, it is unnecessary to decide.

In the present case, however, it appears to us that, if the form of Mr. Bernal's exequatur from the United States' Government purports to grant him the same rights and privileges as are accorded to the Consuls of the most-favoured nations, and if, by the Consular Convention between the United States and France, the French Consul "cannot be compelled, but must be invited," to appear before the United States' tribunals, Mr. Bernal was well-founded in his protest, and that the course adopted by the Military Court to compel him to give testimony was contrary to the terms of his exequatur. It is probable that the discourteous tone and manner adopted by the military authorities towards the Consul may require, or at least justify, remonstrance from Lord Lyons, but we think this is a matter which may fairly be left to be dealt with according to his discretion by Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 345.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 16th instant from the Colonial Office, together with a despatch from the Governor of Hong Kong, inclosing a copy of an Ordinance passed by the Legislative Council of that Colony, "to give effect to Her Majesty's Regulations for the observance of neutrality during the existing hostilities between the United States and the States calling themselves the Confederate States of America;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the Ordinance in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this Ordinance appears to us, with an exception presently to be mentioned, proper for the object of carrying into effect the regulations of Her Majesty for the observance of neutrality.

We are of opinion, however, that it was not competent to the Governor to extend the effect of this Ordinance beyond three miles from the shore of Hong Kong, especially as there does not appear, in the terms of the first section, to be any such qualification or definition of the offences thereby created as to make it necessary that they should even have their commencement within the limits of the Colony. The 6th and 7th Vict., cap. 80, vests a large jurisdiction, extending to 100 miles, in the hands of the Superintendent of the Trade of British subjects in China, when he is also Governor of Hong Kong; but these offices are now, and have been for some time, separated; and the present Governor is not also the Superintendent of Trade.

We think, therefore, that the Governor should be apprized that the jurisdiction of the Colonial Legislature is confined to the marine league from the shore, and that a new Ordinance should be issued with this limitation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 346.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.— (Received June 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 22nd March respecting the case of the Bahama wrecking-schooner "Dart," he was directed by your

1864

Lordship to transmit to us, together with the papers already referred to us, the correspondence, as marked in the margin,* which has since taken place on the subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the facts to which the law is to be applied, may fairly be taken to be these:—

The "Dart," a neutral vessel, is duly summoned by the belligerent on the high seas to lie to, and to submit to lawful visitation and search; the "Dart" refuses to obey the lawful summons, takes refuge in flight, and reaches neutral waters, throwing overboard, in order to secure her flight, portions of her cargo, a great part of which is picked up by the belligerent while floating on the high seas. We think, too, we may discard from our consideration, after reading Captain Baldwin's letter, the charges brought against him of ill-treatment of British salvors who came out for the purpose of securing for themselves portions of the floating cargo.

Upon this state of facts we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere in any way on behalf of the owners of the bales of cotton so thrown overboard.

Having regard to the principles of and authorities upon international law, it may be questioned whether the "Dart," by her unlawful disregard of the obligations of the neutral to submit, on the high seas, to the right of visitation and search incident to a belligerent, did not place herself, pro hâc vice, in the condition of an enemy, and whether primâ facie, the character of enemy's property did not attach to the portions of the cargo picked up by the belligerent; in which case, Captain Baldwin would not have exceeded the limits of his belligerent rights in possessing himself of these portions of the cargo, so thrown overboard on the high seas.

If, however, the owner of the portions of the cargo, so seized, considers himself to be aggrieved, legal redress is open to him; he may apply for a monition in the proper American Court against the seizor, and demand restitution of his property.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 347.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, July 5, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th of June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note dated the 25th of that month, which had been addressed to your Lordship by the United States' Minister at this Court, complaining of the course pursued by the owner of the yacht "Deerhound" in aiding the escape of a portion of the crew of the "Alabama," who, it is alleged, had surrendered themselves prisoners of war to the United States' ship "Kearsarge."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the draft of the answer which your Lordship returned to Mr. Adams; and to request that we would peruse these papers, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it might be expedient that we should be apprised of any answer which the owner of the "Deerhound" may make to the statement of the captain of the "Kearsarge" upon the subject of alleged previous concert with Captain Semmes. In the mean time we are of opinion that the reply of your Lordship to Mr. Adams was well founded on the principles of international law; and that Her Majesty's Government have no power to take any steps whatever against the owner of the "Deerhound" for saving the lives of the captain and certain of the crew of the "Alabama."

It is moreover to be observed, that probably Captain Semmes (who if any inquiry were to be made in this matter, would be entitled to be heard), would not admit the accuracy of the statement made by the captain of the "Kearsarge."

---

* Colonial Office, February 13; to Lord Lyons, No. 150, March 31; Lord Lyons, No. 281, April 25; Lord Lyons, No. 311, May 13; to Colonial Office, June 1; Colonial Office, June 14, 1864.

It is hardly necessary to add, that the suggestion of Mr. Adams that a deliberate selection of particular American officers was made by the owner of the "Deerhound" out of the men swimming for their lives upon the sea after a naval action, is quite incredible.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 348.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, July 5, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd of June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 371, June 6), asking for instructions as to the course which he is to pursue in the case of British subjects captured on board Confederate vessels; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which Lord Lyons should take in regard to the several cases specified by him, of British subjects captured on board vessels belonging, or suspected of belonging, to the Confederate States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it will conduce to clearness of statement, if we express our opinion in the first place as to certain categories of cases as to which (as it appears to us) no doubt or difficulty arises. First, with regard to British subjects captured on board British vessels seized for breach of blockade. Such persons, as we have already had the honour to report, are not liable to imprisonment. Secondly, with respect to British subjects found on board Confederate men-of-war. As to such persons, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not officially to interfere on behalf of these persons, or to claim their release as a matter of right; though, of course, Her Majesty's Representative might use on their behalf, according to his discretion, whatever good offices might lie within his power. Thirdly, with regard to British subjects found on board Confederate merchant-vessels being passengers, or persons unconnected with the navigation or management of the vessels, we are of opinion that such persons are not lawfully subject to imprisonment, and are entitled to the protection of Her Majesty's Representative.

We turn from these categories of cases, which appear to us in principle free from doubt or difficulty, to others of a more embarrassed and perplexing character:—

1st. As to persons found on board Confederate merchant-vessels, wholly or partly connected with the Confederate Government itself; and 2ndly. With respect to persons found on board Confederate merchant-vessels of the ordinary character, but who were engaged and acting as part of the crew, or were concerned in the management and navigation of the vessels.

With respect to both these classes, we are of opinion that, in the first instance, and until their nationality is proved, the onus lies upon them to take themselves out of the category to which they presumptively belong, of Confederate subjects: in both cases they have identified themselves, more or less, acccording to the circumstances, with the commercial marine of the belligerent: the difficulty does not arise with respect to them, until they have established their British national character affirmatively, and have shown negatively that they have not become American citizens, or done other acts inconsistent with their claim to British protection. As to such cases, while on the one hand we think that it would be, on the part of the United States' Government, a very severe and very extreme exercise, and indeed abuse, of their belligerent rights to treat such persons as enemy's subjects, and to imprison them after they have established their British character, we cannot, on the other hand, say that Her Majesty's Representative ought to be instructed to place his demand for their release upon the same footing of strict legal right as his demand on behalf of the other classes of British subjects whom we have mentioned. Without troubling your Lordship with a statement in detail of the various difficulties which, in our judgment, beset this question, we are, on the whole, of opinion, that Lord Lyons should be instructed to exert his good offices according to the circumstances of each case on behalf of such persons, and endeavour to obtain their release from imprisonment; but without using expressions which would convey the impression that Her Majesty's Government considered that, as a matter of strict legal right, they could demand their release in the same manner as if they had been unconnected with the navigation and management of the enemy's merchant ships.

1864

We wish it to be understood that we assume, with regard to all these cases, that the persons on board the vessels in question are there with knowledge, and not in ignorance, of the true character of these vessels.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 349.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 11, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo stating that with reference to our Report of the 2nd of December last he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro (No. 41, May 20), containing a report of the legal proceedings in the case of the three vessels purchased by Mr. Allen, and which have been detained at that port; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which Her Majesty's Government should now take in this matter.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letters of the 4th and 6th instant, transmitting further papers on the above matter.*

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That all the three vessels in question appear now to be free from the risk of capture by any United States' cruizer within Brazilian waters at Rio. There can be no doubt that the pretensions advanced by the United States' Consul and General Webb as to these vessels were wholly untenable in law. The doctrine of the United States' Prize Courts, as well as our own, is that it is competent to a belligerent to purchase bonâ fide the ship of a belligerent in a port which is not blockaded, and it is of course idle to contend now that the Confederates are not belligerents. And a judicial sale, such as that in the present case, operates in rem, and must necessarily give a good title to a bonâ fide neutral purchaser. The difficulty is a practical one, namely, how to avoid a collision with the Federal cruizers, and yet protect the British subject's ship. We have before expressed our opinion that the protection of the British man-of-war cannot be continued after the merchant-vessel is on the high seas; that there the belligerent's right of search cannot be lawfully prevented by convoy; and to that opinion we must, even in this case, adhere. It does not appear from the papers before us that Lord Lyons has addressed any remonstrance to Mr. Seward on the subject of the conduct of the United States' Consul and naval officer as to these vessels. This is the course which we formerly had the honour to recommend, though we thought it might be expedient first to await the termination of the legal proceedings at Rio. And it still seems to us the only course which we ought to recommend.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 350.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 10th of May, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, two further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 364 and 365, June 6), respecting restrictions on trade between New York and the British Colonies in America; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would peruse these papers, and favour your Lordship with such observations, if any, as we may have to offer thereupon, and that we would also inform your Lordship whether we see any objection to copies of the despatches which have been addressed to Lord Lyons on this subject being communicated to Mr. Seward for Mr. Chase's use; that these despatches, the numbers and dates of which were marked in the margin,* we should find among the previous papers which accompanied Mr. Hammond's letter.

---

* Consul Morgan, No. 43, June 4; Admiralty, July 4, 1864.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letters of the 27th and 29th ultimo, and of the 5th instant, transmitting to us other despatches and papers relative to this matter for our consideration.†

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no objection to copies of the despatches from your Lordship to Mr. Stuart, No. 540, October 6, 1863, and to Lord Lyons, No. 173, April 14, 1864 (as well as those included in the Parliamentary Papers), being communicated to Mr. Seward for the use of Mr. Chase.

It appears that the bonds exacted for Prince Edward's Island have been discontinued (Lieutenant-Governor Dundas to Mr. Cardwell, June 6, 1864).

The extension of this novel system of restrictive bonds to Jamaica is, of course, an additional practical grievance, a consequence of the unjust and untenable principle upon which the system is founded.

The case of Messrs. A. Wolf and Co., as stated in the printed memorandum referred to in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th June, seems to us to be one of great (and apparently groundless) oppression, to which the attention of Lord Lyons (if it has not already been redressed) ought to be particularly directed.

The letter of the Collector of Customs at New York (25th May, 1864, Inclosure 4 in Lord Lyons' No. 418), of which the United States' Secretary of the Treasury expresses his approbation, seems to place beyond all doubt the justice of our opinion in former Reports, that this system is resorted to as a means of giving efficacy to a blockade which is per se inadequate. "The reason" expressly assigned by him "for this exaction" is, that (what he calls) "an illegal traffic" in articles of food, &c., is carried on between the principal ports of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, and the West Indies, "and ports and places under the control of persons in rebellion against the authority of the United States;" and that it is believed that "such illegal trade would be carried on to a large amount," if these bonds were not exacted.

We think it deserves the very serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether Lord Lyons should not be instructed to represent to Mr. Seward that such a system, if persisted in contrary to the express Treaty subsisting between the United States' Government and Great Britain, for the now manifest purpose of being a supplement to the belligerent right of blockade, must compel Her Majesty's Government to consider what course it may be in their power, and consistent with their duty, to take, in order to protect British subjects from the injury thus inflicted upon their legitimate trade.

If the blockade of the southern coasts cannot be rendered efficient by the naval power of the United States without recourse to these irregular and unprecedented methods of harassing and intercepting within the United States the ordinary trade of neutral Powers, those Powers may well be justified, on their part, in treating this as a virtual admission that the blockade is not adequately or legally maintained; and in declining, under such circumstances, any longer to recognize its legality. Or, the same course might be adopted by other neutral Powers in their own defence, which is stated (in Mr. Hering's letter to Mr. Levy of the 28th May last) to have been actually taken with success, by Spain, through the Captain-General of Cuba; namely, to give notice that unless these arbitrary restrictions are put an end to, all or some of the ports of the injured nation will be closed to the commerce and ships of the United States.

It is, of course, for Her Majesty's Government only to determine when, if at all, a situation of sufficient gravity may have arisen for the adoption, or the threat, of any such decided measures; but we cannot relinquish the hope that, if the total or virtual exemption of the Havana trade from these fetters has really been obtained (as Mr. Hering appears to state) by the intimation of the Captain-General of Cuba that retaliatory measures might follow from its refusal, the United States' Government will yet see the justice and wisdom of pursuing the same equitable course towards Her Majesty's subjects,

---

* To Mr. Stuart, No. 540, October 6, 1863; to Lord Lyons, No. 173, April 14, 1864; Previous Instructions in Parliamentary Papers, see Index.

† Letter from Colonial Office; Case of Messrs. de Wolf; Mr. Hering to Mr. Levy: Lord Lyons, No. 418, June 20, 1864.

1864

without obliging Her Majesty's Government also to rely on those means of redress which may be within their own power.

Upon the general subject, we desire to add, that the observation of Mr. Chase in his letter to Mr. Seward of the 30th May, 1864, that the same bonds would be exacted "from American citizens trading to any ports, foreign or domestic, from which supplies can be sent to the enemy," is wholly inapplicable to the question between Great Britain and the United States. All citizens of the United States are, of course, by virtue of their allegiance, subject in all parts of the world, whether foreign or domestic, and in all their dealings, of whatever nature, to the legislation of their own country. But the citizens and subjects of Great Britain trading with the United States owe no obedience to the legislation of the United States, except while they happen to be within the limits of the United States' territory. The attempt by legislation in the United States to make the freedom of trade between British subjects and the United States dependent upon conditions applicable, not to their dealings or conduct while within United States' territory, but to their dealings and conduct in their own country, or in other foreign countries and places to which the jurisdiction of the United States does not extend, is (as was pointed out in our former Reports) a departure from Treaty engagements, and an encroachment upon the rightful sovereignty of the Queen of Great Britain.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 351.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th June, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at San Francisco (No. 13, April 8), reporting the arrest of seven British Canadian subjects, on suspicion of being implicated in a plot to seize one of the vessels of the Panama line of steamers.

Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to us a letter dated the 18th ultimo from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a memorial addressed by the persons in question to the Governor of Vancouver's Island; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are, on the whole, of opinion that it would not be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should interfere officially in this matter.

The suspicion which led to the detention of these seven persons appears to have been bonâ fide entertained by the authorities at San Francisco; and one of the parties, Mr. Mc Cullock, seems to have given some slight colour to the suspicion by his careless language. After the affair of the "Chesapeake," and the attempt made upon another ship by the persons whose liability to extradition from this country was lately the subject of question in the Court of Queen's Bench, extraordinary precautions against the seizure of United States' packet-ships, by persons coming on board as passengers, are certainly justifiable. Considerable allowance must also generally be made for the conduct of the police authorities during this civil war, and these men do not appear to have suffered any real hardship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 352.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 13, May 23, and No. 14, May 25), inclosing copies of the proceedings in the United States' Prize Court in that city, in the cases of the British schooners "Flying Scud," "Cosmopolite," and "Amelia Ann," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the "Cosmopolite" was rightfully restored to the owners. We do not, however, discover from the papers what the circumstances were which warranted the Judge in certifying that there was "reasonable cause of seizure;" the effect of which is to give the costs to the captor.

The "Amelia Ann" and her cargo we are very glad to see have been restored to their owners, with costs and damages.

With respect to the "Flying Scud," the circumstances are not such as to induce us to advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere on behalf of the owners of the vessel or cargo, who have not, it appears, appealed from the sentence of condemnation; but we do not desire to be considered as expressing our assent to all the reasoning of the Judge who passed the sentence.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 353.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th June ultimo, stating that with reference his letter of the 16th of that month, respecting the summons issued to Her Majesty's Consul at Baltimore, to appear as a witness before a Military Commission in that city, and also to his letter of the following day respecting the case of Mr. Richard Hall, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons, relative to these two subjects.*

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous correspondence referred to by Lord Lyons, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, together with those then before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, and also as to the privileges which Her Majesty's Government could properly claim for Her Majesty's Consular Officers in the United States.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's note of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 395 and 396, June 17), and to request that we would take the same into consideration, together with the papers inclosed in his letter of the 27th ultimo, on the subject of the privileges to which Her Majesty's Consuls in the United States are entitled.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That under the existing form of exequatur issued by the President of the United States to Her Majesty's Consuls, they are clearly entitled to whatever personal privileges the most favoured nation enjoys, whether those privileges be or be not the result of specific Convention.

It is, however, impossible to deny that it is competent to the United States' authorities to alter this form of exequatur, and to determine that the privileges accorded to the foreign Consul in the United States shall be identical with those conceded to the United States' Consul in the foreign State; and although it might have been more courteous, and perhaps more judicious, on the part of Mr. Seward to have attended to the suggestions of Lord Lyons, we cannot say that the passing of the recent Act as to Consuls was any breach of international comity towards Great Britain. It is manifest, as laid down in your Lordship's despatch of the 4th August, 1859, to Lord Lyons, that it would be inexpedient, and practically impossible, to ask or obtain from Parliament, in favour of foreign Consuls in this country, such privileges as subsist by Convention between France

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 386, 387, 388, and 389, June 14, 1865.

1864

and the United States. It is therefore impracticable that all foreign Consuls should be placed in the United States (as they are, in the absence of any concession of special privileges to any of them, in England), upon the same footing in respect of jurisdiction.

There seems to be no reason, however, why they should not, by mutual agreement, enjoy similar privileges as to their personal and individual status; or why (since the obstacle mentioned in your Lordship's above-mentioned despatch is now removed by the formal abolition of slavery in the United States, and the repeal of the Slave Extradition Act), arrangements should not be made under 15 Vict., cap. 26 (the Foreign Deserters Act), with the authorities of the United States, for the mutual surrender of deserters from the merchant service; and we think that such arrangements, if they can be made, would be very expedient.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 354.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 19.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 19, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th of July instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th of March, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 415, June 20, 1864), inclosing a Report from Mr. Consul Kortright respecting the proceedings of the Philadelphia Prize Court; and to request that we would peruse these papers, and favour your Lordship with such observations, if any, as we might have to offer thereupon. Mr. Kortright's previous despatch was therewith inclosed (No. 8, January 20, 1864).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to us that the present papers call for any observations from us in addition to those which we made upon the subject in our former Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 355.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th April he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 380, June 14, 1864), respecting the case of the "Pearl;" and to request that we would peruse the same, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

The previous papers relative to this case were also inclosed to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the further papers in this matter, and have the honour to report—

That the "Pearl" having been released on the terms of paying costs by the Prize Court of First Instance, the United States' District Attorney appears to have entered an appeal from this sentence, to which the owner of the "Pearl" has (as it is technically termed) partially "adhered," appealing from that part of the sentence which awarded costs to the captor.

The result of this appeal, on both sides, remains to be seen; in the meanwhile we see no reason whatever for any official interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the "Pearl."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 356.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th of July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 419, June 20, 1864), respecting an order issued by the Military Authorities at Memphis, in Tennessee, prohibiting foreigners who are not enrolled in the militia of that place from carrying on business there; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this appears to be one of those inhospitable measures to which military rule during a civil war has recourse, and to which it appears that the Civil Government of the United States intends to offer no resistance.

It is of course at variance with all the usages of civilized nations in time of peace, as well as with the spirit, if not the letter, of the Treaty obligations subsisting between this country and the United States. At the same time, if Memphis is really to be considered as a "beleaguered city," as Mr. Seward characterizes it, it is not difficult to understand that the presence within its walls of a considerable body of men exempt from the military duties pressing severely upon others, and suspected (as it would seem) of trade and intercourse with the enemy, may be irritating both to the native subjects and to the military authorities under whose government the city is placed.

We think, under these circumstances, that if Her Majesty's subjects who are domiciled or resident in this city have a fair option of leaving it, or of remaining in it without the privilege of carrying on trade or commerce, and if the military authorities really consider it necessary for military reasons that such an election should be made, Her Majesty's Government cannot insist upon their being relieved from it, however serious the hardship may be. Her Majesty's Government cannot undertake to secure to British subjects who voluntarily reside in a foreign city in the time of civil war, the same rights which are incident to their natural status in time of peace in their own country. Such a demand is unreasonable in theory and impossible in practice. The state of affairs in America points out the necessary differences, so far as the duties of Governments are concerned, between the foreign but domiciled or settled residents, and the foreigner who is merely a traveller or a sojourner. His Government is bound effectually to protect and aid the latter; he relies exclusively in any difficulty upon that aid and protection. The former has, to a great extent (not indeed in a political or strict legal sense, but practically), become a citizen of the State in which he has been residing, perhaps without any definite intention of quitting it.

We therefore advise your Lordship that Lord Lyons should be instructed to continue his good offices according to his discretion on behalf of British subjects resident at Memphis: but, at the same time, should apprize them that, if they wish to put themselves effectually under British protection they must discontinue their residence in that place which is governed by martial law during the present troubles of the United States; the operation of which law a foreign State like Great Britain cannot interfere with.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 357.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 8th of May, 1863, respecting the imprisonment of Dr. Booth at New Orleans, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 366, June 6) with its inclosures, respecting a claim for compensation now put forward by Dr. Booth; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the demand of Dr. Booth for compensation divides itself into two heads:—1. Compensation for imprisonment; 2. Compensation for injuries inflicted on his landed property, &c., by soldiers of the United States.

With regard to the first head, we must observe that after a careful perusal of all these papers, we see no reason to conclude that the United States' authorities originally acted with any malicious intention towards Dr. Booth. The suspicions which they entertained appear to have been indeed unfounded, but such is often the case during the time of civil war. It appears to be an uncontroverted fact, that very soon after the imprisonment had taken place, application was made to the United States' General, who ordered Dr. Booth to be immediately released, on giving his parole "not to do anything inimical to the United States." This appears to us (all the circumstances and the state of the country considered) not to have been an unreasonable condition. Indeed, we adopt entirely, upon this point, the language of Lord Lyons in his despatch to your Lordship (April 13, 1863, No. 306):—"When it is considered that New Orleans is occupied as a captured city, that it is under martial law, that the mass of the population are notoriously disaffected to the United States, and that the military force which held it when Dr. Booth was arrested was but small, I do not think it was altogether unreasonable to ask Dr. Booth, who, although a British subject, had been established there for more than twelve years, to give a parole that he would not commit any act of hostility to the United States." Dr. Booth refused to give such parole, and preferred to remain in prison; the consequence was, that General Banks referred the matter to a Military Commission. The sittings of that Commission, owing to the pressure of war and the demand for military officers, were delayed from time to time, and Dr. Booth's imprisonment continued for nearly a twelvemonth. In the meantime, Lord Lyons communicated with Her Majesty's Government, who, under the advice of the Queen's Advocate, agreed in opinion with Lord Lyons that the parole might be given. This opinion was communicated to Dr. Booth, who did not even then give his parole; but at length, through the efforts of Lord Lyons on his behalf, he was unconditionally released.

We pass by the violent and unreasonable language of Dr. Booth and his brother, though they did not lessen the difficulties of the case; but looking as dispassionately as we are able at all the circumstances, we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to claim pecuniary compensation for Dr. Booth from the United States' Government on account of his imprisonment.

As to the second head, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought not to demand compensation for injuries alleged to have been inflicted by the soldiers of the United States upon the landed property of Dr. Booth. That gentleman must seek redress in the same manner, and by the same means, as any other landed proprietor in the country in which he had established himself.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 358.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 21, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th July instant, stating that with reference to the concluding paragraph of our Report of the 21st of April respecting the case of the "Saxon," in which we stated that we thought that the owners of the coals taken from Angra Pequena should be prepared with proof that they belonged to them at the time when they were taken, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence with Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton, and Co., and the despatches to and from Lord Lyons, as stated in the margin,* from it will be seen that the United States' Government held that the bill of lading furnished by Messrs. Sinclair, Hamilton, and Co., does not sufficiently show that at the time the coals were taken they were, in point of fact, the property of Messrs. Anderson and Co., and that that Government consider it material to have information as to the purpose for which the coals were sent to Angra Pequena, before admitting the claim of Messrs. Anderson and Co. to be paid for them; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the proof of the ownership, the bill of lading would appear to us sufficient in the circumstances, and for the purpose for which it is wanted. We should advise, however, Messrs. Coggill to produce any other proof which may be within their power, and (if no other proof is possible) we think an affidavit or statutory declaration by the claimants, that at the time of the seizure all the coals mentioned in the bill of lading continued to be their own absolute property, and that no part thereof had been sold or disposed of to any other person, might be made and ought to preclude any further question on that subject. With respect to the destination of the coals, we desire to repeat deliberately our former opinion, namely, that the coals might just as lawfully be sent to Angra Pequena for the purpose of supplying the wants of a Confederate as of a United States' ship of war; and that for an United States' ship of war to take without payment British property on a neutral shore, merely because it was intended to be sold by its owners to a ship of war of the other belligerent, would be an act of simple trespass, utterly without justification from the law of nations. We think that Lord Lyons should press this point of maritime international law strongly upon the United States' Government, and we do not believe that any American jurist would or could be found to maintain, either upon principle or authority, a contrary opinion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 359.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 21, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of July instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 28th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, the accompanying further despatches from Lord Lyons† respecting the case of the "Greyhound."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we learn with great satisfaction the success of Lord Lyons' application to the United States' Government, and the consequent release of the officers and crew of the "Greyhound." Two of the three passengers, who have been detained on the ground of their being American subjects, appear to have been rightly considered as such in the opinion of Lord Lyons, and probably the third passenger will also be found to belong to the same category.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To Messrs. Hamilton and Co., April 23; to Lord Lyons, No. 195, April 23; Messrs. Hamilton and Co., May 5; to Lord Lyons, No. 210, May 6; Lord Lyons, No. 437, June 21; No. 445, June 28, 1864.

† Lord Lyons, No. 438, June 24; No. 450, June 28, 1864.

1864

No. 360.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 384, June 14) respecting the case of Clarke King, a British subject who has been enlisted into the naval service of the United States; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Consul Archibald was warranted in concluding that this person was induced to enlist in the service of the United States' navy when so much under the influence of drink as not to be a voluntary agent. Many circumstances point to this conclusion; among them, the very striking fact that the man was earning larger wages at home with his wife than he was to receive when enlisted as a sailor for service on board a man-of-war in time of war. The evidence of his landlady and his wife as to his state of intoxication on his return home, and that of Captain Laird as to his condition at an earlier period of the day, appear to be altogether credible. We agree, too, in the justice of the Consul's remarks on the intervention of the representative of the shipping agent's firm, called "a security." And it is to be remembered that the unquestionable authority of General Dix proves the reality and the frequency of this detestable practice of fraudulent enlistment. On the other hand, it can hardly be matter of surprise that the Government of the United States should, in such a case as this, be more disposed to give credit to the sworn statements of the surgeon (Mr. Abernethy) and Lieutenant Murphy than to the averments of King himself. The surgeon's evidence, however, would have been much more satisfactory if it had not been given in the form of a dry certificate; and we do not find that Lieutenant Murphy's important statement (see his certificate of 24th May, 1864), that King "was examined in practical seamanship by Acting Master Mackintosh," is clearly borne out by Mr. Mackintosh's own statement of the 1st March; where (professing to state all that he knew about the matter) he spoke of himself only as attesting King's signature, and of the examination in seamanship as passed before Lieutenant Murphy: not saying that he (Acting Master Mackintosh) had himself conducted that examination.

We think, upon the whole, that Lord Lyons should express the regret of Her Majesty's Government at the conclusion which the United States' authorities adopted in this case, and should request that it may, if possible, still be reconsidered, and the man restored to his home. We do not, however, recommend that any further proceedings should be taken, if these should prove unsuccessful.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. CORRIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 361.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 5th instant, relative to Mr. Adams' representation respecting the conduct of Mr. Lancaster on the occasion of the sinking of the "Alabama,"* he was directed by your Lordship to transmit a letter dated the 16th instant which has been received from Mr. Clarke, of which a copy has already been forwarded to Mr. Adams, and a letter from Mr. Lancaster, a copy of which your Lordship proposes to send Mr. Adams, in a note of which the draft was therewith transmitted to us; and to request that we would take this proposed note into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

---

* Letter from Mr. Lancaster to the "Daily News," forwarded by Mr. Clarke, July 4, 1864.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed letter is fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 362.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th January, and to our subsequent Reports respecting the vessels seized by United States' cruizers in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches, as stated in the margin,* from which it will be seen that while certain of these vessels have been released, the brig "Volant," belonging to Messrs. Marsh, Gallichan, and Co., of Jersey, has been condemned. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter dated the 11th instant from Messrs. Marsh, Gallichan, and Co., complaining of the sentence pronounced against their vessel, and urging Her Majesty's Government to interfere on their behalf; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government with regard to the "Volant."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we learn with satisfaction that the other vessels seized at the same time as the "Volant" have been released, though it does not yet appear whether costs and damages (to which we think them clearly entitled) have been awarded to them or not.

With respect to the "Volant," we cannot collect from the papers that there was any sufficient legal justification for the condemnation of that vessel. If we were left merely to speculate upon the reasons for the sentence (unfortunately the reasoned Judgment is not among the papers sent to us), we should rather suppose that it might have proceeded on the ground that part of the cargo was proved to have consisted of military clothing, and that from the position in which the ship lay that clothing may have been intended for importation direct into the Confederate States, although ostensibly consigned to merchants in the neutral port of Matamoros. But there seems to us to be no sufficient evidence to warrant such a conclusion; and we collect that the only ground really assigned by the Judge for the sentence was, that the "vessel was anchored in interdicted or American waters." We are wholly at a loss to understand the meaning of the term "interdicted," as applied to any anchorage whatever where there was no blockade. The American Advocate appears to feel the same difficulty.

We think that although an appeal is open to the owners of the "Volant" (and they ought not to omit to place themselves in a situation to prosecute it with effect), Lord Lyons should be instructed to express the surprise of Her Majesty's Government at the declared ground of this sentence, and their confident expectation that unless it can be shown either that Her Majesty's Government have been misinformed as to the reasons for the sentence, or that such a ground is warranted by the principles and precedents of maritime international law, the United States' Government will at once interpose to prevent the execution of a sentence which on the face of it is so unjust. While this course is taken, we think the owners should at the same time be informed that if the Government of the United States should insist (as they very probably may) that the case must be carried by the owners before the Court of Appeal in the ordinary way, Her Majesty's Government may feel themselves obliged to acquiesce, at least for the present, in such an answer; and that it may reasonably be hoped that the decision of a Court of

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 410, June 20; No. 449, June 28; Mr. Coppell, No. 15, June 16, 1864.

1864

Appeal would be more consonant with law and justice than the present sentence now appears to be.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 363.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 352, May 31), inclosing a copy of a Bill "To increase Duties on Imports, and for other Purposes," introduced into the United States' House of Representatives; also a letter dated the 16th ultimo from Messrs. de Wolff and Co., of Liverpool, calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the discriminating duty proposed to be levied under the 17th section of the Bill on goods imported into the United States in foreign vessels; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the bearing of the Bill in question on the Treaties existing between this country and the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the effect of this proposed Act of Congress, if passed, will, in our opinion, be to impose a differential duty of 10 per cent. ad valorem, in addition to the other duties imposed by law upon all goods imported in British vessels into the United States, except so far as it may be capable of being shown that by Treaty, or under some prior Act of Congress, the goods imported in such vessels are entitled to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as are payable on goods imported in ships of the United States. But, as to any goods imported in British vessels, which can be shown to be placed by Treaty or by any prior Act of Congress on the same footing, as to duties, with goods imported in United States' vessels, no differential duty will be imposed.

The only Treaty between Great Britain and the United States affecting this question is (we believe) that of the 3rd of July, 1815,* which (as we understand) has been from time to time continued, and is still in force. By this Treaty all articles "the growth, produce, or manufacture of any British territory in Europe," are entitled to be imported into the United States in British ships on payment of the same duties as if they were imported in ships of the United States. To this limited class of articles, therefore, when imported into the United States in British ships, the proposed differential duty will clearly not be applicable.

The only Acts of Congress by which any privileges against the differential duties appear to be secured to goods imported in the United States in British vessels are the Act of 29th May, 1830† (brought into operation by the subsequent Proclamation of the President, dated 5th October, 1830‡), and the Act of 7th January, 1824,§ under which the notification published by the Treasury Department of the United States on the 15th October, 1849,‖ may, perhaps, be deemed to have been issued.

The Act of Congress of 29th May, 1830, opened the ports of the United States (on certain conditions of reciprocity, which were duly fulfilled) to all British vessels coming into those ports from the Colonial possessions of Great Britain in the West Indies, the Bahamas, the Caicos, and the Bermudas, and on the Continent of South America, on terms of perfect equality as to duty with vessels of the United States, without reference to the place or origin of any of their cargoes. So far, therefore, as relates to any goods whatever imported by British vessels coming from any of these Colonial possessions of Great Britain into ports of the United States, the proposed new differential duty will also not be applicable.

The Act of Congress of the 7th January, 1824, authorized the President, by Proclamation, to declare that "the foreign discriminating duties of tonnage and import within the United States" should be "suspended and discontinued" in favour of "the vessels of any foreign nation and the merchandize of its produce or manufacture imported into the United States in the same, on proof, to the satisfaction of the President by the Government of such nation, that no discriminating duties of tonnage or import were imposed or levied within the ports of the said nation upon vessels wholly belonging to citizens of the United States or upon merchandize the produce or manufacture thereof imported in the same." We are unable to discover any other Law of the United States than this to which the notification issued by the Treasury Department of the United States upon the repeal of the British Navigation Laws in 1849, can be referred. This notification, which is dated the 15th October, 1849, purports to be made by virtue of "the existing laws" of the United States; and although not in the ordinary form of a Proclamation, we are disposed to think that, as it must have been issued by the authority of the President, it may be regarded as intended to have the effect of a Proclamation by the President, under the Act of 7th of January, 1824. Its effect (if referable to and warranted by that Act of Congress) is to admit all British vessels whatsoever coming either from British or from foreign ports, into the ports of the United States, with cargoes of the growth, manufacture, or production of any part of the world, upon the same terms as to duties, imposts, and charges, as vessels of the United States and their cargoes. Whether so large a concession was within the strict terms of the Act of the 7th January, 1824, which authorized (as has been seen) the discontinuance of discriminating duties "as respects the vessels" (of any foreign nation complying with its terms) "and the merchandize of its produce or manufacture imported into the United States in the same," seems to us questionable. If not, we could not deny that a privilege voluntarily given to British shipping by this notification would be liable to be recalled and annulled by any subsequent legislation of the United States, nor could we affirm that it would be saved by the proviso at the end of the 17th section of the now proposed Act of Congress. Upon the whole, we incline to think that if the Government of the United States should insist that this notification did not rest on the authority of any Treaty, and was not warranted by any Act of Congress (the consequence of which would be, that it would cease to be in force after the passing of the proposed new Act), Her Majesty's Government could not oppose any decisive argument to such a contention, unless there be some other Treaty or Act of Congress bearing upon that question of which we are not at present aware. Inasmuch, however, as the notification is itself evidence that a more extensive and liberal construction has been hitherto placed by the Government of the United States either upon the Act of Congress of the 7th of January, 1824, or upon some other Law of the United States (which can only be an Act of Congress), we think it may be proper, and will be expedient, for Her Majesty's Government to assume, until controversy arises upon the subject, that this construction will still be adhered to, in which case all British shipping will still be wholly exempt, as to all goods whatsoever imported in such shipping into any ports of the United States, from the new differential duty proposed to be imposed by the 17th section of the proposed Act.

There remains one topic more to which it seems to be our duty to direct the attention of Her Majesty's Government. By the IIIrd Article of the last Convention of Commerce between Great Britain and the United States, signed at Washington on the 5th June, 1854, the United States are bound to admit certain articles, the produce of the British North American Colonies therein mentioned, into the United States free of duty. Among these articles are several (e.g., cotton wool, hides, metallic ores, coals, &c.) on which duties are proposed to be levied by the new Act of Congress. The proviso in the 17th section excepts, from differential duties only, goods imported by the shipping of countries entitled to such exemption by virtue of any Treaty or prior Act of Congress. It does not exempt from all duty any importations whatever from the British North American Colonies, or from any other quarter, of any kind of article which by the other sections is made subject to duty; and, according to the letter of the Act (if it should pass in its present form), the importations from the British North American Colonies of certain articles made duty free by the Convention of 1854 will, we think, be rendered liable to duty, notwithstanding that Convention. We feel assured that this cannot have been the intention of the Government of the United States; and we do not imagine that any duties on such importations will actually be levied. It may, however, be proper and expedient that the attention of the United States' Government should be invited by Lord Lyons to the defective wording, in this respect, of the proposed Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Hertslet, vol. ii, p. 387.
† Ibid., vol. iv, p. 512.
‡ Ibid., vol. iv, p. 514.
§ Ibid., vol. iv, p. 498.
‖ Ibid., vol. viii, p. 968.

1864

No. 364.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of July instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 4th July from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of papers received from the Governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, in which, among other matters, a question is raised relative to the propriety of applying the Extradition Treaty between this country and the United States to offenders within the Company's territory; and Mr. Cardwell observed that although the Red River Settlement is not subject to the authority of the Crown, as ordinarily exercised through the Secretary of State, he would readily communicate to the Government of the Hudson's Bay Company such instructions as it might be thought desirable that the Company should address to the Governor of the Red River Settlement on the subject.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Hudson's Bay Settlement is a British Possession to which the Extradition Treaty is applicable; and that the request for the extradition of the offender was made by an officer of the United States whose competency to make such request, on behalf of his own Government, ought primâ facie to be assumed.

But we are of opinion that Governor Dallas was right in his opinion that the offence for which the extradition of the offender was demanded was "theft" or "larceny," and not the offence of "robbery," which alone is mentioned in the Treaty, and in the Statute which gives effect to it; and therefore that the request of the United States' officer was rightly refused.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 365.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the papers which formed the subject of our Report of the 11th April,* two further despatches from Lord Lyons,† inclosing copies of the representation which he had addressed to Mr. Seward respecting the sinking of the British schooner "Sylvanus," and the imprisonment of her crew, and of two notes which he had received from Mr. Seward in reply; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to consider the Report of the United States' Secretary of the Navy as entirely satisfactory. Upon the first question, indeed, the sinking of the "Sylvanus," an adequate excuse appears to be offered for that act; for, according to the papers now before us, the "Sylvanus" refused to obey the summons of the belligerent, and took her chance of escape. Her fate was the consequence of an unlawful disobedience to a lawfnl command. But the belligerent had no right to fire shell in the first instance, even though he fired it wide of the vessel. It is very important that the acknowledged rule of firing in blank, in the first instance, should not be deviated from.

With respect to the placing the men in irons the practice is, we are glad to see, not justified, and is said to be contrary to order; but we think the excuse for it, on this occasion, inadequate. It should be firmly represented to the United States' Government that the neutral will not consent to the attempts continually being made by the belligerent, during this war, to extend, in various ways, the severe right of blockade, and to treat captured neutrals as enemies. The reference to the decisions of the Court of New Brunswick, and of the Queen's Bench, in the extradition question, appears to us wholly irrelevant. These decisions, which were lawfully given, by lawful Courts, upon a different matter, have no connection whatever with the blockade, and still less with the obligations of the belligerent towards the neutral as to the means of enforcing the blockade. And the United States' Government should be distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government will not permit the crews of captured British vessels, composed of Her Majesty's subjects, to be punished by penal treatment which does not belong, according to the recognized principles and precedents of international law, to the offence of breaking the blockade. In this respect the present case raises the question of principle more broadly, perhaps, than any other, as it appears that the crew of the "Sylvanus" were detained and imprisoned, when no proceedings whatever, before any Prize Court, on the part of the captors, were taken or contemplated.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 170 and 178; to Lord Lyons, No. 208.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 329 and 414.

No. 366.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 28, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 422, June 20), respecting the case of certain British subjects captured on board the "Grey Jacket," a vessel which apparently belonged to the Confederate States; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon; and to add that Lord Lyons' despatch No. 371, to which he refers in the despatch now transmitted, formed the subject of our Report of the 3rd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the vessel herself, the "Grey Jacket," we are of opinion that the presumption that she is Confederate property, arising from her having been a merchant-steamer, newly built at Mobile, and sailing under the Confederate flag only, appears not to be rebutted by any other evidence; and that the United States' authorities are therefore warranted in so considering and treating her.

That with respect to the seven men who claim, apparently with truth, to be British subjects, they were all employed in the actual navigation of the ship, of which they constituted probably the greater portion of the crew. In our former Report (dated the 5th instant) we considered carefully the principles of international law applicable to this class of cases.

We retain the opinion which we then formed, and we therefore think that the release of these persons cannot be demanded as a matter of strict right by Lord Lyons. At the same time we venture to suggest that his Lordship might be instructed to represent to the United States' authorities the great difficulty in which Her Majesty's subjects resident in the Confederate States are placed if they really desire to remain neutral, in obedience to Her Majesty's Proclamation, in this war. Their safest course is certainly to quit the country; and, practically, their only means of escape appear to be by sea, and necessarily from a blockaded port.

The story of these men is that they have always endeavoured to avoid the conscription for the Confederate service; that they were, when they agreed to serve on board the "Grey Jacket," taking the only available means of leaving the country, and that they intended never to return; and that the effect of such severity as that practised upon them may be to leave British subjects in the Confederate States no alternative but that of the conscription. This may or may not be true, but it certainly is not improbable.

In these circumstances if Lord Lyons were authorized to undertake that they should be forthwith sent to England, or one of Her Majesty's territories remote from the Confederate States, the refusal of the United States' Government to release them from prison would appear to us to be a very harsh not to say an unfriendly act.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 367.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 2.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 30, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th of April last, respecting the case of James O'Neill, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* the despatches as noted in the margin,† from which we should see that the United States' Government have decided that the officer accused of having wounded O'Neill shall be brought to trial; and that Lord Lyons states that O'Neill has designated as an important witness a seaman named Michael Murphy, who resides in Liverpool, and Lord Lyons observes that it is desirable to ascertain, as soon as possible, whether this man can be found and sent over to attend the trial. That Lord Lyons also states that he has been invited by Mr. Seward to give an opinion on the form of charge proper to be adopted in this case; and that he requests to be instructed as to whether it would be proper for him to take the responsibility of doing so.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue, and more particularly as to whether Her Majesty's Government ought to search for and send over witnesses.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the advice of the United States' Counsel, Mr. J. McKeon, should be acted upon (Inclosure 3 in Lord Lyons' No. 472), and that the necessary witness Michael Murphy should be sent to Washington from Liverpool, if he is now there, or from any other place in this country where he may be found. We think that, without assuming the responsibility of the form of charge proper to be preferred against Lieutenant Everson, Lord Lyons might properly suggest, for the consideration of the United States' authorities, whether the charge ought not to be framed in accordance with Article IX of the Act of Congress of 23rd April, 1800, referred to by Mr. McKeon.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 368.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 2.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 1, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 14th of July, relative to the British vessels seized in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 16, June 20), inclosing copies of the proceedings in the District Court of that city in the case of steamer "Sir W. Peel;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are at a loss to conceive upon what principles of recognized prize law a reasonable ground of capture can have been asserted, or costs and damages to the owners can have been refused by the Court in this case. We have not, indeed, before us the reasons for the sentence of the Judge; but we have the evidence on both sides, and the perusal of it satisfies us that the Court ought, in the execution of its duty, to have decreed restitution with costs and damages, and to have severely censured the attempt to impugn, by hearsay gossip of the loosest kind, the positive testimony of the proper witnesses, on which the Prize Courts of the United States and of Great Britain have always been in the habit, hitherto, of forming their judgment.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 52; to Lord Lyons, No. 107, March 9; Lord Lyons, No. 140, February 29; No. 180, March 11; No. 192, March 14; to Lord Lyons, No. 175, April 15; Lord Lyons, No. 233, April 5, 1864.

† Lord Lyons, No. 383, June 14; No. 440, June 28; No. 472, July 8, 1864.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 369.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 2.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 1, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th of July ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 27th ultimo from the United States' Minister at this Court, again calling attention to the case of the vessel "Georgia," which formed the subject of our Report of the 14th of May, and inclosing a copy of a letter from the United States' Vice-Consul at Liverpool, in which he states his reasons for thinking that the recorded sale of that vessel was a sham, and that there is no intention of converting her into a merchant-vessel; and to request that we would take the inclosed representation into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the measures, if any, which Her Majesty's Government ought to take in the matter.

The previous papers were sent therewith for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not at present see any sufficient grounds for coming to the conclusion that the "Georgia" is about to be again used for belligerent purposes. It would, however, be desirable that inquiries should be made of the authorities at the Queen's dock at Liverpool, and proper directions given to watch the vessel.

We think the proper authorities at Liverpool ought also to be instructed that no ship of war of either belligerent is for the future to be permitted to be brought into and kept in that port for the purpose of being dismantled or sold, this being contrary to Her Majesty's orders, and affording an opening for fraud and abuse, such as that suspected by Mr. Adams in the present case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 370.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 5.)

My Lord, Lincoln's August 4, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th June, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 444, June 28, 1864), inclosing copies of a note from Mr. Seward, and of the proceedings of the court-martial held at Philadelphia in the case of Mr. Charles Danenhower, who killed Mr. James Gray on board the "Saxon," at Angra Pequena; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the proceedings and Judgment of the Court into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the proceedings and Judgment in this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as we are able to judge, the trial before the naval court-martial appears to have been fairly and impartially conducted.

The acquittal of Lieutenant Danenhower on the charge of murder, we think perfectly just. We entertain much doubt as to the propriety of his acquittal on the charge of manslaughter.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that Mr. Seward is justified in maintaining the position that the finding of the court-martial must be accepted as conclusive by the United States' Government; and although it might have been hoped that the United States' Government might deem it not inconsistent with this position, voluntarily to make some compensation to the relations of the unfortunate man whose life has been so needlessly sacrificed by the impetuosity and carelessness of one of their officers, we are not prepared to say that such compensation can be insisted on by Her Majesty's Government.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 371.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 11, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th of July ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 10th of February respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the former papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 446, June 28, 1864), forwarding a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, together with a copy of the proceedings of a Naval Court of Inquiry which had been held in this case, and which had come to the conclusion that no violation of the territorial jurisdiction of Great Britain was committed, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as the finding of the Naval Court of Inquiry is concerned, we think that upon the evidence adduced before them, they were justified in coming to the conclusion at which they arrived, namely, that the territorial rights of Her Majesty had not been violated, and that there had been no intention of violating them. At the same time, we must observe, that while the evidence as to the distance of the "Rhode Island" from the shore is satisfactory (proving that she never fired at a less distance than four miles from the shore), that as to the distance of the "Margaret and Jessie" when the last shots were fired is much less distinct; and we are by no means satisfied that she may not have been then within three miles of the shore. Captain Trenchard seems to us to have been much more alive to the necessity of keeping his own ship at a proper distance from the shore, than to that of observing the precise distance from the shore of the "Margaret and Jessie," and the statement of the Court that he "cautioned the pilot to apprize him, if the chase should get within three miles of the land," does not appear to us to be borne out by the evidence.

The former evidence contained in the statements of passengers, the protest, &c., gave a different representation of the distance from the shore within which the pursuing vessel fired the last shot or shots. It is to be observed that the Parrot gun is said to carry a distance of five miles, which might account for pieces of shot being found on shore or in the trees, although the pursuing vessel did not approach within three or even four miles of the shores. There appears to be good reason for enlarging the distance to which territorial waters now extend; for, certainly, shot from a belligerent cruizer ought not to be permitted to endanger lives or property on a neutral territory, or even to reach the shore. Nevertheless, the three-mile distance has been the limit for the observance of which, throughout this war, we have alone contended, without reference to the longer range of newly invented or modern ordnance.

It must be remembered that the "Margaret and Jessie" was an escaping belligerent vessel, lawfully fired at till she reached neutral waters; according to the evidence, it certainly was the intention of the chasing vessel scrupulously to observe the usual limit of territorial jurisdiction: it was, moreover, sworn, that this intention was executed so far, at all events, as those on board the "Rhode Island" were, at the time, able to judge of the distances of the two vessels from the shore. The absence of counter testimony is, we presume, partly to be accounted for by the fact that the crew of the "Margaret and Jessie" being enemies could not be produced as witnesses. No evidence was tendered by the neutral Government.

We think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to call the attention of the United States' Government to that view of the state of the evidence which we have mentioned as occurring to us, and also to the fact that the shot fired from the United States' ship did unquestionably injure the trees and endanger the lives of those on shore; and to suggest that it will be obvious to the United States' Government that the neutral shore ought not to be exposed to these dangers, from whatever distance shot may be fired; and that although Her Majesty's Government now believe that there was no intention of violating the jurisdiction of Her Majesty, and that it was done (if at all) inadvertently and under an erroneous impression of the distance of the "Margaret and Jessie" from the shore, they must request that orders may be given which may be calculated to prevent for the future any similar occurrence.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 372.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 26th of July ultimo, stating that with reference to Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th of that month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 23rd July, from Messrs. Gallichan and Co., inclosing a letter received from Mr. Briggs, who defended their interests at New Orleans, in the case of the "Volant;" and to request that we would take these further papers into our consideration, together with those then before us, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's note of the 6th of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that you might be favoured with the return of Messrs. Gallichan's letter and its inclosure respecting the case of the "Volant," which was transmitted to us in his letter of the 26th ultimo.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we would doubtless accompany these papers with our observations, should we have any to offer in addition to those contained in our Report of the 26th ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have only to add to our former Report on this case the expression of our satisfaction at the opinion of Mr. Briggs, which is in accordance with our own, both as to the law which ought to govern the case of the "Volant," and as to the necessity of appealing from the adverse decision. We are also glad to learn that he confidently anticipates the success of such an appeal.

We think it of much importance that the owners and agents in this country of the "Volant" should be distinctly apprised (as we advised in our last Report), that they must not neglect to prosecute this appeal in the hope that the intervention of Her Majesty's Government may render such a measure on their part unnecessary.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 373.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 12, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th of July ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 1st and 9th of June, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two Admiralty letters dated the 19th July, the one inclosing papers received from Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope, on the subject of his communications with the Confederate steamer "Florida," respecting interference with British vessels, and the other inclosing a copy of a letter from Vice-Admiral Hope, stating that the revised instructions issued by him would be recalled; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not prepared to express our approval of papers A and B (Sub-Inclosure 3 in No. 1, and Inclosure in No. 120 of 1864), but that, after the declaration of the commanding officer of the "Florida," it seems unnecessary to enter further into the questions which the course of action originally proposed by Admiral Hope may have been calculated to raise. Upon this part of the subject we think it sufficient to refer to our former Reports. The course, however, taken by Admiral Hope with respect to the repairs and coaling of the "Florida" appears to have been proper, and in accordance with Her Majesty's orders on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 374.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 12, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th of July ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo, respecting the alleged abduction of a man named Peter Needham from Canadian soil, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our perusal, a despatch and its inclosures on this case, which had been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington.*

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that the previous papers† were also annexed for reference, if required.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to transmit to us for perusal the papers, as marked in the margin,‡ respecting the case of Ira Lee and George Cooper, two American citizens abducted by a Canadian constable from United States' territory; and to request that your Lordship might be favoured with any observations which we might have to offer upon the papers then transmitted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the case of Peter Needham, we have to observe, in addition to the remarks which we had the honour to offer in our former Report, that we think no further application should be made to the United States' Government respecting him, and that, regard being had to all the circumstances of the case, no remonstrance need be offered as to the mode by which the United States' Government propose to try him.

With respect to the two United States' citizens improperly taken on American soil, and tried and sentenced in Canada, the course adopted by Lord Monck appears to us very proper, and we are glad to see that it was so considered by Mr. Seward. Lord Monck and Mr. Seward agree that more stringent regulations with respect to these arrests on the frontier of the British and American territories are necessary; and we trust that such measures will be taken, without delay, as may for the future prevent the recurrence of these cases, which lead to delicate questions of international law, and tend greatly to embarrass the Governments of both countries.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 454, July 1, 1864.

[†] Colonial Office, June 3; to Colonial Office, June 28; Colonial Office, July 9, 1864.

[‡] Colonial Office, July 12; to Colonial Office, July 15; Lord Lyons, No. 453, July 1, 1864.

No. 375.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 22, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th July ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 9th of February last respecting the case of the "H. G. Berry," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a despatch from Lord Lyons,† inclosing copies of his subsequent correspondence with the attorney of the owner of that vessel, who desired that the case should be again submitted to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government; and to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, and report whether we see any reason to modify or alter the opinion heretofore expressed by us on this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken the further papers into our consideration, and are still of opinion that a bonâ fide military necessity caused the detention of this vessel, and therefore that Her Majesty's Government ought not to press upon the United States' Government the claim of the owner of the "H. G. Berry" for demurrage or damages. The vessel appears to have been released from detention on the 3rd of November, on the change of her destination from Matamoros to Havana, and it is not made out, to our satisfaction, that this change of destination was compulsory in any other sense than this, that if it had not taken place, her detention would have been liable to be indefinitely prolonged until the operations against Texas should have been so far advanced as to make it safe, in the opinion of the military authorities, to allow vessels bound from New Orleans to Matamoros to proceed on their course in the ordinary way.

I have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, the Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 376.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our perusal, and for such observations, if any, as we may have to offer thereupon, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 416, June 20, 1864), inclosing a copy of papers laid before Congress, respecting certain complaints of improper practices in the disposition of prize cases at New York.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered the papers submitted to us, and have the honour to report—

That the Report, and the evidence upon which it is founded, though very interesting, appears to us principally to concern the Government of the United States. It relates mainly to the loss and injury alleged to be suffered by the American captors before they receive the proceeds of captured property, by reason of various malpractices arising out of the carelessness or corruption, or both, of United States' officers.

In the main, Mr. Jordan (the Special Commissioner and Solicitor of the Treasury) thinks that these charges are not proved.

Of course any misconduct with respect to the custody, valuation, or sale of a captured ship or cargo, during the pendency of proceedings in the Prize Courts, affects British interests in cases where the property, or the value of it, may ultimately be restored by the Decree of the Primary or the Appellate Court.

But, on the whole, having regard to our own practice when we were belligerents, and to all the circumstances of the particular cases mentioned (and bearing in mind that the interest of the captors to expose and correct abuses of this kind is the same as that of the claimants of the captured property), we do not advise your Lordship to address any complaint to the United States' Government on this subject.

There is one topic, however, which we think Lord Lyons should be instructed (if

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 918, December 29, 1863; No. 44, January 26; to Lord Lyons, No. 70, February 12, 1864.

[†] Lord Lyons, No. 452, 1864.

1864

necessary) to press upon the attention of the United States' Government, namely, the great evil of the delay in deciding causes in the Appellate Courts. The language of Mr. Upton, the standing counsel for the captors, upon this point (which will be found at page 41 of the printed volume), is well worthy of attention, though it was not intended to be used in favour of neutral claimants. Speaking in the summer of 1863, he openly states that the delays down to that time of the intermediate or Circuit Court "constitute the causa causans of all the enormous expenses which, more than all else combined, have occasioned the outcry against the New York adjudications." And, after referring to the evidence (which is also mentioned in Mr. Jordan's Report, to the effect that "causes in which property to the value of millions has been condemned by Decree of the District Court, and withheld from sale by appeal to the Circuit, were argued in the Circuit Court in the month of November 1861, and are yet undecided," he "submits that to pass in silence, and without direct and emphatic reproof, such conduct on the part of the Judge of the Circuit Court, is carrying regard for the dignity and independence of the judiciary to an excess which he deems not only unjustifiable in itself, but extremely unjust towards those who are made the sufferers by such lenity." Some of these arrears have been since (as we know) disposed of: and it is possible that all of them may have been so, and that this practice may now have been corrected. But if such unreasonable delays of judgment should still continue, they might properly be made the subject of remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 377.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 27.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, August 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd of February, respecting the question of the Island of Sombrero, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 2nd instant, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, from which we should see that Mr. R. W. Wood has applied for a document showing that the island belongs to Great Britain, and that Mr. Secretary Cardwell proposes to authorize the Governor of St. Kitts to inform the applicant that Sombrero is one of Her Majesty's Leeward Islands, and is occupied by Mr. F. K. Dumas, under a licence of occupation granted on behalf of Her Majesty; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion whether there is anything in the proposed answer to Mr. Wood which would be inconsistent with the understanding come to with Mr. Adams on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Governor of St. Kitts might properly be authorized to inform the applicant that Her Majesty considers the Island of Sombrero as one of the possessions of Her Majesty's Crown, and that it is occupied by Mr. F. K. Dumas, under a license of occupation granted by Her Majesty. We think there will not be any inconsistency between such a declaration and the understanding established with the United States, on the occasion of granting the lease to Mr. Dumas; for that understanding itself was founded upon the fact that Her Majesty did, as against any pretention of the United States, or of any other Power, lay claim to the sovereignty of Sombrero; and all that was then agreed upon was, that the United States' Government were not to be held as precluded, by acquiescence in the grant of that lease by Her Majesty to Mr. Dumas, from calling in question (if they should hereafter think fit to do so) Her Majesty's title to the sovereignty of the island.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 378.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 27.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, August 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the acompanying papers,* respecting the case of Mr. S. G. Levey, a British subject, who claims from the United States' Government the sum of 5,000*l.* as compensation on account of his arrest at Boston, and subsequent imprisonment at New York; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this appears to us to be a very serious case, and one requiring the prompt interference of Her Majesty's Government. The arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Levey was a very gross and unwarrantable invasion of the liberty of one of Her Majesty's subjects. It is admitted that there was no foundation whatever for it, except information received from the United States' Consul at Montreal that Mr. Levey, a resident inhabitant of Lower Canada, was "a notorious blockade-runner." This is the first instance in which we have heard of a pretension, on the part of the United States' authorities, to treat the participation of a foreigner, resident within neutral territory, in blockade-running adventures, as an offence punishable by municipal or military law in the United States, upon that foreigner afterwards coming into United States' territory, not in the alleged prosecution of any such adventure, but as an ordinary passenger on board a vessel engaged in a perfectly lawful voyage. It has been the duty of Her Majesty's Government, on several recent occasions, to recall to the recollection of the United States' Government the rule of international law, that mariners and others found on board neutral ships, captured for breach of blockade, are not liable to be treated as criminals or as prisoners of war; and this rule itself has never been disputed by the United States' Government, though it has been sought to be evaded by arguments founded on the alleged difficulty of distinguishing neutral from hostile adventures. The present arrest of Mr. Levey, to whose case none of the arguments can possibly apply, may, perhaps, assist Her Majesty's Government to judge of the degree of credit due to the professions made by the Government of the United States on this subject. If, therefore, the information given by the United States' Consul at Montreal about Mr. Levey had been as true as it has been proved to be false, the conduct of the United States' authorities would be scarcely less reprehensible.

We think that, upon the general subject, Lord Lyons should be instructed to repeat, in the strongest manner, the determination of Her Majesty's Government not to allow the blockade established by the United States' Government to be supported by acts which involve so plain a departure from undoubted principles of international law. And with regard to this particular case of the arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Levey, which (if he had been concerned in blockade running, would have brought the question of principle to an unmistakable test, and which is not less unjustifiable because even that pretext fails) we think it is the duty of Her Majesty's Government to support the claim of that gentleman to substantial compensation; though the mode of ascertaining the proper amount of such compensation (if the principle is agreed upon) may be the subject for future consideration, and, perhaps, may wisely be left to the discretion of Lord Lyons.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 379.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 29.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that, with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 13th of June, 1863, respecting the case of Mr. John Tovell, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter dated the 7th ultimo from Mr. Tovell, stating the circumstances under which he was taken from his place of confinement and banished to the south of the Federal lines, and that Mr. Tovell now claims the sum of 10,000*l.* from the United States' Government in requital of the wrongs which he has undergone; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take this claim into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

---

* Lord Derby, June 21; to Lord Lyons, No. 289; Mr. Manmey (2), July 29; Lord Lyons, No. 490, 1864.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the treatment of Mr. Tovell, both during his prolonged imprisonment without trial, and afterwards in his banishment beyond the Confederate lines (particularly having regard to the manner in which that banishment was carried into effect), has been excessively harsh, and such as to make us regret that we cannot see our way to any effectual intercession of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf.

Mr. Tovell is a person who, although born in Great Britain, and never naturalized in the United States, was a settled resident in the State of Tennessee for seven years; he was the editor of a Confederate newspaper there after the secession of Tennessee from the Union; and while the city of Nashville was held under martial law, subsequently to its capture by the forces of the United States, he continued to reside there, and to act during that time as the "Confederate States' Correspondent" of a Canadian newspaper. Such a person was not, in our opinion, entitled to invoke the protection of Her Majesty's Government for the purpose of securing to himself any immunity from the powers of military government, which would not at the same time equally have been secured, by the laws of the United States, to citizens of that country; and although it was proper that the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative should not be refused when the object was to obtain, if possible, his legal trial or release, it becomes a different question when a demand is proposed to be made for compensation on account of severities, of which he has been the subject. It does not appear to us that any part of the treatment of which Mr. Tovell complains has been connected in any way with his character of a British subject. If, on the one hand, it was natural, and morally justifiable, that distress and indignation should be felt and expressed by the inhabitants of a captured city, when life or property was wantonly sacrificed by an undisciplined soldiery, who held it in their possession; on the other hand, we cannot look upon it as surprising that the military authorities should think it necessary to put down, by the strong hand, any such public expression of those feelings, as a funeral oration, pronounced before a large and excited assemblage of citizens, over the grave of an inoffensive citizen whose life had been so sacrificed. If the office of spokesman upon such an occasion was assumed by one who was an alien born, and not a naturalized citizen, we think he could not call for the intervention of his own Government to enable him to plead alienage as a defence against any exercise of military power, however arbitrary, to which a natural-born citizen, under the same circumstances, would have been subject without remedy. We therefore regret to say that we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to interfere any further in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 380.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 29.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th of August instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the previous day's date, relative to the proceedings of Vice-Admiral Sir James Hope at Bermuda, in regard to the Confederate steamer "Florida," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a Report from the Governor of Bermnda of the course adopted by him on the occasion in question, and more especially with reference to the "Florida" having remained off the island, and having endeavoured to obtain a further supply of coal; and to request that we would take the Governor's proceedings into our consideration, and favour Lordship with our opinion as to their propriety.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the conduct of the Governor of Bermuda was, in the circumstances, perfectly proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 381.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 29.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th instant, inclosing papers received from the Colonial Office relative to the "Florida" at Bermuda, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note, dated the 19th instant, and its inclosure, from Mr. Adams, in which he represents that the reception of the "Florida" at Bermuda, and her subsequent proceedings there, appear to be directly in violation of Her Majesty's Regulations.

And Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have already reported separately on the reference made to us in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant. That we think it may be proper to inform Mr. Adams that Her Majesty's Government have received advices from the Governor of Bermuda on the subject to which his letter refers; from which it appears that although some disposition was manifested by the Commander of the "Florida" to evade the stringency of Her Majesty's Regulations, the most commendable strictness and diligence in enforcing those Regulations was observed on the part of the authorities, and that no substantial deviation, either from the letter or from the spirit of those Regulations, was permitted to, or did, take place.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 382.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us three despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (Nos. 513, 514, 523), respecting the case of Adolphus Russell, a seaman captured on board the sloop "Racer," and detained by the United States' Government as a prisoner, on the ground of his being an American citizen; and to request that we would take this man's case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Lord Lyons has been rightly advised by Mr. Carlisle in this matter, and that his Lordship ought not to be instructed to claim the liberation of Adolphus Russell.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 383.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 10th instant, stating, that with reference to our Report of the 6th of April, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 509), inclosing a copy of the rejoinder of the United States' Government in the case of Mr. Hardcastle, the British subject, who was shot by a sentry in the Old Capitol Prison, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we learn with equal regret and surprise the refusal of the United States' Government to offer compensation to the relatives of this unfortunate person, whose life was sacrificed to the carelessness and bad regulation of the prison in which he was improperly confined. As to the circumstances of his imprisonment and death, we see no reason to retract or modify any part of the views which we have formerly expressed. But for the determination (of which we have unfortunately had too many proofs) of the United States' Government to support and justify everything which is done by their subordinate officers, it might have been reasonably expected that they would have prevented any application on the part of Her Majesty's Government by offering, from motives of humanity, as well as from a sense of justice, whatever reparation was in their power. We do not think that any advantage would result from repeating the arguments which we had the honour to advance in our former Reports upon this subject.

We cannot, however, leave the observations of the Judge Advocate-General to the Secretary of War wholly without reply. If the construction which that officer places upon the meaning and effect of a safe-conduct under a flag of truce is to prevail, it should be widely and generally known; for in substance it amounts to this, that the United States regard a flag of truce, when used for the purpose of soliciting and obtaining permission for a particular individual to pass and remain within their lines, as imparting no protection whatever to the person who may come under it into their territory. It will, indeed, practically operate (at least until this construction be known) rather as a decoy than as a protection: it means merely that persons who bring it are not to be fired upon while they pass the space which intervenes between the lines of the enemies, and while the flag itself is exhibited; but that as soon as they are within the lines of the United States, they may be treated in exactly the same manner as if they had been made prisoners of war;—a doctrine which we venture to affirm to be utterly at variance with international law, with the usages of all civilized States, and with the reason and justice upon which both are founded. Good faith in matters of this kind is a question of substance, and not (as international authorities seem to be interpreted by the Judge Advocate-General of the United States) one of form. Whether the form be a written safe-conduct, or a permission given (without writing) for the safe passage of an individual within the lines a belligerent, the promise of safety is in substance the same: and the effect of such promise must continue (unless a limit was originally fixed to its duration), until it is revoked, after such a notice as may at least give the person relying upon it the opportunity of returning, without molestation from the same belligerent, to the place from which he came, or some other place of security. The necessary use of a flag of truce to obtain such a permission does not imply that the permission itself is to be nugatory, as soon as that flag is withdrawn.

The passage cited from Vattel, cap. 17, appears to us in no way to support the doctrine for the confirmation of which it is cited. That author, in the passage extracted, is not speaking of the protection afforded by a flag of truce to a person who is admitted under it to enter the enemy's lines, and to remain there; but of a general suspension of hostilities for a limited period, after the lapse of which period, he rightly says, in the absence of any special condition, the enemy found in the territories of either belligerent is subject to the laws of war.

It cannot, indeed, be disputed that if Mr. Hardcastle had misconducted himself after he had been so received into the territory of the United States, he was liable to be arrested or imprisoned; but to arrest and imprison him upon no ground whatever, except vague suspicions as to his previous acts and history, derived from the very fact of his coming from the enemy's lines, and from the papers produced at the time of his admission under promise of safe conduct (for it is admitted that this expression was used, and it is vainly attempted to explain away its force), was, in our opinion, a plain violation of the good faith pledged to him; for which violation we see no justification in any alleged necessities of the belligerent. It seems only too clear, in fact, that this subtle distinction between a safe conduct per se, and a safe conduct under a flag of truce, is invented and put forward to avoid the necessity of making pecuniary reparation for a great and flagrant wrong.

It will, of course, be for Her Majesty's Government to decide how far it is expedient to press any claim for compensation to Mr. Hardcastle's relatives at the present time, or to reserve it, as one of those claims of which Her Majesty's Government are willing to postpone the settlement, but upon which they may be obliged eventually to insist. But we think that (if such compensation be sought by the parties concerned), the claim ought not to be relinquished, and that it should be treated as one to which no answer satisfactory to Her Majesty's Government has been given on the part of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 384.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 8th of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting-British Consul at New Orleans (No. 19), inclosing a copy of the proceedings in the case of the British barque "Science," one of the vessels seized by United States' cruizers in the Rio Grande; and to request that we would take these proceedings into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of any statement of the reasons on which the decision of the Court was founded we have only to observe, that the ship appears to us to have been properly released. The captor's right of appeal, however, cannot be disputed, although upon the evidence (as it appears to us) there is not the least colour of the justification for the seizure. It would have been satisfactory to know what order the Court made as to costs and damages.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 385.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 10th of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to our Report of the 18th of June, a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing a statement drawn up by Mr. G. A. Mason, in which he claims a sum of 30,000 dollars on account of his imprisonment by the United States' Government; and to request that we would take this statement into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this last intemperate and offensive statement of Mr. Mason does not induce us to alter in any respect the opinion which, both upon the general question and upon the particular claim of this person, we have had the honour to offer in our last Report.

With respect to the present claim for 30,000 dollars preferred by Mr. Mason, we are clearly of opinion that Lord Lyons should be instructed to apprize Mr. Mason that Her Majesty's Government decline to invite the attention of the United States' Government to it, or to any claim for compensation on his behalf.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 386.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th of July ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 29th of August, 26th of November, 4th of December, and 18th of March last respecting the case of the "Victor," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 435), inclosing copies of a letter from Mr. Ardill, the chief engineer on board the "Victor," and of the answer which Lord Lyons had returned thereto, respecting Mr. Ardill's claim to be compensated for the loss of his situation and the expenses entailed upon him by the seizure of that vessel; and to request that we would take Mr. Ardill's claim into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to send the previous papers for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to alter the opinion which we have had the honour to express in our former Reports on this subject.

We did not think that the detention of the "Victor's" officers and the engineer for three days, for the purpose of obtaining their examination (though the place of confinement was uncomfortable, and the restraint perhaps unnecessary) was sufficient to warrant an application for pecuniary compensation on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to the United States' Government, and we continue to be of this opinion. If Mr. Ardill's claim is grounded, not on the detention and imprisonment, but on the loss of employment which he has sustained by reason of the capture of the vessel, it would be premature (to say the least) to advance any such claim before the termination of the proceedings in the Prize Courts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 387.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 10th of August instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th of June he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,† inclosing copies of his correspondence with the United States' Government with regard to the restrictions imposed by the United States' Government on trade with the port of Brownsville, in Texas; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Report. The answer of the United States' Government is couched in, perhaps, rather ambiguous language. We observe, however, that it does not profess to controvert our proposition that a place in the possession of the belligerent ceases to be in a state of blockade by him; nor to deny that the regulations as to the trade with Brownsville, on which it was then our duty to report, are to be enforced (if at all) on the footing, not of the blockade, but of the military occupation and possession of that port. On the other hand, we see nothing open to exception in Mr. Seward's claim on the part of the Government of the United States "to enforce the blockade as to all the regions lying adjacent to that port, without the lines of military occupation."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 388.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th of August instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for perusal a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 503), inclosing copies of an Act of Congress, entitled "An Act to regulate Prize Proceedings and the distribution of Prize-money, and for other purposes."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this Act into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the greater portion of this Act of Congress relates to matter of domestic legislation, and does not appear to call for any observation from us.

Those portions of the Act which relate to the international obligations of the United States are principally contained in sections 1, 8, 26, 27, 28. Sections 1, 8, and 26 appear to us proper and in accordance with our own practice; except that section 8 not merely empowers but renders it obligatory upon the Court to order a sale in every case of condemnation, though an appeal may be pending, which is, we think, objectionable, though it cannot be said to be ultra vires. Sections 27 and 28 deserve, we think, the attention of Her Majesty's Government, and of the Governments of other neutral States. They enact, in substance (or, perhaps, it would be more correct to say that they recognize and virtually repeat the provisions of former Acts of Congress, which enact), that the United States' Government may, previously even to the bringing into Court of any neutral vessel seized as prize, appropriate such vessel to their own use, subject, of course, to compensation to the owners if the vessel should be afterwards released and the capture pronounced illegal by the Court. We have expressed our opinion in former Reports adversely to the assumption of this power by the belligerent, and have stated the reasons why we think it ought not to be acquiesced in by neutral Governments: and we think that Lord Lyons should be instructed to repeat, on this occasion, to the United States' Government that Her Majesty's Government cannot assent to any interference, by virtue of the domestic legislation of the United States, with the unquestionable right of the neutral to have his vessel brought in and adjudicated upon by the Prize Court before it can be appropriated by the belligerent; and that they would be compelled to regard as an invasion of the neutral rights of Her Majesty any attempt to enforce these provisions of the Act of Congress against British shipping. Amongst other reasons against such an innovation, which we have urged before, one is so important that it cannot be too frequently or too prominently noticed, viz., that the introduction of such a practice would at once supply a motive for groundless and irregular captures of ships capable of being made serviceable by the United States' Government, and go far to destroy the confidence of neutrals in decisions of their Prize Courts, which, under such circumstances, must either support the validity of the captures or leave their own Government under the imputation of a violent and unjustifiable invasion of neutral rights.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 128 and 320; to Lord Lyons, Nos. 171 and 287.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 482 and 519.

1864

No. 389.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 1, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th of August ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Treasury dated the 25th ultimo, with inclosures, reporting that a number of persons comprising the crew of the "Georgia" had been landed at Dover by the United States' steamer "Niagara," which had captured the "Georgia."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that further particulars respecting this transaction are contained in the daily papers of the previous day, which he inclosed.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to inclose the correspondence which had taken place respecting the sale of the "Georgia" at Liverpool, and respecting the sale of the "Sumter" at Gibraltar; and to request that we would take the case as regards the present capture of the "Georgia" into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon, and as to any steps which in the present state of the matter it is competent or advisable for Her Majesty's Government to take.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that this is a proper case for adjudication in the Prize Courts of the United States; and that the only step which Her Majesty's Government ought at present to take, is to signify to Mr. Adams that Her Majesty's Government of course expect that a vessel seized under the British flag and claimed by British owners, will be brought with as little delay as possible for adjudication into the proper Prize Court, in which the claim of one of Her Majesty's subjects will be tried according to the recognized principles of international law, which govern the relations of the belligerent toward the neutral.

We do not think it necessary to enter, at present, into the somewhat nice questions of prize law which may arise in this case: and as to which it may be sufficient now to refer to our former Reports in the case of the "Sumter."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 390.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 1st August, stating that we were of opinion that the proper authorities at Liverpool should be instructed that no ship of war of either belligerent should for the future be permitted to be brought into and kept in that port for the purpose of being dismantled or sold; he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a draft of the letter which was addressed to the Treasury and other offices on the 8th instant, requesting that instructions to the effect suggested in our Report should be addressed to the authorities at all Her Majesty's ports, both at home and abroad, and a letter which has been received from the Colonial Office in reply, stating that Mr. Secretary Cardwell is anxious to have our opinion as to the steps which it will be proper for the Governors of Colonies to take in order to give effect to this prohibition; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the above point; and further to state to us that it appears to your Lordship desirable, that the decision of Her Majesty's Government on this subject should in some form be inserted in the "London Gazette," and that your Lordship requested that we would draw up a form of notification for this purpose.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, transmitting a copy of a notification issued by the Board of Customs, that vessels belonging to the North American belligerents are not to be allowed to be brought into British ports for the purpose of being dismantled or sold.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think the Governors of Her Majesty's Colonies should be instructed to publish by due official Proclamation, according to the form and usage of their respective Colonies, the prohibition in question.

Their Proclamation should recite the terms of the Order published in the "Gazette," for which we have prepared a form according to your Lordship's directions, and appended it to this Report. In the event of any infraction of the terms of this Order, it should be enforced by the executive power of any Colony, aided (if necessary) by Her Majesty's naval authorities: notice being given to the offending vessel to depart before any forcible means are used. In this respect there will be no difference between the present Order and the Regulations of January 1862, of which this Order is only the supplement.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 390.

Notification for "Gazette."

IT is hereby notified that Her Majesty has been pleased to order that, for the future, no ship of war belonging to either of the belligerent Powers of North America shall be allowed to enter, or to remain, or be in any of Her Majesty's ports for the purpose of being dismantled or sold; and Her Majesty has been pleased to give directions to the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, and to the Governors of Her Majesty's Colonies and Foreign Possessions, to see that this order is properly carried into effect.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 391.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st July, respecting the case of the "Greyhound," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Lord Lyons (Nos. 511 and 543, July 18 and 29) respecting the claims asserted by Mr. Pollard, an American citizen, who was taken on board that vessel, to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf; and Mr. Murray was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the right of Mr. Pollard, and his fellow-passenger Mr. Seawell, to claim British protection.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, transmitting to us a further despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 570) respecting the case of the passengers on board the "Greyhound."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is admitted that Mr. Pollard and Mr. Seawell are either Confederate or United States' citizens (we infer the former), and that the vessel on board of which they were passengers was captured by a belligerent cruizer of the United States, and brought in for adjudication before the Prize Court, on the ground of her having violated, or intended to violate, the blockade. If these persons had been engaged in any way in furthering or aiding this act or design, they would unquestionably have been enemies, or citizens guilty of assisting the enemy of the United States, and would have been brought within the jurisdiction of that country by the belligerent in the lawful exercise of his right; and in this case we have not been able to see, and we do not see, any valid ground upon which Her Majesty's Government could claim their exemption from that jurisdiction. If they had been cognizant of the illegal act or object of the vessel, and with a knowledge of it had embarked on board her as passengers, we think the same observations would apply; and even if they were themselves altogether ignorant of the illegality, still if the vessel were lawfully captured and condemned as prize of war, the means by which they were brought within the jurisdiction of the United States' Government would be legal; the neutral flag, unable under such circumstances to protect even the vessel which carried it, could not exempt from capture any enemies or subjects of the United States who might be on board, and Her Majesty's Government would be without any right to interfere on their behalf.

1864

It remains to be considered whether if the vessel were acquitted by the Prize Court of any actual or intended breach of blockade, and restored to her owners, this circumstance would make a difference in the right of Her Majesty's Government, and the corresponding obligation of the United States' Government with respect to these persons. This consideration raises a question of serious difficulty, and certainly of great importance. We are not aware that it is ruled by any authority, but, on principle, we think that, inasmuch as in such a case the vessel would have been improperly brought within the jurisdiction of the United States, and inasmuch as these persons could not lawfully have been taken out of her by any authority of the United States while she was upon the high seas, Her Majesty's Government would have a right to expect that the vessel and all persons who were on board of her should be replaced, as far as possible, in the condition in which she was at the time of her seizure. One of the incidents of that condition was, that she afforded protection to these persons (whether enemies or citizens of the United States) who were passengers on board of her. We are led by these considerations to the conclusion that Her Majesty's Government would be warranted in asking for the release of these persons, if the "Greyhound" should be, or should have been, acquitted by the Prize Court, of any actual or intended breach of blockade, or other offence against the laws of war justifying her capture. Whether this has actually happened does not appear, although we see that in Mr. Seawell's letter of the 23rd July last, a report is mentioned "that the District Court at Boston had failed to condemn the 'Greyhound' and cargo." If this be true (i. e., if the ship and cargo have been finally released and exonerated from every offence against the laws of war), we think Lord Lyons may properly be instructed to interpose his good offices on behalf of Messrs. Pollard and Seawell. Such a course would (we think) be entirely consistent with the principle on which his Lordship has been hitherto instructed to abstain generally from requiring the release of Confederate or United States' citizens found on board captured British vessels, inasmuch as such captures when the vessels are properly brought into the ports of the United States for adjudication cannot be presumed to be illegal, as between the British and United States' Government, until they have been so pronounced by a competent Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since writing this Report we have received Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, transmitting a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 598), which despatch does not induce us to alter our opinion on this case.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 392.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th ultimo stating that with reference to our Reports of the 26th July and 1st and 12th of August, relative to the vessels captured in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the following papers, viz:—

1. A copy of the letter, dated the 17th ultimo, which has been addressed to Messrs. Gallichan and Co., recommending that the parties interested in the case of the "Volant" should not omit to place themselves in a situation to prosecute the appeal with effect.

2. The draft of a proposed instruction to Lord Lyons founded upon our above-mentioned reports; and

3. A despatch from Lord Lyons and letters from Messrs. Bischoff and Sons, and Messrs. Lizardi and Co.,* from which it appears that the District Attorney at New Orleans has given notice of an intention to appeal against the decree of restitution in the cases of the vessels "Sir W. Peel" and "Dashing Wave."

And to request that we would take these papers into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any additions, alterations, or modifications which it might be proper to introduce into the instruction to Lord Lyons, in consequence of the notice of appeal given by the United States' District Attorney, and also as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Bischoff and Sons, and Messrs. Lizardi and Co.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter to Messrs. Gallichan and Co. is proper to be sent.

With respect to the draft letter to Lord Lyons it appears to us that in consequence of the subsequent despatch from his Lordship, and of the information which Her Majesty's Government have received of the threatened appeals in the several cases of the "Sir W. Peel," the "Dashing Wave," and the "Science" (as to which latter vessel we beg leave to refer to our Report of the 29th August last), it will be desirable to make some additions to the original draft to the effect noted by us in the margin thereof.

That with respect to the answer which it would be proper to send to Messrs. Bischoff and Sons, and to Messrs. Lizardi and Co, we recommend that to the former gentlemen the answer should be that instructions have been sent to Lord Lyons to endeavour, as far as he may be able, to induce the Government of the United States to forego the Appeal instituted on the part of the captor in the case of the "Dashing Wave;" and that with respect to the "Volant," Her Majesty's Government have requested an explanation of the ground of condemnation of this vessel, and have represented that they are unable to understand the meaning of the phrase "interdicted waters," as distinguished from waters legally blockaded. That as to the latter gentlemen the answer should be that Her Majesty's Government have issued instructions to Lord Lyons to endeavour to obtain an abandonment of the Appeal.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 393.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatches, as marked in the margin,* respecting the cases of Mr. J. W. Binney and Mr. John J. Crawford, two British subjects who have been arrested by the United States' authorities, and who were to be tried by a military tribunal; and to request that we would take these cases into our consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that with reference to Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th of August he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further papers,† respecting the cases of Messrs. Binney and Crawford.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as it appears from the further papers submitted to us in these cases that the Judge of the United States' District Court has on re-consideration holden that Mr. Binney ought not to be tried by the Military Commission Court, and has ordered him to be unconditionally released, and that Mr. Crawford has also been released, we have only to observe that the notes of the argument on behalf of Mr. Crawford appear to us such as to have rendered these releases just and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 489; Messrs. Bischoff, August 8; Messrs. Lizardi, August 12, 1864.

* Lord Lyons, No. 526, July 26; No. 541, July 29; No. 522, July 22; No. 542, July 29; and No. 292, May 3, 1864.

† Lord Lyons, Nos. 559 and 560.

1864

No. 394.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th of July, he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and with a copy of the instruction which was addressed to Lord Lyons on the 5th ultimo,[*] founded on our Report, a further despatch and its inclosures respecting the order prohibiting foreigners enrolled in the militia at Memphis from carrying on business at that place;[†] and to request that we would take these further papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion upon this important subject, which, after very grave and careful consideration, we had the honour of submitting to your Lordship in our former Report. We think the option of serving in defence of the place in which they are domiciled, and have their home, or of leaving that place, is as large a concession as Her Majesty's Government are entitled to require from the United States' Government in the present circumstances, on behalf of British subjects domiciled in or commorant at Memphis, to which place our present observations are confined. With respect to the complaint, often repeated in the individual cases contained in these papers (namely, that British subjects ought to be protected by Her Majesty's Government from violating Her Majesty's Proclamation of neutrality), it is obvious to remark that the permission to leave the place altogether enables British subjects to obey the Proclamation; and although it will probably happen in most cases that those who avail themselves of this permission will be greatly injured in their property or business, this is an unavoidable consequence of having fixed a domicile in a foreign country, which afterwards becomes the theatre of civil war, and from such an evil as this no Government can undertake to protect its subjects who have left its territories, and sought a domicil in a foreign land.

With regard to the particular cases submitted to Lord Lyons, we have only to observe that his treatment of them appears to have been perfectly proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 395.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th of August ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 566, August 9), respecting an order requiring all shipments of gold to the port of New Orleans to be deposited with the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at that place, to be delivered to consignees and claimants only on assurance that it will not be used in contravention of the regulations of the Treasury and War Departments, or the laws of the United States; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That though we do not find in the letter of Mr. Whiting (No. 7 in Lord Lyons' No. 566), any reasons which we can understand for this extraordinary and, as it seems to us, oppressive interference with the importation and commercial use of the article of gold at New Orleans, we nevertheless do not advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought at present to interfere further by way of remonstrance against General Bank's order. We do not know what are the particular "regulations of the Treasury and War Departments," or "laws of the United States," against the violation of which, by the use of gold, this order is intended to guard. The Government of the United States are, of course, entitled to enforce in any reasonable way, within their own territory, their own laws and regulations; and no order for that purpose, restrictive of dealings in a specified commodity, which is not partial in its operation against British subjects, can be deemed to be a violation of the Treaty by which they are residents and carry on business in that country. The detention of gold belonging to private persons, until "satisfactory assurances" are given to the local treasurer of the United States that it will not be used in contravention of those laws and regulations, does indeed appear to place in the hands of the Treasurer a power of a very anomalous and arbitrary nature; though, perhaps, not more so than the general system under which the internal government of the United States, and particularly of those parts of the United States which are immediately affected by the civil war, has been carried on ever since that war commenced.

It would seem from Mr. Coppell's letter of the 23rd of June last, that this power is practically exercised to prevent the use of gold for any commercial or monetary purpose whatever (except payment of duties), not only in those parts of the Confederate States which are not occupied by the forces of the United States, but also in New Orleans itself. The Order, however, presses in its terms upon all persons, natives and foreigners, with equal weight. It is said to be a measure necessary for self-defence in a time of civil war; and we are not told that it has been put in force against British subjects in such a way as to show it to be, in truth, partially directed against them. It may not improbably inflict a greater injury upon the United States than upon foreigners; and if so, it may be expected to be only of temporary duration. At all events, we do not think it is a measure of which, upon international grounds, Her Majesty's Government can complain, unless to be enforced against British subjects in a different way from that in which it is enforced against other foreigners, or against citizens of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 419; to Lord Lyons, No. 363.

[†] Lord Lyons, No. 549.

No. 396.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 9, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 567), respecting an oath exacted from foreigners by the military authorities at New Orleans, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the remonstrance of Lord Lyons to Mr. Seward was well founded as to the latter part of the new oath imposed upon foreigners at New Orleans.

We are clearly of opinion that the United States' Government is not entitled to exact the taking of such oath from foreigners who are about to leave the city and to pass without the jurisdiction of the United States; and this seems in effect to be admitted by Mr. Seward, who, in his letter of the 3rd August last to Lord Lyons has promised that any foreigners to whom this oath may be unacceptable "will be allowed due time to depart beyond the limits of the United States." The case of Miss Burrowes, mentioned by Mr. Consul Coppell, strongly illustrates the tyrannical character of this novel proceeding.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 397.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 9, 1864.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th August ultimo, in which he stated that he was directed by you to transmit to us, for perusal, the accompanying papers respecting the case of Mr. W. Pratt Hopkins and others, who were taken by the United States' cruizer "Newbern" on board a vessel called the "Pevensey," and were for some time detained in confinement by the United States' Government.

Mr. Hammond also transmitted to us a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing copies of papers from Mr. Seward, in which it is asserted that a great number of the men who engage in running the blockade are Americans from the Northern States.

Mr. Hammond likewise transmitted to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons, respecting Mr. A. J. Kennedy, a gentleman whose case formed the subject of our Report of the 11th of January last; and

Mr. Hammond was pleased to say that these several papers were sent to us for our information, although, should it occur to us to offer any observations thereupon, your Lordship would be glad to be favoured with them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the several papers submitted to us into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the individual cases of Mr. Pratt Hopkins and others taken on board the "Pevensey," imprisoned, and subsequently released, it does not occur to us to offer any observation to your Lordship.

Upon the general question we desire to state that all these cases confirm our conviction that the attempts of the United States' Government, which will doubtless increase with their increasing difficulties, to extend the rights incident to the belligerent from a blockade, and to curtail his obligations towards the neutral, should continue to be, as certainly they have hitherto been, most carefully watched and checked by Lord Lyons.

The task is certainly by no means an easy one, because it would be uncandid to deny that the observations of Mr. Seward, as to the difficulty of distinguishing between the persons taken on board the blockade-runners who really are, and those who only pretend to be, British subjects, is, from the identity of language, the general similarity of habits, and the absence of the usual circumstances which enable and facilitate a discrimination between the subjects of two countries, often very great.

The course, however, which Lord Lyons pursues appears to us to be perfectly proper, and as well calculated as any that can be suggested to remedy the existing and increasing evils of this continued blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 398.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 14, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 605 and 606, August 19) respecting the cases of Mr. J. W. Binney and Mr. J. J. Crawford, and to request that we would take the same into consideration together with the papers inclosed in his letter of the 22nd ultimo.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That our Report upon the papers inclosed in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo had been prepared, and copied for signature, before we received these further papers.

We agree with Lord Lyons that it is very unsatisfactory not to have any report of the reason for Judge Betts' final decision in Mr. Binney's case, which would enable his Lordship or Her Majesty's Government to judge how far that decision was founded upon principles which may be expected also to govern other similar cases.

We had supposed from the former papers, that both the cases of Mr. Binney and Mr. Crawford depended on the same question, viz., whether civilians, wholly unconnected with the military service of the United States, were amenable to martial law in the State of New York; or whether, when charged with any offence in that State, they had not a right to claim a trial by jury in the ordinary way. It now, however, appears, that while Mr. Binney has been released by the order of a civil Judge, Mr. Crawford has been tried by a court-martial, and has only been released after giving a bond as required by the sentence of that Court.

In these circumstances, we must necessarily wait for further information before we can estimate the value as a precedent of what has taken place in either of these cases.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 399.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us, for our consideration, the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams in reply to a further letter dated the 6th instant, also inclosed, which has been received from him respecting the case of the "Alabama," and the course pursued by the owner of the "Deerhound" in rescuing the commander and a portion of the crew of the "Alabama" on the occasion of the sinking of that vessel; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with such observations on the inclosed papers as we may have to offer.

The correspondence which has recently passed between Mr. Adams and the Foreign Office, together with Mr. Lancaster's explanation, was also transmitted for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the answer which your Lordship proposes to send Mr. Adams is altogether proper, and it hardly seems to us necessary to offer any further observations upon these papers.

Even if the owner of the "Deerhound" had interfered unwarrantably, and without that request or permission which (according to Captain Winslow's statement, as well as his own) he actually received from Captain Winslow, his interference in rescuing from destruction or captivity these drowning men was no offence against British municipal law; and there is no law in force in this country under which the men, so rescued, could be delivered up as prisoners to the Government of the United States. The remedy of a belligerent vessel against any improper interference of a neutral vessel during or after a naval action would be, to use the force at its disposal to prevent or frustrate such interference. But when, after such an action, the lives of drowning men have been saved by a private person owning and navigating a neutral vessel at the request of the belligerent himself, and without any stipulation or promise on either side as to what should afterwards be done with them, there is manifestly no "act of hostility" (to use Mr. Adams' language) and no ground of complaint, even though the consequence may be that the men who might otherwise have been destroyed or taken prisoners obtain the protection of the neutral flag, and ultimately find an asylum on neutral territory. We do not enter into the inquiry whether Mr. Lancaster would have done right in taking these men to Southampton, if he had been informed that they had surrendered themselves as prisoners; because it is clear that if they did, in fact, so surrender themselves, that fact was not intimated to Mr. Lancaster, either by the men themselves or by Captain Winslow.

The imputations thrown in Mr. Adams' last letter on Mr. Lancaster (who went, in the first instance, to the "Kearsarge" under the impression that she might also have received serious injury, to tender her any requisite assistance) of having "interposed in a struggle between combatants to save those only of one side," and of having "made great efforts to select the chief enemies of the United States," and to carry them to a place where they might be safe from pursuit by the conquerors, "paying no further regard to the larger number of his own countrymen still left struggling with the waves," are so extravagant as to be unworthy of notice, did they not unfortunately illustrate the way in which it seems to be considered a duty in the United States to look at all facts connected with this ship "Alabama."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 400.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 1st instant, respecting the capture of the steamer "Georgia" by the United States' steamer "Niagara," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 27th ultimo from Mr. Edward Bates of Liverpool, representing the circumstances under which he purchased the "Georgia," and applying to Her Majesty's Government to take steps to procure a restitution of the ship and compensation for the injury he has sustained; and to request that we would take Mr. Bates' letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise your Lordship to return an answer to Mr. Bates to the following purport and effect:—That the "Niagara" in capturing the "Georgia" and taking her into a Prize Court for adjudication, which it is to be assumed will be the course she will pursue, has not exceeded the limits of her belligerent rights. If the "Georgia" had belonged to the mercantile marine of the Confederate States, and been the property of a private subject of the Confederate States, the United States' cruizer would have been justified in seizing her upon the high seas, and in taking her into a Prize Court for the purpose of submitting to proper judicial investigation the question whether the transfer of an enemy's vessel to a neutral flagrante bello had been bonâ fide, and executed in the manner and in the circumstances which international law requires. But that the "Georgia" had formed till a very recent period an important part of the Confederate navy, is a fact beyond the reach of controversy or denial. The belligerent therefore had a fortiori the right to seize her, and endeavour to obtain her condemnation in a Prize Court. That Court will have to determine not only the question whether the transfer of the "Georgia" to a neutral owner was real, accompanied by an entire extinction of all the interests and rights of the former hostile owner, but the much graver preliminary question whether (as against the right of capture of the other belligerent) a ship of war can be lawfully transferred by a belligerent flagrante bello, in a neutral port, to a neutral, with whatever publicity and however completely the transfer may have been actually made, and whatever alterations the structure, equipment, or employment of the vessel so de facto transferred may have undergone while in the possession of the neutral.

Mr. Bates ought, we think, further to be informed that the officers of the Custom-house at Liverpool, in granting to this vessel, upon the production of proper documents, a British register, merely acted in conformity with the municipal law of this country, which neither undertakes to assist and facilitate, nor pretends upon the high seas to over-rule or supersede, the right of maritime capture belonging to a belligerent under the law of nations as administered in Prize Courts; and that it was certainly no part of the duty of Her Majesty's Government to inform a private individual, who might entertain the idea of purchasing this vessel, of any risk which he might incur by so doing. Nor are we aware of any obligation imposed by international law and comity upon the Representatives or Agents of the United States in this country, or upon the officers of the "Niagara" when at Liverpool, to give any notice or intimation whatever that the "Niagara," or any other cruizer of the United States, might still consider this vessel a proper subject of capture, whether transferred or not to a neutral, and under whatever register or flag she might sail.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 401.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 15, 1864.

WE were honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th August ultimo, in which he stated that, with reference to our Report of the 29th of August last, respecting the claim of Mr. Tovell upon the United States' Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures which had just been received from Lord Lyons respecting this case; and that your Lordship proposed in reply to instruct Her Majesty's Minister to inform Mr. Tovell that he cannot be effectually protected at Nashville against proceedings by martial law; but that your Lordship requested that we would take these further papers into our consideration, and favour you with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we entirely concur in the propriety of the instructions which your Lordship proposes to send to Lord Lyons in the matter of Mr. Tovell.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 402.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 24.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 22, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th of September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 595, August 15), inclosing a copy of Rules and Regulations published by the United States' Government on the subject of "commercial intercourse with the States in insurrection," and other matters connected therewith; and to request that we would take the same into consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not occur to us to offer to your Lordship upon these "Rules and Regulations" any observations in addition to those which in our several Reports upon the subjects of refusals of clearance (XXXV) and bonds for clearance (XXXVI) we have already had the honour to present to your Lordship. The other subjects to which these Rules and Regulations apply seem to us to require no comment. The application of such Rules and Regulations to those subjects may fairly be justified by the exigencies of the civil war in which the United States are engaged; and we understand and assume that they are equally and impartially applicable to all citizens and all foreigners.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 403.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 23.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th of September instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 9th of April, 20th of June, and 29th of August, relative to the regulations under which the Government of the United States permitted trade to be carried on at Brownsville, Texas, during the occupation of that town by their military forces, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing an extract from the "National Intelligencer" newspaper, announcing that the military forces of the United States have been temporarily withdrawn from Brownsville, and that the blockade would be resumed.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the United States' Government in withdrawing their troops from the occupation of Brownsville and declaring that port to be again under blockade, have exercised lawfully their rights as belligerents. We assume, of course, that the blockade is now, and will be, maintained by a sufficient naval force.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 404.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 24.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th of September instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th of July, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for perusal a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 620, August 23), on the subject of the new Customs Act lately passed by the United States' Congress, being in reply to the despatch, the draft of which was also therewith inclosed (No. 360, August 4), which was addressed to him on the receipt of our above-mentioned Report.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are glad to learn that the view which we took with respect to the expediency of assuming that British shipping will be exempt from the new differential duty imposed by the United States' Government is in accordance with that taken by Lord Lyons, and we conceive that the best course will be to leave his Lordship at liberty to act, in all respects, upon his own sound judgment as to the manner in which it will be prudent and expedient to deal with this important subject.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 405.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th September instant, in which he stated that with reference to the Report of the Law Officers of September 1861, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Lord Lyons (No. 614), respecting the enrolment of foreigners at New Orleans for police purposes, and he was to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken the papers submitted to us into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the General Order, dated New Orleans, July 30, 1864, by the first Article of which it is provided that "neutral foreigners, not being subject to compulsory military service, will be enrolled as a separate class to be employed, whenever necessary, as a local police or constabulary force," is in accordance with the principles of international law applicable to the subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 406.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 26, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th September instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 5th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Bates requesting to be furnished with copies of the official correspondence respecting the case of the "Georgia," for the purpose of proving that at the time when a British register was granted to him, Her Majesty's Government had a full knowledge of the antecedents of the "Georgia."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit, together with the previous papers, the drafts of letters recently addressed to Mr. Adams and Mr. Bates, of a despatch to Mr. Burnley, Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, respecting this case,* and to request that we would take Mr. Bates' letter into our consideration; and, if we should think that his request should be complied with, that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to which of the inclosed papers might be communicated to him.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That though we are of opinion that applications of this character ought very rarely to be acceded to, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case, and to the consideration that evidence of the kind required may affect the legal bearings of the very important questions of international law which the Prize Court of the United States will be called upon to decide in the case of the "Georgia," we think that Mr. Bates may be allowed to have official copies of the following documents, viz., the Report from the Custom-house, 4th June, 1864 (No. 368 in Treasury letter of that date), announcing the sale of the "Georgia" to Mr. Bates, and copies of the letter of Mr. Stewart (the Assistant Collector), Custom-house, Liverpool (12th August, 1864), to the Commissioners of Customs, and of the letter of Mr. Morgan, Surveyor, Liverpool (12th August, 1864), to the Collector of Customs at Liverpool on the subject of the dismantling of the warlike stores and provisions of the "Georgia." These letters are numbered 2 and 3 in Treasury letter of August 15, 1854.

With reference to the following passages in the letter of Mr. Bates to your Lordship, "I take for granted that Her Majesty's Government will instruct Lord Lyons to represent them in the proceedings which may be taken in the United States, and I have therefore to request that your Lordship will be good enough to instruct Lord Lyons to render my agents in the United States all the assistance in his power,"—we think it would be right to apprise Mr. Bates that he will obtain from Lord Lyons, if any circumstances should render it necessary, the same assistance as any other British subject would be entitled to in the prosecution of his claim in an American Court of Justice; but that he must rely entirely, like any other private suitor, for the successful conduct of his case upon his own energy, and upon the legal advice and assistance which he may think it proper to employ upon his own behalf.

We think it may also be proper, in order to prevent any future misconception, to inform Mr. Bates that Her Majesty's Government do not in any case warrant, as against any claims which may be advanced by foreigners or foreign Governments (whether arising, or not, out of the exercise of belligerent rights during the state of war), the validity of any title acquired by means of the registration, as a British ship, of a vessel purchased by a British subject (in this country or elsewhere) from a foreigner, and that the registration of such a title is a mere ministerial act, which it is the duty of the proper Custom-house officers to perform, under the Mercantile Marine Acts, upon the mere production of proper documents, without any interference or responsibility whatever on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To Mr. Adams, September 6; to Mr. Bates, September 9; to Mr. Burnley, No. 425; Mr. Adams, September 5, 1864.

1864

No. 407.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* respecting the case of Mr. John Jackson, a British subject, who with his wife and family was removed some time since from Knoxsville, Tennessee, by order of the United States' military authorities; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise your Lordship to return an answer to Mr. Jackson, to the following effect: That inasmuch as his son appears to have been domiciled in the United States, and to have carried on trade there for a considerable period, and even in the month of September last year to have undertaken a new business in Knoxsville, after that town had been taken military possession of by the United States' forces; and inasmuch as in the year 1859, he made a formal declaration of his intention to become a citizen of the United States, Her Majesty's Government are afraid that they cannot hold out any hopes of being able to claim redress for the injuries which he alleges himself to have suffered at the hands of the United States' authorities, who have treated him as a partisan of the Confederate Government; but that Lord Lyons will be instructed to use any good offices that may be in his power, on behalf of Mr. Jackson and his family.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 408.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st of September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 16th instant from Mr. Adams, respecting the desertion at Dover of three seamen belonging to the United States' ship "Iroquois."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter dated the 17th instant from Mr. Romaine, and a memorandum relative to this subject; and to state that your Lordship proposes to inform Mr. Adams in reply, that there is no law in force in this country by which these deserters could be delivered up; but that before doing so, your Lordship wished to be favoured with our opinion whether that would be a proper answer to return to Mr. Adams' representation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Adams is right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.

(For the Attorney-General, the Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 409.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 4, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of an answer which your Lordship proposed to return to a letter dated the 26th ultimo from the Admiralty, relative to the instructions which should be addressed to Commodore Cockburn with regard to the disposal of the "Tuscaloosa."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous papers relative to this case, and to state that we should perceive that the Lords of the Admiralty were desirous of sending instructions on this matter to the Cape by the mail of the 5th of October, and to request that we would take your Lordship's proposed answer into immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it is such as is proper to be returned to the letter from the Board of Admiralty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that your Lordship's proposed answer is proper to be returned to the letter from the Board of Admiralty.

We have, &c.

(For the Solicitor-General and myself, in his absence),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 410.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th August, stating that the difficulties which have arisen in the United States respecting the privileges of British Consuls, which formed the subject of our Report of the 15th July, together with a communication which your Lordship has recently received from the French Embassy, render it, in your Lordship's opinion, desirable that the question should be carefully considered, whether it may be possible to enter with the United States and with France into Conventions regulating the rights and privileges of Consuls.

That he, Mr. Hammond, was accordingly to transmit to us a collection of papers,* giving an account of what passed with the United States on the subject in the year 1859; the recent correspondence with Lord Lyons and with the United States' Minister in this country;* and a letter from the French Chargé d'Affaires, with a memorandum on the proposal contained in it;† and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to how far the existing law of this country would admit of Her Majesty's entering with France and the United States into reciprocal engagements on the subject of Consular privileges, and where the existing law is insufficient, what engagements might be contracted with a reasonable expectation that Parliament would enable Her Majesty to carry them into effect.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it must be for Her Majesty's Government to consider whether the advantages to be obtained from an alteration of the existing law and usage, having for their object to extend the privileges of foreign Consuls in this country, and to procure reciprocal concessions from foreign States with respect to British Consuls, would be sufficient to render it expedient that the difficulties incident to any new legislation on this subject should be encountered. Assuming, however, that Her Majesty's Government should determine to introduce into Parliament a Bill (which would be necessary for the accomplishment of this object), we are of opinion that the provisions contained in it should not go beyond those which we are about to specify.

1. That Consuls shall not be compellable to give evidence before Courts of Justice as to any measure of which they have any knowledge, or as to which they have acted or interfered only in their official character, or in the discharge of their official duty as Consuls.

2. That when a Consul is duly summoned to give evidence before any Court, he may, if he shall think fit, decline to answer any question put to him if he states that he has no knowledge of the subject except such as he may have acquired in his official character, or in the course of the discharge of his official duty.

3. That in no case shall a Consul be compellable to produce in any Court of Justice,

---

* Mr. Jackson, May 10; Alderman Copeland, May 11; to Lord Lyons, No. 228; Lord Lyons, No. 378; Mr. Burnley, No. 23, 1864.

* Lord Lyons, Nos. 389, 443, and 547; Mr. Adams, July 30; to Mr. Adams, August 6; Mr. Adams, August 18, 1864.

† Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, July 17, 1864; Memorandum on ditto.

1864

if he shall object to do so, any document which he shall state to be part of the archives of his Consulate, or official documents or papers which are in his custody as Consul.

4. That if the Consul be not a citizen of, or a landed proprietor, or engaged in commerce in the country where he is acting as Consul, he shall be exempted from all military billetings, military service, and direct or personal taxation, but that he shall not have any of these privileges or exemptions if he be a citizen, or a landed proprietor, or engaged in commerce in the country where he acts as Consul. The mere hiring and occupation of an official residence not to be regarded as making him a landed proprietor.

5. The Consular offices and dwellings, if denoted as such by placing on the outer door the arms of the Consul's nation, with an inscription (as in Article II of the Convention between the United States and France), shall not be forcibly entered or searched, nor shall the person of the Consul be liable to apprehension or arrest on any pretence whatever, by any magistrate or officer of justice, except under a special warrant in writing under the hand of some Justice of the Peace, or other person duly authorized by law to grant the same; which warrant shall only be granted for some lawful cause, shown upon oath to the satisfaction of the Justice, &c., whereby it shall appear that such cause does not in any way relate to any matter concerning the official character, or acts or duty of such Consul. The privileges granted by this Article not to apply if the Consul be a citizen of, or a landed proprietor, or engaged in commerce in the country where he acts as Consul.

We think, too, that the substance of Articles IV, V, VI, X, and XII of the Convention between France and the United States might well be adopted with such modifications only as are suggested in the Memorandum. We think it probable that Parliament would not refuse a measure which conferred these additional but limited privileges on Consular officers.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 411.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd of September ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 9th of May respecting the case of the "Scylla," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons,* containing the correspondence which had since passed between him and Mr. Seward respecting the circumstances under which that vessel was decoyed into an United States' port, and there seized as a prize.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a letter and its inclosures from the Board of Trade, whom your Lordship, on the receipt of Lord Lyons' despatch No. 590 of the 15th of August, requested to make inquiry as to the ownership of the "Scylla;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which Lord Lyons proposes to make to Mr. Seward, and of which the draft was inclosed in his above-mentioned despatch.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to add that Mr. C. W. Adams, the person referred to by Lord Lyons, had not been in communication with the Foreign Office respecting the case of the "Scylla."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the reply which Lord Lyons proposes to send to Mr. Adams appears to us right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, the Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 236 and 246; to Lord Lyons, No. 276; Lord Lyons, Nos. 436, 520, and 590.

No. 412.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 8, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of September ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated 22nd ultimo, from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, relative to the place of anchorage at Halifax of vessels of war belonging to the belligerent States of North America, together with a despatch from Sir R. Macdonnell, in which he gives the reasons which have induced him to issue the Proclamation; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Proclamation does not appear to us to exceed the authority of a neutral State, and the reasons assigned by the Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia for the promulgation of it are satisfactory.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, the Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 413.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 10, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 6th and 14th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a despatch from Mr. Burnley,† inclosing further papers respecting the case of Mr. J. J. Crawford; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers now submitted for our consideration in this case do not appear to us to call for any observations in addition to those which we have already had the honour to offer to your Lordship respecting it.

We think that Mr. Burnley acted properly in refusing to give Mr. Crawford any official advice as to signing or refusing to sign the bond in question.

A sentence of a court-martial that a person charged with and found guilty of certain alleged offences shall give a bond of this nature, or in default of so doing be imprisoned with hard labour during the continuance of the war, certainly seems extraordinary. But upon the whole matter as to the amenability of persons in the condition of Mr. Crawford to military jurisdiction as actually exercised in the United States, we have already more than once expressed our opinion, and we receive no further information from the papers that are now before us calculated to affect our opinion on that point.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 414.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 18, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 5th September, and to our previous Reports respecting the vessels seized by the United States' authorities

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 292, No. 522 No. 542, No. 560, No. 606.
† Mr. Burnley, No. 16, August 29, 1864.

1864

in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 22, August 27), inclosing a transcript of the proceedings in the United States' Prize Court at that place in the case of the brig "Dashing Wave;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a perusal of the evidence tendered in the Prize Court in the case of the "Dashing Wave" does not appear to us to require any observations in addition to those which we have already had the honour to offer to your Lordship upon the case. We may, however, remark that the evidence seems to have fully warranted the decision of the Prize Court, which released the vessel on the ground of its having been captured in neutral waters.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 415.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 48), relative to the reasons which induced Judge Betts to come to his second decision in the case of Mr. Binney, by which that gentleman was released from imprisonment.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous papers in this case were also inclosed,[*] with the exception of those bearing on the case of Mr. J. J. Crawford, which were transmitted to us in his letter of the 17th ultimo; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Mr. Burnley's despatch into consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be inexpedient now to prosecute any further inquiry into this case. Mr. Binney has been released, to whatever cause that release was due; to a certain extent, at least, his release may have some practical value as a precedent, and may perhaps be useful on other occasions. Be this however as it may, after the explanation contained in Mr. Edward's letter we see no advantage likely to be derived from any further inquiry into the motives of the second decision given by Judge Betts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 416.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Burnley (No. 47), from which it appears that the British Vice-Consul at Key West has been unable to obtain the documents relating to the case of the "Clyde," with which, in our Report of the 25th of May, we requested to be furnished.

Mr. Hammond was also to transmit to us the previous papers in this case, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

---

[*] Lord Lyons, No. 526, No. 541, No. 559, No. 605; to Mr. Burnley, No. 434.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as there appears to have been a restitution of the vessel by express consent of the captor and claimant, and of her cargo without opposition, and as it does not appear that any application was made at the time for costs or damages, we do not (in the absence of the documents to which we adverted in our former Report) advise your Lordship to take any further steps in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 417.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st June, and to our previous Reports respecting the case of Thomas Tulley and the other Irishmen enlisted into the United States' army at Portland, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 57, September 20, 1864) respecting the investigation which has taken place with regard to these enlistments, and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon. The previous papers were also inclosed to us.[*]

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case further into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, although it is of course impossible to form as accurate and just an opinion upon the perusal of the written evidence as that which it was competent to the Judges, who heard and saw the witnesses, to form, it nevertheless appears to us impossible to doubt that Her Majesty's Consul Murray has, in his very clear and able report, arrived at a just conclusion as to the main result of the evidence.

It is obvious that the plying these unfortunate persons with ardent spirits, in direct contravention of the local law of the State, until they had lost their understandings, their subsequent imprisonment for riot, the false stories told about the amount of punishment to which they were amenable, the inducements to enlist, the release of those who did nominally enlist without punishment, were all portions of a scheme for procuring soldiers for the United States' army, to which the persons who supplied the liquor, the policeman who arrested the drunken man, and the recruiting officer who enlisted the half sober man, were all parties.

Taking this view of the facts, it is unnecessary for us to do more than refer to our Report of the 21st of June last, as expressing our deliberate opinion of the conduct pursued by the United States' authorities in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 418.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 21st July he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 58), inclosing a copy of the reply of Mr. Seward to the representation which Lord Lyons was instructed to make to the United States' Government, in support of the claim of Messrs. William Anderson and Co. for payment for the coals seized by the Commander of the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt" at Angra Pequena; that the instruction to Lord Lyons, and the previous papers,[†] were inclosed to us; and he (Mr. Hammond) was

---

[*] Lord Lyons, Nos. 531 and 608.

[†] Three volumes; Lord Lyons, No. 261; Mr. Burnley, No. 2.

1864

to request that we would again take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have read with great regret, though with little surprise, the answer of Mr. Seward to the just demand of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the owner of the coals seized at Angra Pequena.

It appears to us, in the first place, that there is no justification at present shown for the assumption, on the part of Mr. Seward, that the coals in question were, in fact, deposited at the place from whence they were taken, for the use of the navigators of the "Alabama."

Her Majesty's Government have (with very good reason), denied that any intention on the part of the British owners of those goods to sell them to the navigators of the "Alabama" could, if it were established, constitute a legal ground for the seizure of those goods, while remaining British property, by an United States' vessel, at Angra Pequena. Mr. Seward says that, by this denial, his Government is "left to infer that the claimants placed their coal on the Island of Angra Pequena for the use of the navigators of the 'Alabama.'"

We can only reply that such an inference is in every sense gratuitous and unwarranted, and that if the thing inferred is that the deposit of this coal was, in effect, a delivery, in pursuance of a contract with the navigators of the "Alabama," this is not only not implied in, but is distinctly opposed to, the very hypothesis of fact, in which Her Majesty's Government have expressed their view of the law, while neither knowing, nor admitting, for what purpose the coals in question were actually deposited.

It appears also to us a proposition directly at variance with the principles and practice of international law to maintain that the "Alabama" (however those who originally fitted her out may have been guilty of violating the municipal law of Great Britain), could, on that or on any other account, be treated or considered as a pirate; and we venture humbly to think that the United States' Government should be reminded that they cannot claim the rights of a belligerent from neutral States, and at the same time disregard their own obligations towards those States; that they have no right to seize the merchant-vessels of neutral States, upon the high seas, on the ground of their intention to violate a blockade, without, at the same time, religiously respecting the property of the neutral in territories or in dominions over which they have no legitimate authority, and that Her Majesty's Government are not disposed, in spite of the great forbearance which they have shown, to allow the property of Her Majesty's subjects, placed on a territory not subject to American jurisdiction, to be forcibly taken possession of by either of the belligerents in this civil war.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 419.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 21, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th of October instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence which had passed between the Foreign Office and the Board of Treasury* with respect to the shipment of certain provisions and stores on board the United States' ship "Iroquois" at Dover, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the inquiry made by the Commissioners of Customs relative to the notice which should be given to the Collectors at the different ports on the subject of such shipment. A copy of the letter from the Foreign Office of the 31st of January, 1862, referred to by the Commissioners of Customs, was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think an answer should be sent to the Commissioners of Customs to the effect that notice should be given to the Collectors at the different ports of all shipments of provisions and stores on board belligerent vessels as well as of shipments of coal; the effect of HerMajesty's Orders of 31st January, 1862, being to prohibit any such vessels, while in Britsh waters, to take in any supplies beyond what are necessary for their immediate use; which prohibition might easily be evaded if such vessels could go from one British port to another, and take in provisions and stores (other than coal), without check or inquiry.

We have, &c.
(For the Attorney-General, Queen's Advocate, and myself),
(Signed) R. P. COLLIER.

No. 420.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 29, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th October instant, stating that, with reference to that part of our Report of the 11th August last respecting the case of the "Margaret and Jessie" which related to the question of the distance at which vessels of war should be permitted to fire in the direction of neutral territory, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of the instruction which you addressed to Lord Lyons on the subject, together with a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 63), inclosing a copy of a note which he had received from Mr. Seward in reply; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such suggestions as we might have to offer on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the true principle appears to us to be that every neutral territory, in which term are included what are termed territorial waters, should be exempt from the injury accruing from the action of the belligerent. If, therefore, a new agreement, the necessity for which has been obvious for some time, be about to be made by maritime States, we think that such a distance from the shore should be fixed upon as will probably protect the neutral territorial waters and shore from the shot of the belligerent. It seems desirable that a definite distance should be named, and it would seem to us that this distance should be eight miles from the shore.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 421.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 31, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* relative to the imprisonment of a British subject, named William Croft Heslop, by the United States' authorities; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an attentive perusal of the voluminous papers in this case leads us to the conclusion that although Mr. Heslop may have been harshly treated by the authorities of the United States, particularly in his long detention without trial, and in his being removed from Baltimore Jail to Fort Warren, yet this is not a case in which Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere to claim any relief or compensation for him upon the footing of international right, whatever may have been the result of his recent

---

* Treasury, September 13; to Treasury, September 17; Treasury, September 26, 1864.

* Lord Zetland, September 5; Mr. Burnley, No. 77, September 30, 1864.

1864

trial, as to which the papers would not lead us to feel quite so much confidence as seems to have been entertained by his Advocate, Mr. Thomas.

Mr. Heslop was clearly domiciled in Western Virginia, and had acquired (even during the pendency of this civil war) landed property in the neighbourhood of Richmond, within the territory now subject to the Confederate Government. He belongs, therefore, to that class of British subjects as to whom we have frequently advised that they are not entitled to invoke the protection of the country of their birth for the purpose of placing themselves in a privileged position, as compared with native-born Americans, under the circumstances of the present civil war.

Whatever may have been the result of Mr. Heslop's trial, it seems to us impossible to deny that the United States' authorities had considerable grounds for his original arrest, not merely in the direct statements of a Confederate deserter concerning him, but in the discovery, upon his person, of ten certificates for shares in a Confederate Volunteer Navy Company, and of a paper containing (or supposed to contain) a key to some secret correspondence in cypher. The explanation of these facts (for the facts themselves are undisputed) contained in his letter of the 24th May last, appears to us eminently improbable and unsatisfactory.

With respect to the narrative of his previous active services in the Union cause, and even with the Federal army, and his arrest on that account by the Confederate Government, contained in Mr. Thomas' Report of the 9th September, it is very remarkable (if his subsequent conduct was consistent with the Federal sympathies so ascribed to him) that he should have been entirely silent as to any such services and as to any claims which he may have had upon that account on the favour and consideration of the United States' Government, throughout the whole of his correspondence with Lord Lyons; and that he should even have taken upon himself credit, both in the correspondence and in his letter to Lord Zetland, for a strict and impartial observance of the neutrality enjoined upon British subjects by Her Majesty's Proclamation.

It is an obvious remark that the same individual may possibly be found taking different sides at different periods during the progress of a civil contest like the present; and that, residing and owning landed property (as Mr. Heslop did) within the Confederate lines and territory, he might have strong motives for desiring to recommend himself to the favour of the Confederate Government after he had been made sensible of their displeasure for his former proceedings in defence of the Union.

The papers before us furnish abundant evidence of the activity and zeal displayed on Mr. Heslop's behalf by Her Majesty's Representative at Washington, and of the egregious error into which Mr. Heslop seems to have fallen upon that point, which error would appear to have led to his writing to Lord Zetland.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 422.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 1, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* respecting the case of Miss Hill, a British subject who has been imprisoned by the United States' authorities at New Orleans; and to request that we would take the papers inclosed into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the United States' authorities were warranted in treating Miss Hill as an enemy actively engaged on behalf of the Confederate States; and therefore that her imprisonment and the sentence passed upon her cannot be made the subject of complaint. We are further of opinion that all that could be properly done in her behalf was done by Lord Lyons and Mr. Acting Consul Coppell; and that if the latter gentleman should succeed, as there seems to be good reason to hope, in obtaining for this lady the mitigation of the sentence which he has proposed to the United States' authorities, he will have rendered a considerable service to her.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Miss Hill, August 6; to Miss Hill, September 7; to Lord Lyons, No. 422; Mr. Burnley, No. 73, 1864.

No. 423.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 1, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Burnley (No. 78, September 30) relative to the imprisonment, by the United States' authorities, of a British subject named David Boyle; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that David or Daniel Boyle, being a labourer seeking employment, was arrested in the company of one Robert Boyle, whom we assume to be justly described as a rebel, who had recently escaped from the proper custody of the civil authorities of the United States.

It appears also (No. 46 in Mr. Burnley's No. 78) that "from his own statement he (D. Boyle) was much mixed up in Southern matters." Bearing in mind the peculiar and exceptional state of things now prevalent in the United States, we see no just cause for remonstrance at the seizure and imprisonment of a person arrested in such circumstances and in such company; but we think that the continuance of this imprisonment for nine months, without any trial and in spite of frequent applications from Lord Lyons and Mr. Burnley to Mr. Seward for his trial or his release, certainly affords just grounds for grave complaint, more especially if, upon investigation, it should turn out to be true that he was examined before a Commission on the 12th of April (that is, about four months after his arrest), which reported that there were no charges against him (see David Boyle's letter to Lord Lyons, Inclosure 13 in Mr. Burnley's No. 78); and if it also should turn out to be true that the United States' Colonel Ingraham offered to release him if he would take the oath of allegiance to the United States (David Boyle to Lord Lyons, Inclosure 22 in Mr. Burnley's No. 78). This latter averment ought, we think, to be the subject of a special inquiry.

The former statement of Boyle, it is to be observed, is directly at variance with that of the Judge Advocate to Mr. Seward (Inclosure 18 in Mr. Burnley's No. 78), who says that "he (D. Boyle) knew that Robert Boyle had escaped, but refused to answer any questions as to where he had been where he was going, or what he had been doing."

Upon the best consideration of the facts of this case, we are not disposed to advise your Lordship that any demand for pecuniary compensation should at present be made on behalf of this person; but if, upon further inquiry, it should appear that his averments with respect to what took place before the Commission in April, and the offer of Colonel Ingraham, were strictly true, we should desire to have an opportunity of reconsidering this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLILER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 424.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th of October ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 28th of July he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Mr. Burnley (No. 12, August 29, and No. 93, October 7), inclosing copies of a note founded on our Report which he had addressed to Mr. Seward respecting the case of the "Sylvanus," and of Mr. Seward's reply; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations that we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of Mr. Seward with respect to the firing shot by the American cruizer upon the "Sylvanus" is satisfactory; but with this exception it appears to us very unsatisfactory, both in its general tone and in its particular statements.

The answer practically asserts that this practice of placing neutrals in irons and treating them primâ facie as belligerents will be continued: the justification of this practice being grounded on the assumed right of the United States' Government to treat all blockade-runners as primâ facie enemies, and not as neutrals, until their neutral character is ascertained by subsequent inquiry. It is obvious, that this assumption may in all cases result (as it has, in many cases, actually resulted) in the confinement of neutral crews for indefinite periods of time, as prisoners of war; although it is admitted that, in principle, neutrals are not liable to any such penalty for breach of blockade.

We have more than once had the honour to express our opinion that this conduct is a plain and clear violation of neutral rights.

We regret to see that the old argument of the war being a civil war is again put forward; as if that could be a justification for acts which the argument tacitly admits would be unjustifiable in a war which was not civil. The proposition, so far as the obligations of the belligerent towards the neutral are concerned, is, as we have often had the honour to state, wholly unwarrantable by international law or precedent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 425.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 10, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th October he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a despatch founded on that Report, which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Burnley (No. 58, September 20), in reply to Mr. Seward's note of the 24th of August, also inclosed therewith, relative to the coals seized at Angra Pequena by the Commander of the United States' steamer "Vanderbilt;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the proposed answer is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have ventured to suggest a few alterations and additions in the latter part of the draft letter proposed to be sent to Mr. Burnley; and with these variations we think it may properly be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 426.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th of October ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th of April respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the correspondence which took place on the subject between Messrs. Wilson and the Foreign Office in the month of August last, a letter dated the 21st ultimo from those gentlemen, complaining of the delay which had taken place in dealing with this case, in the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us a volume containing the most recent correspondence with regard to this case, and to request that we would take Messrs. Wilson's letter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think an answer should be sent to Mr. Wilson to the following effect.

That Her Majesty's Government are advised by the Law Officers of the Crown, that this case does not call for the direct intervention of Her Majesty's Government. They will, however, instruct Lord Lyons to use his good offices to expedite, if possible, the hearing of this cause before the Appellate tribunal.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 427.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 2nd of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 27th ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Treasury, respecting the claim for damages put forward by the owner of the "Alexandra," and to request that we would take this claim into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the course which should be pursued by Her Majesty's Government with reference thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise your Lordship that the proposition contained in Mr. Hamel's letter of effecting a compromise within the limit of 4,000*l.* is, all the circumstances duly considered, one which it would be expedient to adopt.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 428.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 14, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch, received on the 12th instant from Her Majesty's Consul at Teneriffe, reporting the circumstance under which a number of men had been landed at that port from the British steamer "Laurel," and the part taken by that vessel in the equipment at sea of the British steamer "Sea King," as a vessel of war of the Government of the so-called Confederate States. That Mr. Consul Grattan states that he had taken the depositions on oath of four of the seamen of the "Sea King," who were landed from the "Laurel," and that he had deemed it proper to send Captain Corbett to England in safe custody to answer a charge of having infringed the Foreign Enlistment Act.

That your Lordship had ascertained that the depositions had not yet reached the Board of Trade, and that your Lordship was unable, therefore, at present to submit them for our consideration, and Mr. Layard was directed, however, to send us, at once, the Consul's despatch, as well as a copy of a telegram received at the Board of Trade announcing the arrival of twenty-two of the men at Liverpool; and to request that we would take the papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our advice as to the course which should be adopted by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

1864

We are also honoured with Mr. Layard's letter of this day's date forwarding the depositions in the case of the "Sea King."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the depositions taken at Teneriffe, and forwarded to Her Majesty's Government by Mr. Consul Grattan, do not support the conclusion arrived at by the Consul, that Captain Corbett (whom we understand to have been in command of the "Sea King" until she was handed over to certain agents of the Confederate States off Desertas), is chargeable with any offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act. To constitute an offence under the 7th (the Equipment) clause of that Act, there must have been an equipment, &c., with a view to employment in the belligerent service of a foreign Power, within some part of the United Kingdom, or of Her Majesty's dominions beyond the seas. In like manner, to constitute an offence (by a person not himself enlisting, &c.) under the 2nd section, such person must have been concerned, within the United Kingdom, or in some part of Her Majesty's dominions elsewhere, in inducing or procuring others to enlist, &c., or to go, or agree to go, or embark, from some part of Her Majesty's dominions, for the purpose, or with intent, to be enlisted &c.; and to constitute an offence under the 6th section, the master, or other person in command of a ship or vessel in some part of the United Kingdom, or of Her Majesty's dominions beyond the seas, must knowingly and willingly have taken, or engaged to take, on board persons who had enlisted, or had agreed, &c., to enlist, &c., or who were departing from Her Majesty's dominions, for the purpose and with the intent of enlisting, &c.

In every one of these cases the criminal act must have been committed within some part of "Her Majesty's dominions;" a word which, as here used, does not (in our opinion) include a British ship on the high seas. But all the facts mentioned in these depositions appear to have taken place upon the high seas, beyond the limits of Her Majesty's territory. It is, indeed, not improbable that in the preparation of the "Sea King" for her voyage (if she went to sea under Captain Corbett's command from any port in this country), an offence against the 7th section of the Act may have been committed. It is also possible, that the officers and men, or some of them, may have been hired and taken on board in this country, with a view to employment in the Confederate service, so as to constitute offences against the 2nd and 6th sections, or one of them. But there is no evidence to support either of these conclusions in the depositions taken at Teneriffe by Consul Grattan.

All, therefore, that we can now advise your Lordship to do, is to direct the twenty-two men, or some of them who have just landed at Liverpool, be immediately examined by the Solicitor to the Treasury or some person deputed by him, and their evidence reported to us; and that the Solicitor be directed to obtain such other information as may be accessible in this country with respect to the previous history of the "Sea King," the nature and circumstances of her equipment, the engagements of her crew, and the persons concerned therein, if there should be reason to believe that she sailed from this country with the view of being employed as a ship of war in the Confederate service.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 429.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 15, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 100, October 10th), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward stating the decisions come to by the United States' Government in the case of Thomas Tulley and the other Irishmen, passengers in the ship "Nova Scotian," who were enlisted into the United States' army at Portland.

A draft of a despatch, founded upon our above-mentioned Report, which has been addressed to Mr. Burnley, together with the despatch to which it was in answer, was also inclosed, and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion on this matter as it now stands.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the additional papers in this case do not induce us to change in any degree the opinion which we have already had the honour to report to your Lordship.

The United States' authorities have though proper to believe the testimony of their own officials, and to disbelieve that of the enlisted men; but it is not controverted by them that these men were locked up in a state of drunkenness in prison, and released from it without the payment of any fine or undergoing any punishment, and that their enlistment took place almost immediately on their becoming sober and being released.

It would seem to us proper to point out to the United States' Government, that the difference between the view of these transactions which has been taken by that Government, and the opinion of them which Her Majesty's Government has been compelled to form, seems to your Lordship the more to be regretted, because, if a different course had been taken by the United States' Government, it might perhaps have strengthened the hands of Her Majesty's Government in their endeavours to prevent Her Majesty's subjects from taking part with either of the contending parties in the present war.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 430.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 15, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that we were of opinion that notice should be given to the Collector of Customs at the different ports, of all shipments of provisions and stores on board belligerent vessels as well as of shipments of coal, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 1st instant, and its inclosure, from the Treasury, requesting to be informed whether the Commissioners of Customs should be instructed that no provisions or other supplies of any kind are to be permitted to be shipped on board a belligerent vessel until after the expiration of three months from the time when provisions or other supplies had been last shipped within British waters by the same vessel; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take this further letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which ought to be returned thereto, in view of the letter from the Foreign Office of the 31st January, 1862, of which a copy is inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think no such instruction as that suggested ought to be given to the Commissioners of Customs. The period of three months mentioned in the 4th Rule laid down by the letter from the Foreign Office of the 31st January, 1862, clearly relates to supplies of coal only. There is no limit of time fixed with reference to the other supplies which are permitted; although it is, in our opinion, desirable that it should be known what supplies have been actually taken in from time to time by belligerent vessels, in order to check any violation or evasion of the Rules which restrict these supplies to things "requisite for the subsistence of the crew" (Rule 4), or (as the same meaning is expressed in Rule 3) "necessary for the immediate use" of the vessel.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, inclosing a further letter from the Treasury, which has been received by us since the above Report was copied for signature, does not appear to us to call for any further remark.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P,

1864

No. 431.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 16.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 16, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st of November instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 30th of July, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 109, October 18), inclosing a copy of a note from Mr. Seward, stating the result of the trial of Acting Master Everson, of the United States' Navy, for shooting James O'Neill; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the result of the Court-martial on Acting Master Alfred Everson, of the United States' Navy, proves it to have been fairly and impartially conducted; and (although the proceedings themselves, which Mr. Seward promises to send, are not yet before us) we see no reason to doubt that the sentence was proper and sufficient. We observe that no reference is made in the letter of Mr. Seward to the subject of pecuniary compensation to the unfortunate man who was wounded; but it would appear to us that this is a question worthy of the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 432.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 19.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 18, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 3rd instant, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, respecting a fine levied by the Collector of Customs at Port Angelos, Washington Territory (United States), upon the master of the British steamer "Alexandra," for an alleged violation of an Act passed on the 7th of July, 1838, called the Steam-Boat Act, and with respect to which your Lordship had been requested to communicate with Her Majesty's Minister at Washington.

Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have referred to the American Acts of Congress of July 7, 1838 (25th Congress, session 2, chap. 191), and August 30, 1852 (32nd Congress, session 1, chap. 106); after perusing which, we are clearly of opinion that they do not extend to British vessels in United States' waters, or to any vessels whatever, except those of the United States. This is evident, at once, from the whole nature and scope of their provisions, and from the express words of the 42nd section of the Act of 1852.

We therefore think there has been a manifest error and miscarriage on the part of the Collector of Customs at Puget's Sound; and that the fines paid by Mr. Moore, under protest, have been improperly and unlawfully imposed. The matter is of great importance, not only to Mr. Moore individually, but to British trade generally; for the construction placed by the Collector upon the 2nd section of the Act of 1838 (see also the 1st section of the Act of 1852), would operate to the entire exclusion of all British steamers from all "the bays, lakes, rivers, and other navigable waters" of the United States. We advise, therefore, that Lord Lyons should be instructed to represent the circumstances of this case without delay to the United States' Government; and we cannot doubt that the effect of such representation will be to procure the immediate return of the fines exacted from Mr. Moore, and to prevent the recurrence of any similar obstruction to the trade of Great Britain and her Colonies with the ports on Puget's Sound.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 433.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 24.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, November 24, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th November instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th August last, respecting the case of the "Science," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affairs at Washington (No. 94), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Mr. Acting Consul Coppell, conveying further information relative to the principle on which the several vessels seized in the Rio Grande were either released or condemned, and stating the course pursued in other particulars by the Prize Court in these cases; and to request that we would take Mr. Coppell's statement into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that, in connection with the subject, he was to transmit to us two other despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires (Nos. 114 and 116), from which we should see that Mr. Seward has stated that the representation which, in conformity with our Report of the 5th September, had been addressed to him respecting the Matamoros seizures should receive attentive consideration.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th November instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th instant respecting the vessels seized in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 14th instant from Messrs. P. H. Dean and Co., the owners of the "Dashing Wave," one of the vessels in question, applying for information as to the steps which would be taken by Her Majesty's Government in regard to their vessel; and to request that we would take Messrs. Dean's letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

We are also favoured with Mr. Hammond's note of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 16th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 636) inclosing the answer of the United States' Government to the representation which he was instructed to make with respect to the proceedings in the cases of the several vessels seized in the Rio Grande.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be expedient to wait until the Judge of the Prize Court has, after consultation with his brother Judges, delivered in writing the reasons and principles upon which his Judgments are founded. Until we have had an opportunity of examining the Judgments in extenso, we cannot prudently advise your Lordship as to the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue. In the meantime, we think that an answer should be sent to Messrs. Dean and Co., to the effect that they must principally rely upon their own exertions, and those of their agents and counsel in America, to obtain by legal means in the proper Prize Courts the redress which they seek; but that, in the peculiar circumstances of these cases, Her Majesty's Government will instruct Lord Lyons to afford them such assistance as may be in his power.

With reference to Mr. Seward's answer to Mr. Burnley, of the 25th October last, it seems to us necessary to observe that in this country it is at all times competent for the Executive Government, in cases of prize, to control the proceedings in the Prize Courts, so far as to withdraw any case from them, if it should be considered improper or unadvisable to prosecute it with a view to condemnation; and, a fortiori, it is competent for the Executive Government to direct that an appeal against any Judgment of one of these Courts releasing a ship or cargo should not be presented, or if presented, should not be prosecuted. This power of the Crown has in Great Britain always been deemed to be of great public importance, as affording the means of doing prompt justice to neutrals in cases of manifestly unjust capture; and we have hitherto supposed the same power to be undoubtedly possessed by the Government of the United States of that country. The decision of the Prize Court in the case of the mail-bags on board the "Peterhoff" (affirming the absolute right of the District Attorney to withdraw these bags from the Court, notwithstanding the opposition of the captors), and the course pursued by the United States' Government with respect to those cases in which some of their Prize Courts had acted upon the old rule as to enemies' goods in neutral bottoms (notwithstanding the adhesion of the United States in the present war to the Declaration of Paris), seem to us to be clear examples of the recent exercise of such a power; and therefore we cannot but feel some doubt whether the concluding sentence in Mr. Seward's letter of the 25th October may not have been written without sufficient regard to the important and necessary distinction between this class of cases and proceedings in the ordinary Courts of Law.

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 434.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell,—(Received November 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 23, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th November instant, stating that with reference to that part of our Report of the 4th of August, which related to the proceedings of the United States' troops on the Rio Grande, and the case of Captain Paulson, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 119, October 24th), inclosing the explanation of the United States' Government with respect to these matters; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the course pursued by the United States' Government, as to the complaint with respect to the proceedings of their troops on the Rio Grande, appears to us quite satisfactory. But the claim to arrest a British subject on land for having been engaged in running the blockade, is one which we think contrary to international law. We have often had occasion to report to your Lordship that the offence of breaking the blockade, so far as neutrals are concerned, is not punishable by the arrest or imprisonment of the neutral subject. The seizure of the ship and cargo is the penalty affixed by international law, and to that neutral States ought to submit; but this obligation which in practice presses hard upon the commerce of the neutral, is met by a corresponding obligation on the part of the belligerent to confine himself strictly to this mode of maintaining his blockade.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 435.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 25, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to us, that it appears a party of twenty-five men lately undertook an expedition from Canadian territory against the town of St. Albans, Vermont, United States, and that after levying contributions from the inhabitants and committing various damages, they recrossed the frontier taking a portion of their spoils with them; and your Lordship understands that the United States' Government has addressed to the Canadian Government a demand for the extradition of these men, under the Treaty of Washington of August 9, 1842.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, under these circumstances, your Lordship requested that we would have the goodness to favour you with our opinion upon the following points, viz.:—

1st. Whether if the Judges in Canada, notwithstanding the allegation of these men that they were acting under the orders of the Confederate Government, should decide in favour of their extradition, any further measures will be necessary to prevent future raids;

2ndly. Whether, if evident preparations were being made on British territory for future raids, the existing law is strong enough to suppress these preparations;

3rdly. Whether it is necessary for the maintenance of our just relations with the United States, that we should add to our statutes such a law as that passed by the United States in 1838 (see State Papers, vol. xxvi, pages 1234 and 1349);

4thly. Whether, if such a law be necessary, it is more consistent with constitutional usage that it should be proposed to the Imperial or to the Canadian Legislature.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with regard to the first question, assuming that these persons should allege that they were acting under the orders of the Confederate Government, we think it is impossible to say that the liability of individuals, when they shall have been apprehended, to extradition does constitute a sufficient security (regard being had to the conterminous relations and the existing state of things in Canada and the United States) against the recurrence of such acts of violence as have been committed in the present instance.

With regard to the second question, in the case supposed, if sufficient information of facts capable of proof should reach the Government in time for taking measures of prevention, we think that the existing law would be adequate for the purpose.

With regard to the third question, we are not prepared to say that the enactment of a law in Canada, containing provisions similar to those which are to be found in the United States' Act of 1838, is a measure of necessity for the maintenance of our just relations with the United States; but we do think that the Government of the United States have a clear right to expect that the Canadian law shall be found in practice generally sufficient, not merely for the punishment, but also for the suppression and prevention of these border raids; and it would appear to us desirable (if practicable) that the Canadian Government should be armed, during the period of civil war in the United States, with powers of prevention similar to, or equally prompt and efficacious with, those which, during the civil war in Canada, were conferred by the Legislature of the United States upon the executive of that country, in order to prevent invasions by their subjects of the Canadian frontier.

With regard to the fourth question, we think that if the passing of such a statute should be deemed expedient, it ought to be passed by the Canadian Legislature, and should in its duration be strictly limited (as the United States' Act of 1838 was) to the period during which those exigencies which have rendered it necessary may be likely to continue.

We have &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 436.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 28, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 12th of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 121, October 24), inclosing a copy of a despatch from Mr. Acting Consul Coppell, containing the further information respecting the case of the schooner "Betsy," which he was directed to obtain on the receipt of our Reports of the 17th and 28th of June last; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further information, supplied by Mr. Consul Coppel, satisfies us that Her Majesty's Government ought not to interfere officially on the part of the owners of the "Betsy," but that they should be left to the remedy of an appeal (if they think fit to make one) from the sentence of which they complain.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 437.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd November instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th instant respecting the fines imposed on the British steamer "Alexandra," at Port Angelos, Washington territory, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 21st instant, inclosing copies of further papers received from the Governor of Vancouver's Island on this subject; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and state to your Lordship whether they induce us in any degree to alter or modify the opinion contained in our Report above referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we should desire, of course, to have the advantage of perusing the Judgment of the American Court, referred to in Mr. Collector Gunn's letter (Inclosure 2 in Colonial Office letter of the 21st November), which is stated to be at variance with the opinion which we had the honour to express in our former Report.

We collect, from the present information, that the fine is considered to have been imposed, not simply for a violation of the particular American statutes to which we referred, but because the ship "Alexandra" had touched at other places besides her port of entry; and that it is held to be illegal for any foreign ship to touch at any port or place of the United States which is not a port of entry. In the particular Acts of Congress mentioned in our former Report we have failed to discover any provisions bearing upon this point, and if there should be any other statutes of the United States necessary to be considered, it is desirable that our attention should be directed to them. On the whole, it occurs to us that it might perhaps be the most prudent course for Lord Lyons to obtain the advice, upon this subject, of the legal adviser of Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, before making any representation to the United States' Government in conformity with our former opinion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 438.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 1.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 1, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 15th November, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 18th ultimo from Mr. Adams, inclosing copies of the depositions of two men who lately formed part of the crew of the "Sea King;" and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe from the accompanying draft of a letter to the Treasury dated the 15th ultimo, that the Lords Commissioners have been requested to instruct their Solicitor to take the depositions, and to proceed in this case in other respects in the manner recommended in our Report; and that a despatch of Mr. Consul Grattan (No. 39, October 30) was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, in our opinion, the depositions now forwarded by Mr. Adams are sufficient to prove that Captain Corbett did, in this country, engage and procure the deponents to serve as sailors on board the "Sea King," which ship, from the whole of the evidence in the case, we infer to have been then a vessel intended by him to be used (after she should have been taken to the Azores) in the Confederate service. These facts raise questions similar to those which were involved in the cases of the seamen on board the "Georgia" and "Rappahannock," except that none of these particular deponents accepted the Confederate service when the true object of the voyage was disclosed to them. Those questions, upon the construction of the Act, are not free from difficulty, but in some of the other cases convictions have been obtained and submitted to; and we think that even if there were no other point arising upon his acts when he handed over the ship to her Confederate commander, it would be proper upon this evidence that Captain Corbett should be prosecuted for a violation of the 2nd section of the Act, by procuring, or attempting to procure, these men and others unknown to serve and be employed, &c., or to go and embark from Liverpool for the purpose or with intent to serve or be employed, &c., contrary to that section.

---

* Colonial Office, November 3, 1864.

We further think, on more deliberate consideration, that if the "Sea King" ought to be deemed (as primâ facie we think she may be) to have been still a British ship when Captain Corbett endeavoured to induce the men on board her to accept the Confederate service, the question whether her deck was not then "a place belonging or subject to Her Majesty" is a serious one, which ought also to be raised by the indictment. In our former Report we stated that we did not think a British merchant-ship at sea was included within Her Majesty's "dominions" in the sense of the Act; but in the 2nd clause there are also the other and larger words above noticed, to which we did not then advert, and which might perhaps receive a more extensive construction.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 439.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Doctor's Commons, December 3, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 28th July, 1863, respecting the proceedings of the United States' steamer "Wyoming" at Hong Kong, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 11th May last, from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of a despatch from the Governor of that Colony, and other papers relative to a further visit paid by the "Wyoming" to the waters of that Colony.

That Mr. Secretary Cardwell being anxious to be informed whether the acts of the Governor in this matter should be approved, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the course pursued by the Governor of Hong Kong has been very proper and expedient.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 440.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 8th October, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and the correspondence which has since taken place on the subject,* a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 16th ultimo, inclosing a copy of an amended Order of the Governor of Nova Scotia relative to the place of anchorage at Halifax of vessels of war belonging to the belligerent States of North America, and the manner in which such vessels shall communicate with the shore.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship is disposed to consider

---

* Colonial Office, September 22; Admiralty, October 10; to Admiralty, October 14; to Colonial Office, October 14; to Mr. Burnley, No. 476; Admiralty, October 27 and November 8, 1864.

1864

that the mode of proceeding indicated in the amended Order is proper, but that before returning an answer to that effect to the Colonial Office your Lordship wishes to receive our opinion thereupon; and that he was therefore to request that we would take the papers inclosed into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer in regard to their contents.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 22nd November he was directed by your Lordship to transmit for our consideration a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 646, November 7) on the subject of the place of anchorage at Halifax of vessels of war belonging to the belligerent States of North America.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the mode of proceeding indicated in the amended Order is proper, and that an answer to that effect may safely be returned by your Lordship to the Colonial Office.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 441.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 23rd ultimo, and its inclosures, consisting of three despatches from the Governor-in-chief of the Windward Islands, and a letter addressed to your Lordship by Mr. Roach, dated the 22nd October, a resident of Barbadoes, in which he claims the interposition of Her Majesty's Government in procuring compensation for the loss he has sustained by his vessel, the brigantine "Madeira," being run down by the United States' steamer "Clyde" in October 1863.

Mr. Hammond was, therefore, to request that we would take Mr. Roach's application into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the statements of the master and mate, it would appear that the United States' steamer "Clyde" was, according to the rules of the sea, solely to blame for this collision; but in all probability the "Clyde" has a different story to tell; and the matter is one which can only properly be decided by a judicial investigation. The proper course for Mr. Roach to pursue would be to proceed against the "Clyde" in a Court in the United States which exercises Admiralty jurisdiction. If, indeed, the United States' Government were to refuse to allow process of Court to issue at the suit of a private individual against a ship belonging to the State, there might be some ground for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mr. Roach; but at present we are of opinion that Mr. Roach should be apprised that he must endeavour to obtain legal redress in the manner which we have the honour to point out to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 442.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Cecil Jenkins, dated the 7th ultimo, containing inquiries as to the position of himself and brother, British subjects resident in the State of Texas, in regard to military service which the authorities of that State require them to perform; and to request that we would take Mr. Jenkins' letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although obstacles appear (from the letter of Consul Lynn) to be now thrown in the way of British subjects desirous of leaving Texas, we do not understand that Mr. Jenkins' object is to obtain for himself, or for his brother, liberty to decline military service on the terms of leaving the Confederate States. On the contrary, as he is himself in England, and nevertheless writes on his own behalf as well as on behalf of his brother, we assume his object to be to return to and remain in the Confederate States, and while there to enjoy as of right (for himself and for his brother) a permanent exemption from evey kind of compulsory military service.

We do not think it would be proper under such circumstances for Her Majesty's Government to interfere in his favour. Our advice to your Lordship has always been that British subjects (who were not naturalized and had not exercised the privileges of citizens in the United or Confederate States, and who came to reside there when there were no laws in force rendering them liable to military service) were entitled, when such laws were first enacted, to leave the country (if they should elect so to do) rather than submit to compulsory military service, and that they were also entitled to have a reasonable time and reasonable opportunities allowed them for that purpose. But we have never thought that Her Majesty's Government could claim as of right, that British subjects should be permitted to continue permanent inhabitants of the territory of either belligerent upon terms of exemption from the local laws as to military service, especially if such service is of a defensive character. To this advice we still adhere, and we think that an answer in this sense ought to be returned to Mr. Jenkins' letter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 443.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 6, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th of November, 1863, respecting the case of the schooner "Etta," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 637) inclosing a copy of the decision of the Judge of the United States' District Court of New Jersey in this case; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused, with the care and attention which so important a matter demands, the Judgment of the District Court at New Jersey.

The case of a belligerent ship of war, sold bonâ fide to a neutral in a neutral port, is almost one primæ impressionis; but the decision of Lord Stowell in the "Minerva," and the concurring opinion of Judge Story, are properly cited by the Judge who tried the case of the "Etta," as furnishing much authority in favour of the principle of his decision.

Upon the whole, we are of opinion that the "Etta" was, upon sound principles of international law and usage, rightly condemned; and certainly we do not advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps, or to address any remonstrance to the United States' Government on behalf of her owners.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
RORERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 779; to Lord Lyons, No. 633; Lord Lyons, No. 48; Mr. Burnley, No. 101.

1864

No. 444.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received December 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 8, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Lord Lyons, inclosing a printed copy of a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, notifying that the blockade of the port of Norfolk, in Virginia, and of the ports of Fernandina and Pensacola, in Florida, was to cease from and after the 1st instant; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether it would be right to publish this notice in the "London Gazette," though not officially communicated to Lord Lyons.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the notice referred to into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I should not have inferred from the letter of Lord Lyons that the notification of the raising of the blockade in question had not been officially imparted to him; but as I understand that this is the case, and as I believe it has never been usual for Her Majesty's Government to cause to be inserted in the "Gazette" a notification of this kind, of which they have not been officially apprised, I see no reason why the usual course should be departed from in the present instance, and I therefore do not recommend the insertion of this notice in the "Gazette" until it shall have been communicated to Her Majesty's Government in the proper and accustomed manner.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 445.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 13, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 5th instant, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, relative to the recent attack on the town of St. Alban's, Vermont, by certain persons alleging themselves to be acting under the Confederate Government. That we should perceive that Mr. Secretary Cardwell requests to be favoured with our opinion as to what instructions should be given to Lord Monck, when the Supreme Court shall have delivered its Judgment on this case, and especially as to what course should be taken in the Colony if the Judges should determine against the extradition of the accused persons, on the ground that they were acting as officers of the Confederate Government. Previous papers were also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, transmitting two further despatches from Lord Lyons (No. 680, November 21, and No. 693, November 25) relative to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the proper legal authority in Canada should decide that these persons ought to be delivered up under the Treaty of Extradition, and the Statute 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76, to the proper United States' authority, that decision ought, in our opinion, to be acted upon; and, in that case, no further immediate difficulty will be likely to arise.

Upon the evidence as it now stands, it would appear that these persons went privately, in plain clothes, without any military demonstration, to the town of St. Alban's; and while there, took possession of horses belonging to one of the inhabitants of that town, and having obtained admission into several of the banks, seized money and other property there, and afterwards fired pistols upon unarmed citizens, killing one, and wounding others.

It is for the legal authorities in Canada to determine how far (if at all) the character of these acts may be affected, in point of law, by evidence (if such evidence should be produced) that in so doing the perpetrators acted under orders from some military or other authority in the Confederate States. But, upon the information now before us, we are not prepared to say that a decision holding such acts to be robbery and murder, under the circumstances above described, and not acts of war, would be erroneous.

If, however, the Supreme Court should decide that these persons are, by reason of any commissions granted to them by the Confederate authorities or otherwise, to be regarded as belligerents, and not as criminals, a great difficulty may, and probably will, arise.

It appears to us that, in this case, Lord Monck should be instructed to take the opinion of his legal advisers whether, upon the evidence and other information in possession of the Canadian Government, these persons may not properly be put upon their trial on a charge of misprision and violation of the Royal Prerogative, by levying war from Her Majesty's dominions against a friendly Power; and (unless the Canadian Law Officers should see reason to the contrary) we think that they ought (in the case supposed) to be retained in custody, and brought to trial for that offence. It is evident that any proofs which may be offered of their having concerted and executed this expedition under the direct authority and instructions of any persons exercising military authority or powers of government in the Confederate States, may constitute important evidence in support of such a charge. We need hardly add that so flagrant a violation of Her Majesty's neutrality by the Confederate authorities, as would be involved in the organization and execution of such a design under their immediate orders, would require the very serious attention of Her Majesty's Government.

We think, also, that such a decision of the Supreme Court would furnish a strong argument for the expediency of arming the Canadian Government, as promptly as possible, with such additional legal powers of prevention as were recommended in our last Report on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 446.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 15, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Lord Lyons (Nos. 663 and 672) and a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 24th ultimo, relative to the capture and destruction of the United States' mail-packet "Roanoke," by a party of men who embarked in her at Havana as passengers; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that (subject to the question which seems to have existed as to the Magistrate's jurisdiction) Captain Brain, and the men under his orders, were not improperly arrested upon the charge of piracy, but that the Attorney-General of Bermuda properly withdrew the charge, on the production of the commission to Captain Brain from the Confederate Government.

We are also of opinion that these persons could not have been delivered up under the Extradition Treaty to the Consul of the United States, even if his application had been made in proper form.

The authorities at Bermuda seem to be perfectly apprised of the necessity of enforcing the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act; and, therefore, we offer no observations upon the evasions and infringements of that Act, which there seems to be reason to believe are, in spite of the exertions of the authorites, practised in Bermuda.

The manifest disregard of Her Majesty's orders against the entrance of prizes taken by either belligerent within the territorial waters of Her Majesty which has taken place in this instance on the part of the captors of the "Roanoke," will doubtless receive due attention from Her Majesty's Government. In the case of a capture of this novel kind, by persons who obtain access to the captured ship as passengers, and who are not supported by any ship of their own, the strict enforcement of those orders seems to be peculiarly necessary.

1864

We have &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 447.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying paper containing the substance of a despatch from M. Drouyn de Lhuys to the Prince de la Tour d'Auvergne, requesting to be informed of the opinion of Her Majesty's Government with regard to certain propositions set forth in the annexed Memorandum as to the course which the Government of the Confederate States wish to pursue with respect to neutral property found on board vessels captured by their cruizers; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into early consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the "Minute of Instructions" to their cruizers put forth in the aforesaid Memorandum of the Confederate Government, deals with four categories of cases, A, B, C, D, and we propose to address some observations upon each of these to your Lordship.

Category A relates to "a vessel under enemy's flag without cargo, or with cargo belonging exclusively to the enemy." Passing by (as unnecessary for the consideration of the general question raised in this category) the incidental remarks as to the power of the belligerent to convert his prizes into ships of war, and as to the case of the "Tuscaloosa," we are of opinion that the rules of international law upon this subject (with which neutrals have no direct concern) are correctly stated in the Minute. The same rules are, of course, applicable to all vessels acknowledged to belong (with their cargoes) to the enemy only, whether falsely assuming the colours and papers of a neutral nation, or sailing under their own.

The other three categories all relate to cargoes or ships in which neutrals are interested; and as to all these, the Confederate "Minute of Instructions" contemplates a systematic departure from one of the most fundamental rules of international maritime law, viz., the rule that the seizure of neutral ships or property by a belligerent on the high seas is illegal, unless followed by a regular adjudication in a competent Prize Court. It is a cardinal principle of maritime international law, that a State, which claims to exercise the belligerent rights of visitation, search, and detention of neutral vessels, is bound to possess or constitute proper Courts capable of administering international justice to neutral claimants. It is also a settled principle, that the property of a neutral on board an enemy's merchant-ship (except in cases of contraband) is not good prize, and that neutrals ought always to have the means of reclaiming any such property, if captured, in a Prize Court; also, that if any property of a neutral is alleged to be contraband, it cannot be legally treated as such, or confiscated, without a proper sentence of condemnation. The right and the duty of the belligerent in these matters, are correlative and inseparable. He cannot lawfully exercise the former without performing the latter. If, in his judgment, insuperable difficulties prevent him from giving to neutrals the benefit of this administration of justice, he cannot call upon them to accept any substitute of his own invention which may happen to be more convenient to himself; certainly he cannot require any neutral Power to accept such a substitute at the cost of breaking down any of the rules which it has lawfully established for the purpose of maintaining its own neutrality; the belligerent cannot say to the neutral, "either you must allow within your neutral territory certain facilities to my belligerent operations, or I will not restore to you your goods, which I admit I have no right to keep."

We proceed to apply these observations to the propositions contained in Category B, which relates to "a vessel under enemy's flag, with cargo wholly or in part belonging to neutrals."

The Confederate Government claims the right either to enter British ports with prizes in order to restore captured British property, or to destroy that property at sea. We are of opinion that the Confederate Government has no such right. It is competent to Her Majesty's Government, on the one hand, to forbid the bringing prizes of either belligerent into her ports, and, on the other hand, also to claim the restitution of all goods of Her Majesty's subjects taken by any of the belligerent cruizers which have not been lawfully condemned as prize of war.

If the necessities of either belligerent constrain him to destroy these goods, he destroys them wrongfully, suo periculo, and he is responsible for their value to the neutral owner.

Category C relates to enemy's goods in neutral ships, and Category D to ships sailing under neutral colours, or with neutral papers, as to which the Confederate cruizers may conceive that grounds of seizure (applicable either to the ships themselves, or to goods on board of them supposed to be contraband) exist.

Laying aside as irrelevant to the questions of public law with which neutrals are concerned, all that is said in this paper as to the Declaration of Paris (by which the Confederate States might, no doubt, decline to be bound if they thought fit to do so), and also whatever relates only to enemy's ships (admitted to be such) sailing under false colours or papers, we may conveniently consider both these categories together.

What the "Minute of Instructions" in substance proposes is, to take all articles considered by the belligerent cruizers to be contraband and to have a hostile destination, out of neutral vessels at sea, and to transship or destroy them, leaving the ship to pursue her voyage, unless such articles are deemed to have been knowingly put on board by her owners; in which case it is further proposed to treat the vessel herself as an enemy's vessel, i. e., to detain or destroy her.

It is also proposed in all cases in which it shall be the conclusion of the captor that the enemy has any kind of interest in a merchant-ship sailing under neutral colours and papers (although not admitted by her captain and crew to be enemy's property), to detain and destroy that vessel; all which is proposed to be done without any adjudication at the time or afterwards by any Prize Court, by virtue only of some novel kind of inquiry or investigation to be conducted by the captor himself on board his own or the captured vessel. That propositions so extraordinary as these should be gravely made to any neutral Powers would be strange under any circumstances; and it is not a little singular that, while the ground on which these propositions are now made is the confessed inability of the Confederate cruizers to bring prizes into their own ports by reason of the blockade, Great Britain and France are, in the same document, reproached for recognizing the blockade, as if it were a paper blockade condemned by the Treaty of Paris.

Our conclusion upon the whole matter is that the right of neutral nations to have their ships and property left unmolested at sea, unless the belligerent who interferes with them proceeds to carry them in for adjudication before a regular Prize Court, is incontestable; and that a belligerent who, from the maritime superiority of his adversary, is unable to comply with that obligation must accept the other branch of the alternative, and is bound to leave neutral ships and property unmolested; and that he is not entitled on that or on any other account to call upon neutral Powers to assist in relieving him from his difficulty, either by allowing him to hold Prize Courts, or to dispose of his prizes within their territories, or by waiving any portion of the rights of their own subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 448.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 19.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 19, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* relative to the case of the "Night Hawk," a British vessel, which having run ashore while attempting to run the blockade, was subsequently set on fire by a party sent from the United States' vessel of war, and the crew, or a portion of them, made prisoners; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

---

* Messrs. Lawrence, November 14; to Lord Lyons, No. 527; Lord Lyons, No. 686; Messrs. Lawrence, December 8, 1864.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, transmitting a further despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Washington (No. 698), on the subject of the capture of the "Night Hawk."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think this matter is very properly treated in Lord Lyons' letter to Mr. Seward of the 26th November last. It does not appear to us that any ground whatever has been shown by Mr. Seward for ascribing to the "Night Hawk" the character of an enemy's ship, and having regard to the circumstance that she was destroyed by the boarding officer without so much as examining her papers, we think that the proofs which have already been given of her British ownership are amply sufficient. The ship was, indeed, destroyed in the act of violating the blockade; and as she must necessarily have been condemned if brought in for adjudication, the mere act of her destruction may possibly not have involved any substantial injury to British interests. But the conduct of the boarding officer, and the subsequent imprisonment of the British crew, seems to us to be wholly without justification or excuse. The captor had no right to fire upon the unresisting crew; and the whole circumstances of the case, instead of affording any exceptional reasons (as Mr. Seward affects to consider) for applying to these unfortunate men a different treatment from that admitted to be the right of "the class of neutral subjects in neutral vessels engaged in violating the blockade," appear to us to give to the treatment, actually inflicted upon them, the character of an aggravated breach of international law.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 449.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 687, November 25), respecting the case of the "Matagorda," a vessel whose nationality appears to be doubtful, which had been captured for breach of blockade, and the crew imprisoned; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the present circumstances of this case, we are of opinion that the release of these men from prison cannot be insisted upon as a matter of right. They were taken on board of a vessel which appears either to have had no flag or papers, or to have been sailing under a Confederate flag. The presumption is that she was an enemy's vessel.

If further investigation should prove that she is a neutral vessel, we should desire to have an opportunity of reconsidering the case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 450.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 20, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 29th August last, respecting the case of Mr. Hardcastle, who was shot by a sentry in the old Capitol prison, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 647, November 7) inclosing a copy of a further note, and its inclosures, from Mr. Seward respecting this case; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our observations thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of the United States' Government, and of their Judge Advocate-General, does not in the slightest degree alter the opinion which in our two former Reports upon this subject we have had the honour to express to your Lordship. In those Reports we set forth at some length the principles of international law applicable to the facts of this case. We think that no advantage would result from a recapitulation of our former argument. The pretence that the word "safe conduct" was used "in a popular sense" in the first instance, and the attempt to maintain that the safe conduct extended only to the passage between the lines of the enemy, indicates the determination of the United States' Government to avoid granting that compensation which it appears to us international justice, as well as comity, demand at their hands to the relatives of this much injured man, whom, without the slightest suggestion of evidence, except the allegations of his gaoler as to conversations with him in prison (which the dead man cannot contradict), the Judge Advocate-General of the United States persists in calling "a most active and dangerous enemy," an "avowed enemy to the United States," and a "person whose hostility and treachery had caused him to forfeit all claim to the privileges of neutrality."

We cannot forbear pointing out to your Lordship the practical commentary upon some of the circumstances of this case, which is contained in a publication recently issued and circulated by authority in the United States, with reference to the treatment of United States' prisoners by the Confederates. In this publication (which is entitled, "Narrative of Privations and Sufferings of United States' Officers and Soldiers while Prisoners of War in the hands of the Rebel Authorities: Being the Report of a Commission of Inquiry appointed by the United States' Sanitary Commission. With an Appendix, containing the testimony"), among other alleged cruel practices, that of shooting United States' prisoners for appearing at the windows of their prisons is mentioned. At pages 83 and 84 the following passages occur: "The cruel and unusual rule by which an approach to the windows from inadvertence, or for the most innocent purpose, is made an offence punishable with death in the Confederate prisons, is, it need hardly be said, unknown in Fort Delaware." . . . . "It is hardly worth while to notice the question whether any were shot (i.e., in Delaware) for looking out of the windows. No such order was ever given in this or any other United States' station."

And, at page 197, there is a letter from Quartermaster-General Meigs, of the United States' army, dated 6th July, 1864, which contains the following passage: "The Commissary-General of Prisons informs me that he has heard of no orders to shoot prisoners for being at the windows or near them; and he does not believe that orders of that character have anywhere been given. He has heard of no prisoners being shot under such circumstances."

It is sufficient to bring into mere juxta-position with these passages the concluding sentence of Captain Mix's Report (25th May, 1863) to General Martingdale of the circumstances of Mr. Hardcastle's death, on the very day of its occurrence, which took place (it will be remembered) in the Capitol prison at Washington, the capital of the United States. "The instructions," he says, "to the sentinels guarding the outer walls of the prison are that they shall warn all prisoners to keep their heads within the windows, and if they persist in disobeying, to fire their pieces." These, in the last Report of the Judge Advocate-General of the United States upon the case, dated 28th October, 1864, are called "the salutary regulations of the prison."

We can at present only repeat our advice that this claim should not be abandoned, but reserved by Her Majesty's Government, who, we think, should express themselves as entirely dissatisfied with the last reply of the United States' Government, which they consider to contain no substantial answer whatever to the reasons upon which the claim for compensation was founded.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 451.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 21.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 20, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th of December instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 26th ultimo, and to our previous Reports relative to the cases of the "Sir William Peel" and other vessels seized in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for our information, a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 690, November 25) respecting the appeals lodged by the United States' Attorney-General for Louisiana in the cases of these vessels.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers now submitted to us do not enable us to add any remarks to those which we have had the honour to offer in our former Reports upon this subject. We should be glad to see the opinion which the Judge of the Prize Court entertains as to the subject of these appeals when Lord Lyons shall have been enabled to transmit the same to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 452.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of December instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 23rd of September, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 689, November 25) respecting the new Customs Act lately passed by the United States' Congress.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous papers,* and to request that we would again take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations that we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are glad to find that by the 1st section of the United States' Statute of May 24, 1828, and the subsequent effect given to it by the Order of the Secretary to the Treasury of the United States, dated October 15, 1849, the apprehension which we entertained as to the possible effect of the recent Act of Congress upon goods imported in British vessels is obviated. Our attention, as Lord Lyons observes, had not been drawn to the Act of May 24, 1828, which is not in Mr. Hertslet's collection of Commercial Treaties, &c.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 453.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 13th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 16th instant, inclosing copies of the instructions which Mr. Secretary Cardwell has addressed to the Governor-General of Canada respecting the prisoners charged with being concerned in what is commonly called the "St. Alban's raid," whose extradition has been demanded by the Government of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 19th instant, containing a further Report from the Governor-General of Canada on the same subject, on which, as we should see, Mr. Cardwell desires to be enabled to send instructions to Lord Monck by the mail of Saturday next the 24th instant; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations and suggestions as may occur to us thereupon. The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the instructions of Mr. Secretary Cardwell to his Excellency the Governor of Canada were right and proper to be sent. With respect to the further Reports from the Governor-General of Canada upon the same subject, they do not appear to us to call for any further expression of opinion upon our part, or to embrace any matter which is not within the scope of the aforesaid instructions of Mr. Secretary Cardwell.

We ought, however, to say that in our judgment the Governor-General exercised a sound discretion in refusing the application of the prisoners for a special messenger to the Confederate States. The proper course, we think, would be for the Magistrate to grant such an enlargement of time as would give the prisoners a reasonable opportunity of obtaining the required evidence, through any means of communication which are practically open. The Canadian Government could not have acted in the matter, without asking the permission of the United States' Government to communicate with Richmond for the purpose; which request would certainly have been refused.

We have &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 454.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 27, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Lord Lyons (No. 654), inclosing a "record of proceedings" of the trial of Acting Master Everson for wounding James O'Neill; and to request that we would take the same into consideration and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a perusal of these proceedings before the court martial confirms the opinion which we expressed in our former Report, that the trial of Acting Master Everson was conducted in a manner honourable to the Government of the United States, and satisfactory to the ends of justice; and that the sentence was proper and sufficient. They do not seem to us to call for any observations on our part in addition to those contained in our former Report on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 455.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 29.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 29, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us

---

* Lord Lyons, No. 352; Messrs. de Wolff and Co., June 16; to Lord Lyons, No. 360; Lord Lyons, No. 920; to Mr. Burnley, No. 462; Board of Trade, October 18; to Mr. Burnley, No. 485, 1864.

1864

therewith a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Bahia, reporting the capture of the American ship "Kate Prince," by the "Shenandoah," a vessel now stated to belong to the Government of the so-called Confederate States, and also a draft which your Lordship proposes to address to the London, Bombay, and Calcutta Steam-Ship Company in consequence of the statement, which we should perceive is made in the above-mentioned despatch, to the effect that the "Shenandoah" once belonged to that company, at which time she bore the name of the "Sea King;" and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the draft therewith inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have taken the liberty of suggesting a slight verbal alteration in the draft which will be found in the margin, and, subject thereto, we think the proposed letter may properly be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 456.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 31, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from the Acting British Consul at New Orleans (No. 27), inclosing a copy of the second part of the printed Report of the proceedings in the case of the "Sir William Peel."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the first part was forwarded in the despatch from Mr. Coppell, No. 16 of the 20th of June last, and was reported on by us on the 1st of August; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the matter again into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer upon the papers now submitted to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the printed papers now submitted to us are merely formal, and do not throw any light upon the grounds of the appeal prosecuted by the Attorney of the United States from the Decree of restitution pronounced by the Court below. We have therefore at present no further observations to offer to your Lordship on this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 457.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 31, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 15th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us together with the previous papers,[*] a note from Mr. Adams, dated the 21st instant, and its inclosures, protesting against the proceedings of Her Majesty's Colonial authorities in the case of the steamer "Roanoke." Mr. Hammond also inclosed a draft of the answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Mr. Adams, and was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

[*] Lord Lyons, Nos. 663, and 672; Colonial Office, November 24; to Colonial Office, December 17; to Lord Lyons, No. 562, 1864.

That we think the proposed answer by your Lordship to Mr. Adams is right and proper to be sent. We venture, however, to suggest the addition of a few words which we have written in the margin of the third page of the draft, after the word "Commission."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Venezuela.

No. 458.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 18.)

Doctors' Commons, August 17, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 7th April last, and its inclosures, from Mr. Miguel Ellul, respecting his claim against the Government of Venezuela for the loss he has sustained from the seizure of his cattle and horses by the Government troops, as well as by the insurgents, in 1849. Mr. Murray was also pleased to transmit further papers[*] relating to this case, and to request that I would take them into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether or not Her Majesty's Government should support the claim, and if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that Her Majesty's Government has, ever since the year 1853, acknowledged the justice of Mr. Ellul's claim, and the title of that person to the intervention of Her Majesty's Government on his behalf with the Venezuelan Government.

I see no reason to doubt the propriety of the conclusion at which Her Majesty's Government arrived so many years ago, and I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Representative should be instructed to press the Venezuelan Government for the immediate satisfaction of the claim in question. It must be admitted that the delay has considerably increased the original injury which the loss of his cattle inflicted upon Mr. Ellul, and that this must be taken into account in the final adjustment of the claim. It is obvious, however, that the effect of this delay is very greatly exaggerated by Mr. Ellul, and that his hypothetical calculation of the damages which he has sustained from losing the "births and afterbirths" of his cattle is inadmissible. I think the most expedient course which Her Majesty's Government can pursue will be to give general directions to Mr. Mathison to procure the speedy settlement of the affair, but to exercise a sound discretion, taking what advice may seem to him necessary on the spot, as to the amount at which the whole claim shall be fixed; making some, but not extravagant, allowance for the additional injury which Mr. Ellul has sustained by the delay.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 459.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 22.)

Doctors' Commons, October 21, 1864.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas,* reporting that the Central Government of Venezuela have employed force to coerce the State of Ciudad Bolivar to be in a state of blockade; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the validity of the blockade, and whether or not Her Majesty's Government should recognize it.

---

[*] Mr. Riddell, No. 88, August 23; to Mr. Riddell, No. 36, September 27, 1853; to Mr. Mathison, No. 7, May 19, 1854; Mr. Mathison, No. 16, June 27, 1864.

1864

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as I can judge from the papers laid before me, the Government of Caracas does not appear to have exceeded its power in notifying the existence of a blockade of the coasts of the country during a period of insurrection. I observe that the IIIrd Article of the Proclamation provides that no vessel is to be seized unless it persist in approaching the coast, after due notice not to do so has been given to it on the spot by the blockading force. Such a provision of course renders necessary the actual presence of a blockading force off the coast, which Mr. Mathison seems to think did not exist at the time when he wrote his despatch to your Lordship. Upon the whole, I think that the blockade must be recognized by the Government of this country.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 460.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 28.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 28, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 21st instant (therewith returned to me, together with the despatch upon which it was founded*), he was directed by your Lordship to request that I would prepare for insertion in the "London Gazette" a notification of the blockade of the coast of Guayana by the forces of the Government of Venezuela.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have prepared, and herewith transmit, a form of notification of such blockade for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 460.

Notification of Blockade.

Foreign Office, .

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas a despatch, inclosing a copy of a Decree dated the 13th of September, 1864, issued by the head of the Venezuelan Government, declaring that, an insurrection having occurred in the State of Guayana, the part of coast extending from the mouth of Vagres to that of Navios, all the canals formed by the Delta of the Orinoco, and the margins of that river, including Ciudad Bolivar, are closed; and the ports, coasts, and villages of the same to be blockaded by the Venezuelan Government.

The following is a copy of the Decree (and a translation thereof) above referred to:—

(Here insert verbatim a copy of the Decree and translation, dated 13th September, 1864.)

R. P.

---

* Mr. Mathison, No. 28, September 20, 1864.

No. 461.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 19.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 19, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st of November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th ultimo, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, reporting the circumstances under which the British ship "Albion" has been seized by the authorities at Ciudad Bolivar, after having been chartered by the Venezuelan Government to convey the troops to be employed by them against the insurgents in that State.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Chargé d'Affaires at Caracas (No. 28), reporting the measures which the Central Government of Venezuela intended to take against the insurgents (in the execution of which it is presumed that the "Albion" was employed at the time of her seizure), together with the Reports of the Queen's Advocate which have led Her Majesty's Government to recognize the blockade of Ciudad Bolivar by the forces of the Venezuelan Government; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, having regard to the duty upon which the "Albion" was apparently employed when she was seized, Her Majesty's Government would be justified in supporting the claim of her owners to redress and compensation; and if so, to what extent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as far as we can form any opinion as to the facts, from the papers before us, we think that at present no cause is shown for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the owners of the "Albion."

It appears that the Venezuelan Government is engaged in suppressing an insurrection in the State of Guayana, and has placed under blockade, for this purpose, certain portions of its coast which include Ciudad Bolivar. The "Albion" seems to have been employed in carrying troops for the Venezuelan Government to Ciudad Bolivar, and to have been seized there by the insurrectionary authorities. The owner of the "Albion" must apply to his employers, the Venezuelan Government, for compensation and redress.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

APPENDIX.

Prussia.

No. 123*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 21, 1864.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, with reference to my Report of the 31st March, and to the Law Officers' Reports of the 7th of April and 14th instant, respecting the complaints made by the Prussian Ambassador of the insufficiency of the blockade of certain German ports declared by the Danish Government to have been established, an extract of a declaration made by the Prussian Plenipotentiaries in Conference on the 18th instant.

That I should perceive that the Prussian Plenipotentiaries declare that, in the event of the blockade being re-established by Denmark, and not maintained according to the Declaration of Paris annexed to the 23rd Protocol of the Conferences of 1856, sent therewith, and in the event of such laxity being acquiesced in by the other Powers, parties to that declaration, the Prussian Government would consider itself no longer bound to observe, as regards Denmark, any of the provisions of that Declaration.

That it is understood, although not expressly stated in the Declaration, that in the case supposed, Prussia is prepared to commission privateers to act against Danish commerce.

That the questions which, in this state of things, are to be considered, are:—

1st. Supposing (in which view, however, I do not seem to concur) the Danish blockade is really as inefficient as the Prussian Government alleges it to be, would the Prussian Government be entitled to hold itself released, as regards Denmark, who, though not a signing party, acceded on the invitation of the signing parties to the Declaration, from all the provisions of the Declaration, while a means of remedying any non-observance of the Declaration in regard to the efficiency of the blockade was available to neutrals by pleading it in the Prize Court?

2nd. Whether, in point of fact, the complaint of disregard of the Declaration is not one which falls within the province of neutral Powers to make, rather than within that of the belligerent, the vessels of the neutrals being those which are directly affected by the incorrect notification of the blockade.

3rd. Whether, supposing Prussia were to commission privateers, those privateers, in the face of the declaration still remaining valid between Prussia and other Powers, would be entitled to interfere with the commercial marine of such other Powers by visiting and searching neutral vessels on the high seas, and, if not, whether any such interference on the part of a Prussian privateer would not be of so offensive and hostile a character as to entitle any of the neutral Powers to resist the practice, and to capture or destroy at sea any privateer under the Prussian flag which might interfere with a merchant-vessel sailing under the flag of such neutral Power; and that your Lordship would be glad to receive my opinion previously to the meeting of the Conference on Wednesday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these points into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as to the first question, with respect to the alleged fact of the inefficiency of the late Danish blockade, it was certainly not supported by the evidence laid before me. There was no ground for supposing that Denmark did not bonâ fide intend to institute a de facto effective blockade, or that she claimed the right to institute what is called "a paper blockade." There was probably some irregularity in the first beginning, as there usually is, of the blockade; but a regular blockade de facto, as well as de jure, was speedily instituted, and, as your Lordship is aware, several British vessels were actually captured and sent in for trial, on the ground that they had violated the blockade.

1864

But even assuming it to have been inefficient de facto, there was certainly no abstract claim put forward by Denmark that a blockade proved to be inefficient de facto should be deemed legal de jure. It was a question of dispute not as to the law, which Denmark did not, and does not, controvert, but as to the fact itself. As to this disputed fact, two remarks occur: first, it concerns principally neutral States; secondly, it is a fact the truth or untruth of which ought to be properly tried according to the proper rules of international law, in the proper Court, that is, unquestionably the Prize Court of Denmark, the belligerent. In that tribunal (which includes the Court of Appeal) as in every other Prize Court, it must be presumed justice will be done; if that presumption be defeated, the neutral injured by the injustice, not the belligerent, is entitled to proper redress. It seems to me clear, therefore, that Prussia is not entitled upon any principle of good faith, or according to any rule of construction applicable to a written instrument like the Declaration of Paris, to maintain that she is released from the obligation to observe every provision contained in that Declaration, on the ground that one of them has been suffered by other States to be in fact, not in terms, abrogated; while those other States absolutely deny this fact, and point to the proper tribunal appointed by the law of nations for deciding the controversy, by which they are willing that the fact should be investigated.

2. As to the second question. It certainly is a complaint which properly, primarily, and principally falls within the province of the neutral, and not of the belligerent State to make, though it cannot be denied that the belligerent is much interested in the question whether the commerce of neutral States shall or shall not reach his shores, as well as in the increased efficacy given to his enemy's operations by the recognition of the blockade. It is to be remembered, however, that this is not a case in which one belligerent complains that his right of blockade is disregarded while that of the other belligerent is observed by neutral States; a state of things which, of course, would justly entitle the former belligerent to complain in the first instance.

3. As to the third question. The general commissioning of privateers by Prussia would amount to a cancellation on her part of the Declaration of Paris, and so far as that anomalous document partakes of the nature of an international covenant, Prussia would certainly have no right to demand from other States who subscribed the declaration, the observance of any part of its provisions. But in truth, if this Declaration, which Prussia calls "ce grande acte international," is to be considered as a Treaty, Prussia would break the Treaty by such a measure on her part, and would thereby incur towards these other States, now neutral, all the responsibilities and liabilities incident to States which violate their Treaties.

In this state of things it would appear to me clearly within the competence of the now neutral States to refuse to allow Prussian privateers to search, visit, or detain vessels belonging to these States. Proper public notice of this determination on the part of the neutral, if taken, would of course be communicated to the belligerent; and with respect to this question, it is to be observed that, even if the commissioning of Prussian privateers should be not general, but limited in terms to operations upon the Danish commerce, practically the consequences of a general commissioning would follow. The Prussian privateer would seize on an English or French vessel alleging it to be Danish; would contend that the English or French flag was fraudulently hoisted; would insist on the right of search, and, in case of doubt, would carry off the vessel for adjudication to a Prussian Prize Court. It would also, of course, be impossible to prevent Denmark from using the same weapon against Prussia.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

SECOND APPENDIX.

No. 1.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th February ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 4th December last, respecting the proceedings of Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Fonblanque at Alexandria, in a case of contempt of Court on the part of a French subject named Ninet, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of the despatch which your Lordship addressed to Sir Edmund Hornby, instructing him to require from Mr. Fonblanque the explanations suggested as necessary in our Report above mentioned.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to forward two despatches from Sir E. Hornby, with Mr. Fonblanque's reply,* and to request our further opinion in this matter.

The former papers were also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are disposed to agree with the opinion expressed by Sir E. Hornby, that the circumstances of the case, as now explained, relieve Mr. Fonblanque from all blame for his conduct in this difficult and anomalous matter.

Upon the whole we incline to the opinion that the answer of M. Ruyssenaers contains the best advice as to the course which should be pursued upon these occasions, and that it is the one which should be adopted by the British Consular Court in cases of a similar description, until some arrangement be made or Convention entered into as to this subject between Christian Powers exercising jurisdiction in the Ottoman dominions.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 2.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, May 23, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of that day's date, relative to the proceedings of the British legal authorities in Egypt, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Cairo (No. 16, February 1, 1864), respecting the proceedings of Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Fonblanque in the matter of a complaint made by the Egyptian Government against the publication of an objectionable newspaper under the alleged editorship of a British subject, and to request that we would favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion upon Mr. Fonblanque's conduct in this respect.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed in the extract of a despatch from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 9 in Mr. Colquhoun's despatch No. 16), that the local Government has a right to suppress a newspaper published or printed within its limits; and that, where the proprietor claims to be under British protection, the British Consular officer ought to act ministerially, when requested to do so by the local Government, in aiding in the suppression of such a newspaper. And we think that Mr. Fonblanque erred in not obeying the instructions of Mr. Colquhoun and in not assisting the local officers to close the establishment of the "Il Popolo," which appears to have been justly suppressed by the Viceroy in the circumstances stated in these papers.

---

* Sir E. Hornby, No. 95, December 10, 1863; Sir E. Hornby, No. 10, February 8, 1864

1864

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 3.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 5, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th July, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us, with reference to our Report of the 25th June (?), that your Lordship is prepared to recommend to the Treasury to sanction the expenditure which would be incurred by the establishment of a Supreme Consular Court in China, to have its seat at Shanghae and to have also jurisdiction in Japan. That your Lordship considers that this Court should consist of a Judge, a Legal Vice-Consul, and a Law Clerk, severally holding the same power and authority conferred by the existing Order in Council on similar officers in the Ottoman dominions. That the Judge of this Court should have the superintendence and control, as regards judicial matters, of all the subordinate Consular Courts in China and Japan, and would be empowered to visit, either as a Circuit Judge at fixed periods, or as occasion might require, the several Consulates in the two countries, there to dispose of such civil or criminal cases as may be brought before him. That the Judge would hear appeals from the subordinate Consular Courts; and appeals from the decision of the Judge himself would be dealt with as in the case of appeals from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court in Turkey. That the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Hong Kong, in regard to civil suits arising within any part of the dominions of China or of Japan, would, under the proposed arrangement, be wholly merged in the Supreme Consular Court; but Hong Kong would still remain as the British Colony, under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, for the trial of criminals in certain cases provided for in the Act. That the appellate jurisdiction of the Superintendent of Trade in China and the Consul-General in Japan would also generally cease, though it would be for our consideration whether any such jurisdiction should be left to them in regard to the enforcement of rules and regulations, the power of making which must still be reserved to them, for the observance of Treaties, and for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects in China and Japan. With these general observations Mr. Hammond was to refer to us the Order in Council now in force as regards China and Japan, with the existing rules and regulations so far as they are known in this country; and to request that we would consider in what manner the proposed Court should be established, and having come to a conclusion on that point, he (Mr. Hammond) was to suggest that Mr. Francis Reilly, who has been employed in preparing the Order in Council for the Levant, should be instructed by us to prepare drafts for our approval of such Orders and Instructions as may be necessary for carrying the arrangement into effect.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that no appellate jurisdiction should be left to the Superintendent of Trade in China and to the Consul-General in Japan.

With respect to the new Court which it is proposed by your Lordship to establish at Shanghae, with jurisdiction extending to Japan, we are of opinion that it must be established by the authority of the new Order in Council; and we think that this new Order should at the same time repeal the existing Orders both as to China and Japan, and should consolidate and adapt such provisions of them as may be found necessary to the scheme of the new Court which it is proposed to establish, and we will give to Mr. Francis Reilly, in compliance with your Lordship's desire, the requisite instructions for this purpose.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 4.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 15, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 18th July respecting the establishment of a Consular Court for China and Japan, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 85), recommending that as regards China such a Court should be established.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have taken this further despatch into consideration, and it does not appear to us to call for any observations in addition to those which we had the honour to submit to your Lordship with respect to the establishment of a Consular Court for China and Japan.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 5.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 24, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople (No. 63, October 12, 1864), inclosing a despatch from the Legal Vice-Consul at Alexandria, relative to a complaint made by Cherif Pasha, the Egyptian Minister for Foreign Affairs, in the matter of the arrest of two Maltese accused of the murder of an Egyptian cavass or police officer; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the proper interpretation of the Capitulations with regard to the question of jurisdiction raised by Cherif Pasha.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That this appears to us to be one of those cases in which the usage of the English Consulate is not in accordance with the express provisions of the Capitulations. The provision applicable to this case appears to be the 42nd of those confirmed by the Treaty of the Dardanelles of 1809 (2 Hertslet, 357): "That in case any Englishman or other person navigating under their flag should happen to commit manslaughter, or any other crime, or be thereby involved in a law-suit, the Governor in our sacred dominions shall not proceed to the cause until the Ambassador or Consul shall be present, but they shall hear and decide it together without their presuming to give them any the least molestation by hearing it alone, contrary to the holy law and these Capitulations." And we are at a loss, therefore, to see why Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Fonblanque maintain that the British Consular Court had exclusive jurisdiction in this matter. There does, indeed, seem to be a disposition on the part of the Egyptian authorrities to concede, to a certain extent, the jurisdiction for which Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Fonblanque contend; and it may well be thought expedient to take advantage of the usage in question as far as these authorities are found willing to recognize it. But for that very reason, as the usage rests (in our opinion) upon sufferance and not on Treaty, it seems to us most injudicious to attempt to press it to an extent which gives occasion to acrimonious discussion and controversy. It would therefore appear to us that the complaint of Cherif Pasha against Mr. Fonblanque in this particular instance is well founded, and that the preliminary inquiry ought to have been carried on (according to his view of what was proper and usual) before the Turkish authority, in the presence of the British Consul or his representative. We have assumed (in accordance with what on former occasions we have understood to be the fact) that Sir E. Hornby and Mr. Fonblanque rely, not upon the text of any Treaty or Capitulation but solely upon local usage, as abrogating in Egypt the particular provision of the Capitulations to which we have referred; and if so, we think they are in error, and that the Turkish authorities are entitled, if they should think fit, to insist upon the strict observance of the Capitulations.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1864

No. 6.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 25, 1864.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches* from the Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, and from Mr. Legal Vice-Consul Fonblanque, relative to various charges which Mr. Fonblanque has made against the police authorities of Alexandria; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion generally with regard to the proceedings of the British legal authorities in Egypt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we find it impossible to arrive, upon the materials now before us, at any satisfactory conclusion as to the individual cases mentioned in these papers, nor, indeed, in the absence of an explicit and detailed answer from Mr. Colquhoun to the various charges preferred by Mr. Fonblanque against the Alexandrian police, are we in a condition to pronounce with certainty an opinion "generally with regard to the proceedings of the British legal authorities in Egypt." But it certainly does appear to us that a most unhappy and continuous discord prevails between the authorities of the British Legal Vice-Consular Court and the Alexandrian police; and that while, on the one hand, a power and jurisdiction inconsistent with the Capitulations and Treaties seems to have been assumed over certain Ionian subjects, Mr. Fonblanque, on the other hand, by refusing officially to receive Janas, when set at liberty, for the purpose of adjudicating upon any new charge which might be brought against him "until apology and reparation had been made," acted upon a mistaken view of his duty.

Upon the whole, the impression made upon our minds by these papers is that in fact a state of things exists at Alexandria into which a prompt and serious investigation should be made, and from the continuance of which very inconvenient consequences might probably ensue. Whether this investigation can be conducted by the British authorities in Egypt, or at the Porte, or whether some person should be specially sent out from this country for the purpose, is a matter for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. It is, of course, obvious that a jurisdiction so peculiar and anomalous as that which is exercised by a British Court of Criminal Jurisdiction in a Mahommedan country, and under a Mahommedan Government, cannot be worked in any satisfactory manner without great and uniform discretion, caution, and moderation, as well as firmness, on the part of the British authorities.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above was written we have received Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st instant, with the further documents therein mentioned, but it does not seem to us necessary to vary or add to the foregoing Report.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. P.

---

* Sir E. Hornby, No. 17, March 3; Mr. Colquhoun, No. 23, March 17; Sir E. Hornby, No. 25, March 24; Mr. Fonblanque, No. 5, March 29, 1864.

1864

No. 7.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 26, 1864.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* between the Foreign Office, Her Majesty's Consul at Cairo, the Legal Vice-Consul at Alexandria, and Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Egypt, relative to the case of the death of an Arab, caused accidentally by a young Englishman named Huggins; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the manner in which this case has been dealt with by Her Majesty's Consular authorities in Egypt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable, upon the present materials before us, to arrive at the conclusion that the Capitulations between the Porte and Great Britain (which extend, we presume, to the Viceroyalty of Egypt) have been superseded by any custom or usage contrary to and overriding the provisions contained in those Capitulations. If, as a matter of fact, in particular cases the enforcement of these Capitulations has not been insisted upon, we do not think that this permission has operated to prevent the proper local authorities in Egypt from requiring them to be enforced upon other occasions, and more especially upon the present occasion, which relates to the killing of an Egyptian subject by an Englishman, and for which express provision is made in the 42nd Article of the Capitulations (2 Hertslet, 357). We are therefore of opinion that the position of Mr. Fonblanque, that these Capitulations are to be treated as practically abrogated by a contrary custom, is erroneous; and that Mr. Huggins ought to have been tried at Cairo, according to the provisions of the Capitulations.

With reference to the suggestion of Mr. Fonblanque that the proceeding, with a view to compensation, ought to be regarded as in the nature of a civil suit, it seems to us to be sufficient to remark that the 42nd Article of the Capitulations appears to extend to every species of suit or procedure, which, according to the local law, might be competent in any case of homicide.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Consul Dunlop, Nos. 4 and 5; Mr. Colquhoun, No. 3; to Mr. Fonblanque, No. 1; Mr. Fonblanque, Nos. 3 and 8; Consul Dunlop, No. 15; Mr. Colquhoun, No. 8, 1864.

1865

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. March 1867.

CONFIDENTIAL.

1489

REPORTS

FROM

THE LAW OFFICERS

OF

THE CROWN.

1865.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS
1865

ALPHABETICAL INDEX.

AUSTRIA.

Commission. Court of Queen's Bench, 1.
Courts of law. Foreign. Right to decide as to evidence, 1.
Marriage. British subject. Registration in England, 2.
Queen's Bench. Commissions, 1.
Thierry v. Fermoy, 1.

BAVARIA.

Divorce Court. Commission, 2.
Edwardes, Mr., 2.
Fees. Legal. Recovery of, 2.
Stenb, Dr., 2.

BORNEO.

Brunei. Claim of Sultan, 3.
Labuan Coal Company, 3.

BRAZIL.

Davidson, A., 3.
Property. Administration to British, 3.
Protection of children of British subjects born in Brazil, 5.
Reeves, Mr., 4, 5.
Renny, J., 4, 5.

CHILE.

Blockade. Ports of Chile by Spain, 6.
" Not recognized as effective by publication of notice in "Gazette," 6.
" What is required to render effective, 6.
" Mail-steamers, 6.
" Neutral vessels of war, 6.
" Notice in "London Gazette," 6.
" Adequacy of force cognizable by Prize Courts, 8.
" What renders it insufficient, 9.
" Interference of neutral ships of war, 9.
" Questions arising out of, to be settled by Prize Courts, 11.
" Arrangements made between a neutral and a belligerent, 12.
"Eagle," 11.
"Mattias Cousino," 10.
Myers, Bland, and Co., 11.
Pareja, Admiral, 12.
Privateers. Treatment as pirates, 6.
" Fitting out in British ports, 7, 11.
Prize Courts. Establishment of, on board a belligerent vessel, 10.
Spain. Protection of subjects in Chile by Great Britain, 10.
Vessels. Sale to a neutral by a belligerent owner, 10.

CHINA.

Baynton, J. C., 13.
Belfiori, 17.
Consuls. Interference in favour of foreigners found guilty by Chinese authorities, 17.
Criminals. Power of Governor of Hong Kong, &c., to pardon, 18, 22.
" Chinese. Rendition, 20, 23, 24.
"Elfin," 19.
Enscoe, P. D., 15.
Extradition Treaty. Revision, 20.
Filleul, Mrs., 23.
"Forerunner," 15.
Great Britain. Subjects. Trial when charged by Chinese authorities, 14.
" " Trial at Ningpo, 18.
" " Murder of. Cannot claim compensation of Chinese Government, 23.
Hankow. Land-renters in British quarters, 16.
Hong Kong. British subjects who escape to, when accused of crimes. Trial, 18.
" Governor. Power to pardon criminals, 18, 22.
Ho-yu-teen, 24.
Insurgents. Regulations for preventing passengers on board British ships joining, 16.
Judicial Court. Order in Council establishing, 15.
Kelung. Clandestine landing of opium, 15.
Land-renters at Han-kow, 16.
"Madge," 15.
"Mercury," 13, 14.
Merchant Shipping Act. Punishment of crimes under, 15.
Opium. Clandestine landing of, 15.
Order in Council. Judicial Court, 15.
Pirates. Assistance to Chinese authorities, 19.
" Extradition, 20, 24.
Rice, Dr., 14.
Swinhoe. Vice-Consul, 19.
Torture, 20.
Tien-tsin. Treaty of. Violation, 13.

COLUMBIA.

Foreigners. Law of Congress defining condition, rights, and obligations, 25.
Great Britain. Protection of children of foreigners born in England, 26.
Montoya, M., 26.
Protection of children of foreigners born in England, 26.
Tax on industrial pursuits. Liability of British subjects, 25.

COSTA RICA.

Costa Rica and Guatemala. Prohibition of commercial intercourse, 26.

DENMARK.

Capture. Claim on account of neutral property, 27.
"Estella," 28.
"Margaretha," 27.
Prize Courts. Costs and damages, 28.
Stratton, A. W., 28, 29, 30.
Treaty of Vienna. Non-application to neutrals, 29.
Walters and Bubb, 27.
Willis and Co., 27, 29.

EQUATOR.

Vessel. British merchant. Liability to seizure of political refugees, 31.

FRANCE.

Birch. Vice-Consul, 37, 38.
Blockade. Ineffective, 38.
"Blue Jacket," 38, 39.
Campeachy. Blockade, 38.
Consul, Vice. Defalcations, 37, 38.
"Dix Décembre," 41.

1865

Dulac, 33.
Expertise. Question of, 37.
Extradition Treaty. Colonial criminals, 33.
„ Seamen. Ship of war, 42.
Fishing-boat. Seizure of French at Penzance, 40.
Guiana. British. French criminals. Colonial Ordinance, 41.
Hermann, F. W., 35.
"L'Amaranthe," 34, 36.
Legrand, V., 36.
Lewis and Cutts, 36.
Linden, Mr., 31.
Marriage Act. Application when the Consul is the principal, 40.
Mexico. National Bank. Export of silver, 34.
"Murillo," 41.
Nieman, F., 35.
Prosecution by British subjects abroad. Official assistance, 35.
Risk Allah, 31.
Seamen deserters. Ships of war, 34, 36.
Singapore. Murder by French seamen, 42.
Slave Trade. Piracy, 32.
Stubs, Mr., 35.
Trade marks. Counterfeiting of, 35.
Treaty. Commercial. Decision of French Law Courts contrary to spirit of, 35.
Vessel. Foreign. Sinking off British coast by another foreign vessel, 41.

FRANKFORT.

Baldock, Mrs., 43, 44.
Jew. Marriage at British Legation, 43.
Marriage of a Jew at British Legation, 43.

GENERAL.

Buckingham and Granville State Papers. Sale, 46.
Colonies. Naturalized foreigners. Protection, 44.
"Conchita," 46.
"Fabiana," 46.
"Mosca," 46.
Mixed Commission Court. Sierra Leone. Death of Judge. Queen's Advocate to act, 45.
Naturalization. Foreigners in British Colonies. Protection, 44.
Pacific Islands. Grant of Crown leases, 45.
"Rosarita," 46.
Sierra Leone. Death of Judge of Mixed Commission Court, 45.
Skelton, Mr., 45.
State Papers. Right to sell, 46.

GERMANY.

Schleswig-Holstein. Transit duties, 47.

GREECE.

Boyd, Mr., 51.
Draculi, E., 50, 57.
Ingate, Mrs., 55.
Ionian subjects. Sentences passed on, by British Consular Courts previous to 2nd June, 1864, 49, 51, 52, 55, 57.
Pensions (Ionian). Suspension, 50, 57.
„ „ Payment of, irrespective of employment under British Government, 51.
Rodocanachi v. Verissi, 55.
Thebes. Claim of Turkish subjects to land near, 54.
Tribunals. Failure in administration of justice, 55.

HAYTI.

Blockade Not necessary to make public, notification of raising of, 66.
Consul. Right to grant refuge to political refugees, 59.
Jamaica. Haytian refugees. Deputation, 59.
Privateers. Privileges granted to United States, 58.
Refugees. Political. Right of Consul to grant refuge to, 59.
Treaty with United States. Privileges to privateers, 58.
United States. Treaty. Privileges granted to privateers, 58.

ITALY.

Apulian Railway, 62, 65.
Attardi, F. 68.
Claims of British subjects. Support, 61, 62, 65.
Conder, Mr., 62, 65.
Consul. Protection by, at Rome, of British subjects ordered to quit by local authorities, 66.
Foreigners. Residence at Gibraltar, 67.
Gibraltar. Residence of foreigners, 67.
Great Britain. Subjects. Protection of children born abroad, 60, 67.
„ „ Support of claims, 61, 62, 65.
Hambro, Messrs., 61.
Maffei, Count, 67.
Military service. Exemption of children born of British subjects in foreign countries, 60, 67.
Protection of children of British subjects born in Italy, 60, 67.
Rome. British subjects ordered to quit, 66.
Railways, State. Sale of. Claim, 61.
Severn. Consul, 66.
Sofio, R. E., 60.
Woodhouse, Messrs., 68.

JAPAN.

Arms. Illicit trade in, by British subjects, 69.
Choshiu. Prince of, 69.
Civil war. Punishment of, British subjects for joining in, 71, 72.
Great Britain. Subjects. Illicit trade in arms, 69.
„ „ Punishment of, for joining Prince of Choshiu, 71, 72.
Jurisdiction over subjects of Powers not having Treaties with Japan, 70.
Municipal Councils in China and Japan, 71.
„ Council at Yokohama, 72.
Slaughter-houses, 69, 73.
Winchester, Mr., 70.
Yokohama. Slaughter-houses, 69, 73.
„ Municipal Council, 73.

MADAGASCAR.

Treaty with Great Britain. Proposed modification in, 74, 75.

MEXICO.

Blockade. Seizure of a vessel by French squadron, 79, 82, 84.
„ Responsibility of Mexican Government for seizure by French squadron, 82.
Carmichael, Mr., 83.
Claims of British subjects, 81.
Claims. Convention. Approving draft, 77.
Compensation. Claims to, on account of robbery, 83.
Crowther, B., 81.
Customs Laws. Seizure for violation of, 78.
Decrees declaring Mexican subjects the illegitimate children of foreigners, 79.
Foreigners. Liability to serve in corps formed for protection against robberies, 78.
„ Holding land in Mexico declared Mexican subjects, 79.
„ Illegitimate children declared Mexican subjects, 79.
Friend, Mr. R., 80.
Great Britain. Subjects. Exemption from service in National Guard, 80.
„ „ Right to British protection in Mexico, notwithstanding service in Confederate States, 81.
Hosking, M., 76.
Manning and Mackintosh, Messrs., 81.
Marriage of British subjects. Caveat against. Duty of Consul, 76.
„ „ Ambassador or Minister has no power to interfere, 76.
"Nancy Dawson," 78.

National Guard. Exemption of British subjects from service in, 80.
„ Payment of tax for exemption, 80.
Naturalization. A foreigner naturalized in England not entitled to protection in land of birth, 83.
Oldenburgh, Mr., 79, 82, 84.
Protection. Mexican naturalized British subject, 83.
Robbery. Compensation claimed by British subjects for, 83.
Rule, F., 76.
Savinon, M., 83.
"Schwan," 79, 82, 84.
Suzdaltseff and Sullivan, Messrs., 77.
Tax on British subjects for exemption from National Guard, 80.
Treaty. Claims of British subjects. Approving draft, 77.
„ „ „ Amendments, 84.
Tribunals. Complaint at delay in administration of justice, 77.

MONTE VIDEO.

Belligerents. Improper use of flags by, 86.
Blockade. Paisandu and Salto, 85.
„ To be respected when effective, 85.
„ Notice in "Gazette," 86.
Claims. Rights of representation, 85.
Flag. Improper use of, by belligerents, 86.
Monte Video. Blockade. Notice in "Gazette," 86.
Neutral vessels. Protection against improper use of flag by belligerents, 86.
Paisandu. Blockade, 85.
Salto. Blockade, 85.

MOROCCO.

Nahon, Mr., 87.
Property. Claim on account of loss during war, 87, 88.
Samuel, J., 88.

MUSCAT.

Foreign Jurisdiction Act. Extension to Zanzibar, 88.

NETHERLANDS.

Treaty of Commerce. Observations on new, 89.

NEW GRANADA.

Langton and Longrigg, Messrs., 89.

NICARAGUA.

Mosquito Reserve. Duties on residents, 91.
Timber. Cutting of. Interference of Mosquito Indians, 90.
Vaughan, Messrs., 90.

PARAGUAY.

Parana. Passage of Brazilian squadron, 92.

PERSIA.

Great Britain. Subject. Claim on account of interference with trade, 92, 94, 95.
Indian subjects. Trial for murder, 93.
Mohamed Ali, 93.
Ralli, Mr., 92, 94, 95.

PERU.

Duties paid to insurgents by foreigners. Repayment of, 96.
Great Britain. Subjects. Not entitled to protection whilst serving with insurgents, 97.
Islay. Closing of port, 97.
Ports. Closing of, 97.
Protection of British subjects. Not entitled to whilst serving with insurgents, 97.
Quilca. Closing of port, 97.
"Union," 97.
Vessel. Iron-clad fitting out in Great Britain. Detention, 96.

PORTUGAL.

Bulama. Island of. British claim to, 99.
Executors. Payment of salary of a deceased civil servant, 98.
Thornton, R., 98.
Zambesi expedition. Payment of salary of geologist, 98.

PRUSSIA.

Alisch and Co., 104.
Australia. Wine duties, 102.
Canada. Wine duties, 102.
Claims of Prussian Government on account of loss of a British vessel, 101.
Criminal laws of England and Prussia, 103.
Extradition Convention. Modification, 101, 102.
"Falk," 104.
Flag. Temporary, of Schleswig and Holstein. Acknowledged by Great Britain, 101.
Hong Kong. Admiralty Court. Right to adjudicate in case of the "Falk," 104.
Marriage of a British Christian subject to a foreign Jewish. Consul bound to marry without consideration of religion, 105.
Marriages by Consul. Not bound to celebrate should it subject him to pains and penalties, 105.
"Queen," 101.
Passports. Grant to foreigners born in a British Colony, 105.
Renkewitz, M., 105.
Schleswig and Holstein. Acknowledgment of temporary flag, 101.
Treaty of Commerce. Zollverein, 102.
Wine duties. Canada and Australia, 102.
Zollverein. New Treaty of Commerce, 102.

RIVER PLATE.

Arbitration. Case of "Cestus," 107.
Bareiro, M. C., 108.
Blockade of Paraguay, 108.
Blockade. Reservation in favour of Treaty rights, 109.
"Caledonia," 107, 108.
"Cestus," 107.
Contraband of war. "Gazette" notification, 106.
"Gazette" notification. Contraband of war, 106.
„ „ Blockade of Paraguay, 108.
Intestate estates. Law issued by Argentine Congress, 109.
Justo, M. P., 107, 108.
Monte Video. Claim of Company of householders, 110.
Parana. Navigation by Brazilian squadron during hostilities, 108.
Property. Destruction during hostilities, 107, 108.
River Navigation. Bearing of Treaty stipulations during hostilities, 106, 108.
Thornton, Mr., 107.
Treaty rights. Reservation in favour of, during blockade, 109.
Treaty stipulations. Bearing on river navigation during hostilities, 106, 108.
War. Contraband of. "Gazette" notification, 106.

RUSSIA.

Condiff, Mr. 113.
Douglas, Mr., 113.
Evidence. No power to compel British subjects to give, 113.
Great Britain. Status of Russian subjects, 112.
Law of naturalization. Revision, 112.
Middleton, Captain, 111, 112, 113.
Naturalization of foreigners. New law. Revision, 112.
Nelson, Captain, 111, 113.
Property. Complaint of Russian Government at decision of British tribunal, 114, 116.
Russian subjects. Status when carrying on trade in Great Britain, 112.
Sherwood, Captain, 112, 113.
Wylie, Sir J., 114, 116.

SALVADOR.

Kerford, J., 117.
Loan. On security of duties. Breach of faith by changing law securing duties, 117.

1865

SAXONY.

Nationality of children of foreign parents when born on board a British vessel, 117.
Naturalized British subjects. Protection of children, 117.
Protection of children of naturalized British subjects, 117.

SIAM.

Burn, Captain, 18.
Consular Courts. Foreign plaintiffs must submit to procedure in, 118.
Johnstone, Mr., 118.
Mong Shuay Gan v. Chief of Chiengmai, 118.

SPAIN.

"America," 122, 132.
Blockade. San Domingo. Seizure of British vessel, 125, 126.
  „ Of Chilean ports. "Gazette" notice, 139.
  „ Privileges in favour of mail-packets, 139.
"Candida," 121.
Capture. Grant of Consular certificates for protection of vessels against, 142.
Ceuta. Sinking of British vessel by guns at, 119, 127.
Chile and Spain. Hostilities, 128.
Compensation for death of a British subject, killed during hostilities, 125.
  „ for seizure of a British vessel, 126.
Consul. Grant of certificates to protect vessels from capture, 142.
Crimes committed on the high seas, 128.
"Dart," 126.
"Eagle," 130, 138.
"Eliza," 126.
"Evelyn," 128.
Gibraltar. Bishop of. Limits of jurisdiction, 121.
  „ „ Term "jurisdiction," 124.
  „ „ Cannot enforce jurisdiction, 124.
Good, G., 125.
Great Britain. Subject. Refusal to surrender for crime committed on the high seas, 128.
  „ Vessels fitting out for service of Chile. Cannot call upon owners for information, 130.
  „ Vessels fitting out for service of Chile. Demand of Spanish Minister for detention, 131, 137, 138.
"I. O. U.," 125.
Leigh, J. S., 121.
Mail-packets. Privileges granted during blockade, 139.
"Mattias Cousino," 130.
"Mermaid," 119, 127.
"Mountaineer," 127.
Neutral. Right to demand trial before properly constituted Prize Court, 130.
Neutral vessels. Treatment of by Spanish cruizers, 128
Privateers. Treatment as pirates, 128, 131, 135, 138, 140.
Prize Court. Right of Great Britain to demand establishment of by Spain, 128.
  „ Contrary to international law to establish on board Admiral's ship, 130, 138.
San Domingo. Blockade. Seizure of British vessel, 125, 126.
"Scat," 126.
Sierra Leone. Condemnation of Spanish vessels for Slave Trade, 122, 132.
Slave Trade. Condemnation of a Spanish vessel. Claim of Spanish Government, 122, 132.
Tarifa Shots, 119, 127.

SWEDEN.

Chancery. Court of. Consul not called upon to certify to character of jurisdiction, 142.

SWITZERLAND.

European Central Railway Company. Right to British protection, 144.
Flag. Recognition of, on the high seas, 143.
Protection. Right of an English Railway Company abroad to, 144.

TRIPOLI.

Bacquerie, M. de, 144.
Consul, British. Complaint against, 144.
Reade, Consul, 144.

TUNIS.

Bankrupt property. British. Disposal of, 145.
Children of a British subject who had embraced the Mahomedan religion. Disposal of, 146.
Murder at Tunis. Acquittal of an Italian accused, 145.
Schembri, M., 145.
Smythe, Mr., 145.

TURKEY.

Buckley, N., 153.
Cavan, Lubbock, and Co., 157.
Condopoulo, M., 158.
Damages. Recovery in this country when adjudged in Turkey, 154.
Danube Commission. Procedure for judging crimes against Regulations of, 152.
Deserters. Foreign ships of war. Surrender of, 155.
  „ Ships of war. Non-application of Act 15 & 16 Vict., cap. 26, 165.
Egypt. Slave Trade, 153.
  „ Consular jurisdiction, 154.
Foreign Jurisdiction Act. Term "British Colony," 157.
Foreigners. Treatment in Principalities, 149.
  „ Surrender to Consuls in Principalities after conviction, 156.
Gout, J., 157.
Hippodimatopulo, 147.
Iradé. Imperial. Assistance to obtain, 157.
Jurisdiction. Consular. Ottoman v. a British subject, 147, 149.
  „ „ Principalities, 150.
  „ „ Egypt, 154.
  „ Act. Foreign. Term "British Colony," 157.
Law. Press, 150.
Mattos, M. de, 156.
Micrulachi, D., 146.
Press. New Law, 150.
Principalities. Ancient Treaties not abrogated, 150, 156.
  „ Consular jurisdiction, 150.
  „ Joint remonstrances of European Powers regarding Treaties, 158.
  „ Patent-tax, 148.
  „ Sale of timber to foreigners, 158.
  „ Treatment of foreigners, 149.
Protection. Agents of British firms, 146.
Slave Trade. Soudan, 153.
Soudan. Slave Trade, 153.
"Stella," 154.
Tax. Patent. Principalities, 148.
Thebes. Claim to land, 152.
Toultcha. Claim on British Vice-Consul, 158.
Treaties. Ancient. Not abrogated in Principalities, 150, 156.
Tripoli. Consular jurisdiction. Ottoman v. a British subject, 147.
"Weser," 158.

UNITED STATES.

Abduction of J. Townsend, 233.
Acts of Congress. Captured and abandoned property. Opinion of United States' Attorney-General, 236.
Aitkin, Rodger, and Co., 232.
"Ajax," 170.
"Alabama," 223.

"Alabama." Privateer, 233, 252, 259.
"Albert Edward," 223.
"Alexandra," 161, 164, 187, 230, 249.
Aliens. Loss of property during civil war. Compensation, 165, 205, 210, 212, 225, 225, 238.
  „ Liable to jurisdiction of United States by domicile and contract with Government, 180, 248.
"Anne Sophia," 223.
"Annie," 245.
Arms. Shipment at Nassau for the Havana, 215.
Army. Improper enlistment of British subjects, 166, 175, 176.
  „ Enrolment Act (1865), 194.
  „ Non-exemption of resident British subjects, 198.

Bahamas. Treatment of vessels suspected to be for service of Confederate States, 212.
  „ Governor cannot prevent shipment of guns for the Havana, 215.
Banks. Closing of, at New Orleans, 201.
Barclay, A., 225.
"Bella," 223.
Belligerents. Use of neutral waters by, 200.
Benson, T. W., 180.
"Ben Willis," 223.
Bernheimer, Messrs., 227.
Blackburn, Dr., 226.
Blockade. Southern ports. Effect of United States' Regulations for trade with, 165, 181, 220.
  „ Foreigners who have violated, ordered to quit United States, 196, 210.
  „ Breaches of. Decisions of Prize Court at New Orleans, 223.
Blockade-runners. Capture of British subjects on board, 189, 190.
Boston. Passport Regulations, 211.
Bowden, Mr., 177.
Brain, Mr., 217.
Brett, E., 243.
Burley, W., 177, 184, 202, 218.

Canada. Threatened raid of Fenians, 252.
  „ Neutrality laws. Grant of extraordinary powers to Governor-General, 159.
  „ St. Albans raiders, 159, 163, 166, 170, 171, 182, 185, 193, 207.
  „ Act of Legislature for repression of outrages on frontier against United States' territory, 179.
  „ Conspiracy to levy war against United States, 220.
  „ „ to send infected clothing to United States, 226.
"Carrie Mair," 198.
"Chameleon," 182, 189, 197.
Charleston. British Consulate. Destruction of property, 224, 240.
Chase, Chief Justice, 204.
"Chesapeake," 186, 202, 217, 228, 234.
"City of Richmond," 167, 200, 201, 243.
Civil war. Termination. Letter to Public Departments, 216.
Claims. Court of, 235.
Clay, C. C., 193.
"Clyde," 227.
Columbia River. Navigation, 229.
Commission of claims. Payment of Expenses, 174.
"Confederate States," 191. See "Laurel."
Confederate States. Refusal to detain vessels supposed to be fitting out for, 170, 176.
  „ Use of British territory to fit out expedition against United States. See "St. Alban's raiders."
  „ Proceedings of Agents in England. Answer to Mr. Adams, 174.
  „ Application for non-recognition of belligerent rights by Great Britain, 192.
Confederate States. Vessels for. Treatment as enemies of all persons equipping, 195.
  „ Vessels for. Enlistment of British subjects, 199.
  „ Agents in England. Legal proceedings against, 252.
  „ Threatened capture by United States of vessels sold to British subjects by citizens of, 261.
  „ Prosecution of persons supplying arms, &c., to vessels of, 200.
  „ Complaint of United States' Government at recognition as belligerents, 201, 209.
  „ Vessels of war. Policy on termination of hostilities, 208, 235.
  „ As to notice of United States' Government of termination of hostilities, 208.
  „ Terms of capitulation of General Lee, 209.
  „ Treatment of vessels at Bahamas suspected to be for service of, 212.
  „ Right of United States to public property of, on termination of war, 216, 234, 243, 246.
  „ Cruizers. Proclamation issued by President of United States, 214.
  „ Joint declaration of English and French Goverments on subject of belligerent rights, 215.
  „ Termination of civil war. Letter to Public Departments, 216, 226, 246.
  „ Vessels of. Claim of United States' Government to, 216, 234, 243.
  „ Proclamation of President of United States, opening ports to foreign trade, 220.
  „ Treatment as pirates of persons trading with, 220.
  „ Detention of vessels supposed to be for service of, 221.
  „ Prize schooner. Grant of supplies after conclusion of civil war, 231.
  „ Surrender of vessels to United States' authorities on termination of civil war, 216, 234, 243, 246.
  „ Treatment as pirates of vessels making captures after termination of hostilities, 255.
Congress. Acts of. Captured and abandoned property, 236.
Consulate. Protection by flag, 224, 240.
"Cora," 223.
"Cora Smyser," 223.
Correa de Serra, M., 258.
Cotton. Captured British at Savannah, 175, 179, 197, 204, 213, 227.
  „ Of British subjects. Destruction during civil war, 232.
Criminals. Complaint of United States' Government at criminals being sent from Newfoundland, 240.
Crutchett, Mr., 248, 259.
Custom-houses fees. Act of Congress, 207.
"Cuzio," 172.

Daly, Judge, 227.
"Dashing Wave," 219, 237.
"Deerhound," 252.
Deserters. Seamen. Refusal of United States to surrender. Ship of war, 172.
  „ „ Ship of war. Seizure of, 237.
Domicile. Aliens liable to jurisdiction by, 180, 248.

"Ella," 245.
"El Almandaris," 221.
Enrolment Act, 194.
"Etta" or "Retribution," 194, 222.

1865

Extradition. St. Albans raiders, 159, 163, 166, 170, 171, 182, 185, 193, 207.
" Refusal of United States' Government to grant, 166.
" A criminal having been surrendered for robbery, should not be tried for piracy, 177, 202.
" Of a British subject for forcible seizure of a merchant-vessel, 184, 186.
" Of persons concerned in seizure of the "Chesapeake," 186.
" Cannot be granted for piratical acts committed on high seas, 186, 202, 217, 248.
" Practice of United States, 188.
" Of criminals undergoing a sentence in Great Britain, 202.
" Bailable offences, 207.
" Murderers of President Lincoln, 208.
" Preliminary warrant, 217.
" Illegal abduction of J. Townsend from Great Britain, 233.
" Violation of principles of Treaty, 233.

Fees. Custom-house. Act of Congress, 207.
Fenians. Threatened raid into Canada, 252.
Foden, W., 198.
"Flash," 223.
Foreign Enlistment Act. Great Britain. Trial for offences against, 161, 246, 252.
" " What is necessary to constitute a breach of, 161, 252.
" " A vessel liable to forfeiture for breach of, when found within British dominions, 161.
" " Non-violation of, by equipment beyond British jurisdiction, 252.
" " Does not enable the British Government to detain an unarmed vessel on suspicion of violation of, 252.
" " Cannot prosecute under, if violation occurs beyond British jurisdiction, 252.
Foreigners. Ordered to quit United States for violation of blockade, 196, 210, 219.
" Treatment as enemies after termination of hostilities, 196, 210, 219.
" Residing at Charleston. Oath enacted of, 211.
France. Joint declaration with Great Britain on termination of civil war, 215.

Great Britain. Withdrawal of restrictions regarding entry of belligerent vessel of war, 205.
" Letter to Public Departments on termination of civil war in United States, 216.
" Treatment of Confederate cruizers on termination of civil war, 226.
" Answer to complaints and claims of the United States arising out of policy adopted during civil war by, 245, 258, 259.
Gregory and Rowcliffe, Messrs., 173.
Grenfell, Colonel, 221.

Hamilton, F. D., 199.
"Hanover," 194.
"Hawk," 167.
Heslop, Mr., 165, 225.
Hill, Miss, 186.
"Honduras," 192.
Hong Kong. Neutrality Ordinance. Five miles limits, 160.
Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Commission. Payment of expenses, 174.
Hudson's Bay Company. Negotiations respecting navigation of Columbia River, 229.
Hutton, Mr., 239.

"Iroquois," 172.

Jefferson, Mr. Principles of neutrality adopted by, in 1797, 258.
"Jenny," 257.
"John A. Hazard," 245.
Jones, E., 238.
"Joseph Gerrity," 202, 217, 248.
"Julia," 223.
Jurisdiction. Maritime. Five-mile limits, 160.
" Of United States. Aliens liable by domicile and contract with Government, 180.

Kain, T., 166, 188.
"Kate Gregg," 259, 261.

Lafone, M., 164.
Lafone, H., 175.
Lakes. Naval forces on North American, 229.
"Laurel," 191.
Laurie and Co., 210.
Lee, General, 209.
Letters of marque. Mexico, 222.
Lincoln, President. Murder of, 208.
Locke, V., 194, 202.
"Lone," 223.
"Lote Hurley," 245.
"Louisa," 188.

"Madeira," 227.
Mail-bags. Embarkation on board a vessel which had been employed by a belligerent, 191.
"Margaret and Jessie," 231.
"Maria," 242.
Maritime limits. Extension of, 231, 241.
"Mary." See "Alexandra."
"Mary Ellen," 223.
"Matilda," 223.
Menlove, Mr., 201.
Mexico. Letters of marque issued by President Juarez, 222.
Mobile. Destruction of British property by explosion of powder magazine, 238.
" Neutral property captured at, 224.
Molyneux, Mrs., 224, 240.
"Morris," 223.

Naturalization. No legal steps required for a British subject to reassume his nationality, 239.
Neutral property. Destruction during hostilities. Compensation, 165, 205, 210, 212, 224, 225, 232, 235, 238, 259.
" Captured in an enemy's town, 175, 179, 197, 204, 205, 213, 224, 227.
Neutral territory. Use of, by belligerents, 168, 179, 193.
" Sale of a vessel of war by a belligerent to a, 182, 197, 222.
" Subjects. Communications made by to belligerents, 186.
" waters. Use of, by belligerents, 200.
" " Definition of by Governor Rawson, 200.
Neutrality laws. Canada. Grant of extraordinary powers to Governor-General, 159, 179.
" Breach of. See also "Foreign Enlistment Act."
" Delay in sale of a vessel seized for breach of, 187.
" Supply of arms, &c., to Confederate vessels. Prosecution for, 200.
" Non-violation of, by admission of the "Shenandoah" into British ports, 252.
Neutrals. Vessels sold by belligerents to. Threatened capture, 261.
Newfoundland. Complaint of convicts being sent to United States, 240.
New Orleans. Closing of banks, 201.

Nicol, Mr., 172.
"Night Hawk," 190.
Noonan, C., 202, 218, 227.

Oath enacted of foreigners residing at Charleston, 211.
Oath. Illegal administered to Mr. Reading, 261.
O'Connor, V., 205, 212.

Passport Regulations at Boston, 211.
"Pet," 223.
"Peterhoff," 177.
"Pinero," 221.
Piracy. Case of the "Shenandoah," 255.
Piracy on high seas. Extradition Treaty, 186, 202, 217.
Pirates. Treatment as, of persons trading with Confederate States, 220.
Pirate. Case of the "Shenandoah," 239.
Pratt, E. W., 195, 219.
Prize Court at New Orleans. Decision regarding captured British vessels, 223.
Property of domiciled British subjects. Compensation for loss during civil war, 165, 205, 210, 212, 225, 235, 238, 259.
Property. Neutral. Captured in an enemy's town, 175, 179, 197, 204, 205, 213, 224, 227.
" Captured and abandoned. Acts of Congress, 236.
" Neutral. Captured in an enemy's town. See Neutral Property.
Protection. British subjects entering a foreign service contrary to Proclamation, 183.
" Property of British subjects at New Orleans, 202, 218, 227.
" Of British subjects who have become citizens of another State, 202, 218, 227.
" A British subject reassuming his nationality, 239.

"Rappahannock," 228.
"Rattlesnake," 189.
Rawson, Governor, 200.
Rawson, Mr., 168.
Reading, F. R., 261.
"Retribution," 194, 222.
"Retribution." See "Etta."
Richmond. Tobacco belonging to British subjects, 205, 210, 212.
Rio Grande. British vessels seized, 219, 237, 257.
" " Cost of appeal, 237, 257.
Roach, Mr., 227.
"Roanoke," 217, 234.

"St. Mary," 217, 231. 236, 237.
"San Jacinto," 200.
St. Alban's raiders, 159, 163, 166, 170, 171, 182, 185, 193, 207.
Savannah. Captured British cotton, 175, 179, 197, 204, 213, 227.
Saville, T. 189.
"Scylla," 199.
"Science," 257.
"Sea King," 173, 191, 252.
Seamen deserters. See "Deserters."
"Sea Witch," 245.
Seely, Lieutenant, 228.
Sewell, E. E., 166, 191.
"Shenandoah," 199, 201, 235, 239, 246, 248, 250, 251, 252, 255, 256, 257, 259.
"Sir W. Peel," 257.
Slattery, Mr., 177.
Smith, R., 183.
"Stonewall Jackson," 195, 200, 201.
"Tellahassee," 182, 189, 197.
Thompson, J., 220.
Tobacco belonging to British subjects at Richmond, 205, 210, 212.
Townsend, J., 233.
Trenholme, Fraser, and Co. United States v., 243.
"Tuscaloosa," 234.

United States. Purchase of steam launches for, 161, 164.

Vessel. Forcible seizure by crew, and condemnation as a prize, 230, 234.
" Neutral, sold to a belligerent. British register, 259.
" Unprovided with papers, liable to seizure, 242.
" Derelict within British jurisdiction. Title to, 236.
" Captured. Sale previous to condemnation, 219.
Vessel of war. Sale by a belligerent to a neutral, liability to capture, 182, 197, 222.
" Serving of warrants on board foreign, 199.
" Privileges during war when conveying mails and passengers, 213.
" Sinking of a British vessel by a United States', 227.
" Seizure of deserters from, 237.
"Victor." See "Rappahannock."

"Wando," 245.
Warrants. Serving of, on board foreign ships of war, 199.
Westbrook, R. A., 175, 176.
Wood, Vice-Chancellor, 243.
"Wren," 230, 234, 243, 258.

Young, Lieutenant, 207.

VENEZUELA.

"Albion," 263, 266.
Andreal and Spink, 265, 266.
Blockade of Guayana. Raising of. Publication of notification in "Gazette," 263.
Bondholders. British Government not called upon to interfere further, 269.
Chitty, Mr., 265, 269.
Civil war. Employment of British vessels, 263.
Claims of British subjects. Interference in favour of, 263, 264, 265, 268, 269.
" " Adoption of Report of Mr. Edwards, 271.
" " Domiciled and owners of landed property, 265.
" " Slave property, 265.
" " Evidence to be obtained of claimants being British subjects, 267.
" " Fraudulent, 271.
" " Payment of 6 per cent., 271.
Daly, B., 264.
Decree. Nationality of persons born in Venezuela, 270.
Leech and Co., 263.
Michelsen, Mr., 268.
Nationality of persons born in Venezuela. Decree, 270.
Schloss and Co., 268.
"Serafina," 270.
Slave property of British subjects. British Government should not interfere in favour of, 265, 269.
Syers, Graf, Nocke, Myer, and Co., 265.
Vessels. British employed during civil war. Claim, 263, 266.

A. S. GREEN.

Foreign Office,
March 13, 1867.

LIST OF REPORTS.

Arranged according to Countries.

AUSTRIA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
1	Jan. 24, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Thierry v. Fermoy. Refusal of Provincial Tribunal of Vienna to give effect to a Commission issued by the Court of Queen's Bench, for the examination of witnesses. Right of foreign tribunals to decide what evidence they will consider admissible in their own Courts. Reciprocity granted by British tribunals under Act 19 and 20 Vict., cap. 113. Assistance to be rendered by Her Majesty's Representative at Vienna. Application to be founded upon principles of comity and not of strict right	1
2	Nov. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Marriage of a British subject in Austria, according to the rites of the local Protestant communities. Such marriage cannot be officially registered in England	2

BAVARIA.

3	Jan. 27,	Queen's Advocate	Measures to be adopted to obtain payment of a fee due to Dr. Stenb, for legal assistance rendered to Mr. Edwardes, an English solicitor, bearer of a commission from the English Divorce Court to Her Majesty's Legation at Munich	2

BORNEO.

4	Aug. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Labuan Coal Company. Claim of Sultan of Brunei for rent on account of mines at Moarra. Approving instructions to Consul at Brunei	3

BRAZIL.

5	Jan. 10,	Queen's Advocate	Request of Sir A. Reid for assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain settlement of the affairs of the late Mr. A. Davidson, who died in Scotland, leaving real and personal property in the Brazils. Sir A. Reid, as executor, must adopt course which would be legally necessary in the Brazils	3
6	13,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Reeves to estate of Mr. J. Renny. Scandalous injustice of Brazilian courts of law. Assistance to be rendered by British Consul at Rio	4
7	May 16,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Reeves. Approving Memorandum presented by British Consul at Rio to Brazilian Government	4
8	Nov. 16,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Reeves. Assistance should be rendered to Mr. Reeves by Her Majesty's Minister	5
9	Dec. 16,	Law Officers	Opinion as to whether a person born of British subjects in Brazil, and quitting that country when young, would, on his return, be treated as a subject of Brazil, and therefore not entitled to British protection. Would be entitled to British protection should law of Brazil not be similar to that of Great Britain, which claims the allegiance of all persons born within the realm	5

1865

CHILE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
10	Nov. 17, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of ports of Chile by Spain. Sufficiency of notification. Publication of blockade in "Gazette" is not a recognition of its being effective. What is required to render a blockade effective. Threat of Spanish Admiral to treat Chilean privateers as pirates. Treatment of mail-steamers. Neutral vessels of war to be allowed to enter blockaded ports. Notice for "London Gazette"	6
11	18,	Law Officers ..	Equipment of Chilean privateers in British ports. Complaint of Spanish Minister. Legal evidence required . ..	7
12	27,	Law Officers ..	Chilean privateers supposed to be fitting out at Glasgow and Liverpool. Measures to be adopted by Her Majesty's Government	7
13	30,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Chilean coast. Question as to adequacy of force enforcing blockade is cognizable by Prize Courts ..	8
14	Dec. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Chilean coasts. What renders a blockade insufficient?	9
15	..	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Chilean coasts. British ships of war cannot interfere in favour of British vessels captured for attempting to enter a blockaded port	9
16	16,	Queen's Advocate	British protection of Spanish subjects in Chile. Violation of international law and Treaty stipulations by the Government of Chile. Opinion as to neutral Powers adopting coercive measures for protection of subjects of Spain	10
17	16,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mattias Cousino." Sale to a neutral of a vessel belonging to a belligerent owner. Necessity of establishing in a Prize Court the bonâ fide sale. Approving refusal to recognize the Spanish Admiral's ship as a legitimate Prize Court	10
18	16,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Eagle." Insufficiency of evidence to prove that she is being fitted as a Chilean privateer	11
19	16,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Myers, Bland and Co. All questions arising out of blockade should be discussed in a properly constituted Prize Court	11
20	16,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Chilean ports. Approving arrangements made between Commodore Harvey and Admiral Pareja. Condition under which list of blockaded ports should be accepted	12
21	19,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of Chilean ports. Approving arrangements with Spanish Admiral	12

CHINA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
22	Mar. 17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mercury," J. C. Baynton, Master. Subject to confiscation for having entered ports forbidden by the Treaty of Tien-tsin	13
23	Apr. 25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Mercury." No further instructions required to be sent	14
24	May 8,	Law Officers ..	Case of Dr. Rice. Opinion that he should have been tried for murder, as charged by Chinese authorities	14
25	11,	Law Officers ..	Approving proposed instructions to British Authorities in China, on transmitting Order in Council of March 9, relating to establishment of Judicial Court	15
26	June 20,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. R. D. Enscoe, the master of the "Madge." Clandestine landing of opium at port of Kelung. Rules 2 and 3 are applicable to port of Kelung	15
27	June 20, 1865	Law Officers ..	Case of the seamen of the "Forerunner." Punishment of crimes under the "Merchant Shipping Act," and provision of Order in Council of June 13, 1853, granting jurisdiction to Consuls in China	15
28	21,	Law Officers ..	Proposed regulations at the port of Foo-chow, for preventing passengers arriving in British ships joining the insurgents .	16
29	July 11,	Law Officers ..	Land-renters in British quarters at Hankow. Expediency of relaxing existing rules affecting the tenure of land. Transfer to foreigners. As to expediency of a foreign Government becoming a lessee of lands. Demarcation of lots, roads, &c. Limitation of foreign and Chinese jurisdiction .	16
30	31,	Law Officers ..	Case of the Italian Belfiori, accused and found guilty of homicide by Chinese authorities at Swatow. Unauthorized interference of foreign Consuls in his favour	17
31	Aug. 4,	Law Officers ..	Escape to Hong Kong of two persons accused of robbery at Ningpo. Opinion that British subjects should have been sent to Ningpo for trial	18
32	Oct. 6,	Law Officers ..	Doubts as to power of the Governor of Hong Kong, under existing Letters-Patent, to pardon criminals convicted of crimes in China	18
33	23,	Law Officers ..	Case of the master of the "Elfin." Assistance to Chinese authorities against pirates. Improper verdict of Vice-Consul Swinhoe	19
34	Nov. 25,	Law Officers ..	Extradition of Chinese pirates and subjects. Torture. Suggests revision of existing Treaty stipulations on subject of extradition	20
35	Nov. 28,	Law Officers ..	Suggestions regarding issue of Letters-Patent to Her Majesty's Ministers in China and Japan, and Governor of Hong Kong, conferring the power of pardoning criminals	22
36	Dec. 9,	Law Officers ..	Rendition of Chinese criminals. Approving proposed draft of instructions to Sir R. Alcock	23
37	19,	Queen's Advocate	Murder of Mrs. Filleul at Chin-kiang. Cannot claim compensation of Chinese Government	23
38	28,	Law Officers ..	Surrender by Governor of Hong Kong to the Chinese authorities, of the pirate Ho Yu-teen. Approving conduct of Governor	24

COLUMBIA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
39	July 13,	Queen's Advocate	Tax imposed by Constituent Assembly of Bolivar upon all persons engaged in industrial pursuits at Carthagena. Non-exemption of British subjects, unless subjects of any other foreign State should be exempted	25
40	22,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion regarding law passed by Columbian National Congress, defining the condition, rights, and obligations of foreigners .	25
41	Dec. 19,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion that the children of Señor Montoga, a native Columbian, who were born in England, are subject to the obligations of Columbian citizenship	26

COSTA RICA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
42	Apr. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Decrees issued by Governments of Guatemala and Costa Rica, mutually prohibiting all commercial intercourse between the two States. Opinion as to instructions to be sent to Mr. Fraser	26

1865

DENMARK.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
43	Apr. 29, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Willis and Co. Capture of a cargo of tallow consigned to them, on board the Hanoverian vessel "Margaretha," during the war between Germany and Denmark. Claim to compensation	27
44	June 6,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Walters and Bubb. Claim to compensation for detention of certain German vessels during war between Germany and Denmark. Treaty of Peace between those Powers not applicable to neutrals	27
45	9,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Estella." Cannot remonstrate against refusal of Danish Prize Court to award costs and damages to owners .	28
46	17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. A. W. Stratton. Claims compensation of Danish Government for delay in settling question of succession to his deceased wife's property	28
47	27,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. A. W. Stratton. Insufficiency of information to decide question of costs	29
48	July 13,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Messrs. Willis and Co. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere further, as Article XIII of the Treaty of Vienna does not apply to neutrals	29
49	17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. A. W. Stratton. Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to claim compensation .	30

EQUATOR.

50	Mar. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion that political exiles who had sought refuge on board a British merchant-vessel at Guayaquil, were amenable to seizure by Equatorian authorities	31

FRANCE.

51	Jan. 17,	Law Officers	Case of Risk Allah. Extract of letter from Préfet de Police to be supplied to Mr. Linden	31
52	28,	Queen's Advocate	Draft of answer to note verbale of French Government declining to declare the Slave Trade piracy	32
53	28,	Law Officers	Case of Dulac. Approval of proposed Additional Articles to Extradition Treaty with France, with regard to Colonial criminals .	33
54	Feb. 8,	Law Officers	Approving refusal of Governor of the Windward Islands to surrender seamen who had deserted from the French ship of war "L'Amaranthe"	34
55	15,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion with regard to supposed privilege granted to the National Bank of Mexico to export silver free of duty	34
56	Mar. 3,	Queen's Advocate	Request of Mr. F. Nieman, a naturalized British subject, for assistance to prosecute Mr. F. W. Hermann in Paris. Assistance to be granted	35
57	6,	Queen's Advocate	Counterfeiting of trade marks. Case of Mr. Stubs. Decision of French Law Courts contrary to spirit of Commercial Treaty of 1860. Representation to be made to French Government	35
58	7,	Law Officers	Information received from Prefect of Police in Paris respecting Victor Legrand. To communicate to Messrs. Lewis and Cutts, solicitors	36
59	14,	Law Officers	Deserters from French ship of war "L'Amaranthe," at St. Lucia. Instructions of Governor to Administrator to be guided by Act 15 Vict., cap. 26, are improper, that Act not being applicable to deserters from a foreign ship of war	36

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
60	Mar. 29, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Defalcations of Mr. Birch, British Vice-Consul at Marseilles. Consul Mark cannot claim compensation, Mr. Birch being only in the position of a paid Clerk	37
61	Apr. 7,	Law Officers	Observations on reply of French Government to representations of that of Great Britain, on the subject of "expertise" in France. Question of British origin of goods	37
62	29,	Queen's Advocate	Defalcations of Vice-Consul Birch. Cannot alter previous decision	38
63	May 29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Blue Jacket." Non-existence of blockade of Campeachy when that vessel was ordered to desist unloading by French authorities	38
64	July 17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Blue Jacket." Observations on reply of French Government to representations of that of Great Britain, with regard to ineffective blockade	39
65	Sept. 23,	Queen's Advocate	As to application of the Marriage Act, on the occasion of the Consul himself being the principal in the transaction. The marriage may be lawfully celebrated by the officiating Chaplain, and lawfully registered by the Consul himself	40
66	Oct. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Seizure of a French fishing-boat by Penzance fishermen. British Government not bound to take steps	40
67	Nov. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Sinking of the Spanish merchant-steamer "Murillo" in a collision off the North Foreland, by the French vessel of war "Dix Décembre." Claim of Messrs. Clarkson, Son, and Cooper, on account of cargo. British Government not called upon to interfere, the "Murillo" being a Spanish vessel	41
68	Dec. 18,	Law Officers	Opinion in favour of proposed Colonial Ordinance banishing from British Guiana French criminals who have escaped from the French colony of Cayenne	41
69	31,	Law Officers	Murder committed at Singapore, by some French seamen forming part of the crew of the French ship of war "European." Right of Governor to demand extradition of seamen under Extradition Treaty of February 13, 1843	42

FRANKFORT.

70	Feb. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Right of a Jew to be married at the British Legation at Frankfort, provided he takes the oath and goes through the ceremony according to the rites of the Church of England .	43
71	Dec. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Detention of Mrs. Baldock's son at Darmstadt. Her Majesty's Government should not further interfere	43
72	29,	Queen's Advocate	Detention of effects of Mrs. Baldock's son. The son having been released, the question of effects must be decided by civil tribunal at Darmstadt	44

GENERAL.

73	Mar. 10,	Law Officers	Right of a foreigner, naturalized in a British colony, to British protection	44
74	28,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion in favour of grant of Crown leases of certain islands in the Pacific Ocean to British subjects.	45
75	July 20,	Queen's Advocate	Death of Mr. Skelton, Judge of the Mixed Commission Courts at Sierra Leone. In the absence of the Governor and the Chief Justice of the Colony of Sierra Leone, the Queen's Advocate should fill the office of Judge ad interim	45
76	Aug. 2,	Attorney-General	Sale of the "Buckingham and Grenville State Papers." Question of right of the State to claim possession of such papers	46
77	Nov. 16,	Mr. Blunt	Wish of the Queen's Advocate to see decisions in the cases of the "Fabiana," "Conchita," "Mosca," and "Rosarita".	46

1865

GERMANY.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
78	May 26, 1865	Attorney- and Solicitor-General	Question as to right of Great Britain to claim from the Governments of Austria and Prussia, under the Treaty stipulations with Denmark of 1857, the abolition of transit duties through Schleswig and Holstein, in consequence of the passing of a law to that effect by Denmark, subsequent to the cession of those States to Germany by the Treaty of October 30, 1864. Differences in opinions of the Attorney- and Solicitor-General with that of the Queen's Advocate. Opinion of Queen's Advocate annexed	47

GREECE.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
79	Mar. 28,	Law Officers ..	Correspondence with Greek Government as to execution of sentences passed on Ionian subjects by British Consular Courts, previous to June 2, 1864. Case of Rodocanachi v. Verissi	49
80	Apr. 21,	Queen's Advocate	Improper suspension by Greek Government of Mr. E. Draculi's pension, which was secured by the Convention of March 29, 1864, for annexation of Ionian Islands to Greece ..	50
81	May 31,	Law Officers ..	Opinion in favour of payment of Mr. Boyd's pension (Ionian) by Greek Government, irrespective of any employment he may hold under British Government	51
82	June 6,	Law Officers ..	Opinion in favour of proposed Convention with regard to sentences pronounced in British Consular Courts against Ionian subjects, previous to annexation of those Islands to Greece	51
83	July 4,	Law Officers ..	Amended draft of proposed Convention with Greece on subject of sentences pronounced on Ionian subjects previous to annexation of those islands to Greece	52
84	Aug. 29,	Law Officers ..	Claims of Turkish subjects to certain lands near Thebes. Concur in previous Report	54
85	Sept. 20,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mrs. Ingate. Failure of Greek tribunal in administration of justice. As to instructions to British Minister .	55
86	29,	Law Officers ..	Case of Rodocanachi v. Verissi. Question of appeal in Greek Courts against sentences pronounced in British Consular Courts against Ionian subjects, previous to annexation to Greece. Suggests introduction of a Supplementary Article to Convention	55
87	Oct. 4,	Queen's Advocate	Embargo on M. Draculi's Ionian pension. Her Majesty's Government should not further interfere . ..	57
88	13,	Law Officers ..	Approving instructions to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, for carrying into effect Judgments pronounced by British Courts in Ionian suits	57
89	Dec. 26,	Law Officers ..	Observations on Report of Greek Chamber of Deputies on the subject of Convention for carrying into effect Judgments pronounced upon Ionian subjects, previous to annexation of those islands to Greece	57

HAYTI.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
90	Jan. 4,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on Treaty concluded between Hayti and the United States, conferring especial privileges on privateers .	58
91	Dec. 18,	Law Officers ..	Approving proposed instructions to Governor of Jamaica on subject of deportation from that island of certain Haytian refugees, accused of conspiring against the Government of Hayti	59

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
92	Dec. 22, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Opinion as to right of British Consul in Hayti to grant refuge to political refugees	59
93	..	Queen's Advocate	Opinion that it is not necessary to make public the notification of the raising of the blockade of Cape Haytien	60

ITALY.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
94	Mar. 11,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion with regard to claim to British protection of the children born in Italy of British parents. Case of Mr. R. E. Sofio	60
95	April 3,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Messrs. Hambro on the Italian Government on account of sale of the State railways. Opinion in favour of Messrs. Hambro	61
96	13,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Conder and the Apulian Railway. Breach of contract by Italian Government	62
97	25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the Apulian Railway. Approving proposed letter to Messrs. Conder and Barry	65
98	May 11,	Queen's Advocate	Apulian Railway. A British subject cannot by right claim the interference of his Government in the case of a breach of contract	65
99	12,	Queen's Advocate	Approving instructions to Consul Severn, respecting the grant of an asylum in Consulate at Rome to British subjects expelled by order of local authorities	66
100	22,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on proposed note to Count Maffei, with regard to exemption from military service of the children of British subjects born in the Italian dominions	67
101	June 1,	Queen's Advocate	Question of right of domicile at Gibraltar claimed by Italian subjects, under the Treaty of Commerce of August 6, 1863. Considers that Gibraltar should be exempt from stipulations of Treaty, as regards the removal of foreigners	67
102	Sept. 4,	Law Officers ..	Complaint of Messrs. Woodhouse, of Marsala, at tax levied upon articles consumed in their wine establishment, by extension of municipal boundaries of the town. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere ..	68
103	Nov. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Felice Attardi. No ground of complaint at his long detention previous to trial	68

JAPAN.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
104	Apr. 10,	Law Officers ..	Illicit and clandestine trade in arms carried on by foreigners with the Prince of Choshiu. By the 85th Article of the new Order in Council for China and Japan, Her Majesty's Minister will be empowered to prevent the trade in arms, &c., by British subjects	69
105	May 23,	Law Officers ..	Slaughter-houses at Yokohama	69
106	June 26,	Law Officers ..	Approving scheme proposed by Mr. Winchester, regarding jurisdiction over the subjects of Powers not having Treaties with Japan	70
107	Aug. 4,	Law Officers ..	Punishment of British subjects joining the Daimio Choshiu, is provided for by the 81st Article of the Order in Council of March 9, 1865	71
108	4,	Law Officers ..	Observation on Order in Council proposed by Mr. Winchester for the establishment of Municipal Councils in China and Japan. Suggests delay in settlement of question until Report has been received from Sir E. Hornby	71
109	Sept. 20,	Law Officers ..	Formation of Municipal body at Yokohama	72

1865

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
110	Sept. 20, 1865	Law Officers	Ample powers granted to British authorities in Japan, by Order in Council of March 9, 1865, for preventing British subjects from joining in civil war in Japan	72
111	Oct. 30,	Law Officers	Are of opinion that Municipal Regulations issued at Yokohama should be approved by Her Majesty's Government. Unrecognized legal character of the Municipal Council	73
112	Nov. 3,	Law Officers	Approving Regulations issued at Yokohama, interdicting the slaughter of animals within that Settlement by British subjects	73

MADAGASCAR.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
113	Feb. 10,	Law Officers	Amendments proposed in Articles of Treaty with Madagascar, relating to extradition, contracts, and trade in munitions of war	74
114	Mar. 14,	Law Officers	Further opinion relating to Treaty with Madagascar. Modifications desired in draft of Treaty by the Malagasy authorities	75

MEXICO.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
115	Jan. 17,	Law Officers	Caveat entered against the marriage by Her Majesty's Consul at Mexico, of F. Rule and Mary Hosking. Interference of Mr. Walsham. An Ambassador or Minister of Her Majesty has no legal power to interfere in questions of marriages. Duty of Consul with regard to examination of caveat	76
116	Apr. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Approving draft of proposed Convention with Mexico for the settlement of claims	77
117	May 15,	Queen's Advocate	Complaint of Messrs. Suzdaltseff and Sullivan, at delay of Courts of Law in Mexico, in prosecution of certain persons whom they accuse of having swindled them at the Havana	77
118	22,	Queen's Advocate	Liability of foreigners to serve in a force organized for the defence of property against the attacks of robbers. Distinction between such service and the regular military service	78
119	June 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "Nancy Dawson." Seizure of vessel for breach of Customs laws. Legality of seizure	78
120	8,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Oldenburgh on account of seizure of his vessel, the "Schwan," by French blockading squadron	79
121	9,	Queen's Advocate	No ground for remonstrance against Decrees by which the illegitimate children of foreigners born of Mexican women, as well as foreigners who may acquire landed property in Mexico, are declared Mexican subjects. Observations as to retrospective character of latter Decree	79
122	12,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. R. Friend. Not advisable to take any steps	80
123	20,	Queen's Advocate	Right of British subjects to claim exemption from service in the National Guard of Mexico. Liable, however, to payment of a moderate tax in consequence of exemption	80
124	July	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh on the Mexican Government. No ground for dealing with such claim differently from other British claims	81
125	Oct. 30,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. B. Crowther. Right of a British subject to British protection in a third Power, notwithstanding his service in the so-called Confederate States of America during the civil war	81
126	Nov. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Oldenburgh, in consequence of the seizure of the "Schwan." Responsibility of Mexican Government to a neutral State for the act of a French ship of war forming part of the Mexican squadron, and acting on behalf of that Government. Want of knowledge of the existence of war and blockade	82

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
127	Nov. 7, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Approving refusal of Mr. Scarlett to grant protection to Mr. Saviñon, a Mexican by birth, but a naturalized British subject	83
128	7,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Carmichael. Cannot claim compensation from Mexican Government on account of losses sustained by highway robbery	83
129	30,	Queen's Advocate	Suggestions with regard to amendments proposed by Mexican Government in Claims Convention	84
130	Dec. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Oldenburgh, the owner of the "Schwan." Mr. Oldenburgh being aware of the existence of hostilities in Mexico, Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere	84

MONTE VIDEO.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
131	Jan. 7,	Queen's Advocate	Blockade of ports of Paisandú and Salto. Blockade should be respected so long as the naval force employed is adequate to maintain it	85
132	19,	Law Officers	Claims of British subjects on Government of Monte Video. Suggests that various claimants should be required to make out, to the satisfaction of the Solicitor of the Treasury, their rights of representation	85
133	Feb. 15,	Queen's Advocate	Protection of neutral commerce requires that the vessels employed by a belligerent should sail under the flag of that belligerent, and should not harass the property and endanger the safety of neutrals by the occasional assumption of the flag of the other belligerent. Case of certain vessels fitted out at Buenos Ayres for use of revolutionary party in Uruguay	86
134	Apr. 11,	Queen's Advocate	Suggests insertion in "Gazette" of notification of raising of blockade of Monte Video	86

MOROCCO.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
135	Apr. 25,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Interpreter to British Vice-Consulate at Tetuan, Mr. Nahon, for compensation on account of loss of property on occupation of that city by the Spanish forces. Justice of claim	87
136	Aug. 21,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. J. Samuel on the Moorish Government, on account of destruction of certain stores outside the town of Mogador. Not entitled to support of Her Majesty's Government	88

MUSCAT.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
137	June 8,	Law Officers	Consider that Foreign Jurisdiction Act may be extended to Zanzibar, under stipulations of Treaty of May 31, 1839	88

NETHERLANDS.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
138	Dec. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on proposed new Treaty of Commerce with the Netherlands	89

1865

NEW GRANADA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
139	Oct. 16, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Messrs. Langton and Longrigg on the Government of New Granada, for seizure of a cargo of divi divi by revolutionary authorities at Rio Hacha. A foreign Government has no right to make a law for evading compensation due to foreigners for wrongs committed previous to the passing of that law	89

NICARAGUA.

140	Mar. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Interference of Mosquito Indians with privilege enjoyed by Messrs. Vaughan, under a grant from the Nicaraguan Government, of cutting and exporting timber	90
141	Dec. 23,	Queen's Advocate	Contravention of Article III of Treaty of 1860 between Great Britain and Nicaragua, by the imposition of duties on residents and traders within the Mosquito Reserve	91

PARAGUAY.

142	May 9,	Queen's Advocate	Complaint of Government of Paraguay at Argentine Government allowing a Brazilian squadron to pass up the Parana. The British Government is not called upon to interfere under Treaty stipulations of 1853	92

PERSIA.

143	Feb. 24,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. Ralli on the Persian Government, on account of losses sustained by the interference with his trade by Persian authorities at Tabreez. Violation of Treaty stipulations. Compensation should be demanded	92
144	Mar. 22,	Law Officers ..	Observations relating to trial of a British Indian subject, Mohamed Ali, for murder of a Persian subject at Bagdad .	93
145	Apr. 5,	Queen's Advocate	Case of M. Ralli. Still considers that he is entitled to compensation from Persian Government, notwithstanding Mr. Michoglou's arrangement	94
146	21,	Queen's Advocate	Further opinion on claim of Mr. Ralli	95

PERU.

147	Jan. 3,	Law Officers ..	Opinion as to expediency of detaining an iron-clad vessel, supposed to be fitting out at Greenhithe for the Government of Peru	96
148	May 11,	Queen's Advocate	Her Majesty's Government should protest against Decree issued by Government of Peru, declaring that all duties paid by foreigners to insurgents at Islay would be again demanded upon the re-establishment of its authority in that port ..	96
149	July 7,	Queen's Advocate	Closing of ports of Islay and Quilca by order of President of Peru. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	97
150	Oct. 19,	Queen's Advocate	Enlistment on board Peruvian ship of war "Union," of certain British subjects, which vessel was subsequently made over by her commander to the revolutionary Government of Peru. Refusal of British Chargé d'Affaires to interfere with them at request of Peruvian Government. They should, however, be informed that during such employment they cannot expect British protection	97

PORTUGAL.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
151	Mar. 28, 1865	Law Officers ..	Opinion in favour of payment of claims of executors of late Mr. R. Thornton, on account of salary, &c., due to him for services as geologist to the Zambezi expedition	98
152	31,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion in favour of claim of Great Britain to the Island of Bulama	99

PRUSSIA.

153	Jan. 11,	Law Officers ..	Approving note to Prussian Ambassador on subject of Convention between Great Britain and Prussia, for the mutual surrender of criminals	101
154	Feb. 9,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion in favour of claim of captain and crew of the "Queen," on the Prussian Government, in consequence of loss of that vessel on Fehmern Island	101
155	28,	Queen's Advocate	Request of Austrian and Prussian Governments for acknowledgment of temporary flag of the Duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg. Effect of such recognition on the rights of Austria and Prussia	101
156	28,	Law Officers ..	Opinion that negotiation for modification of Extradition Convention with Prussia should be allowed to drop	102
157	Mar. 7,	Law Officers ..	New Treaty of Commerce with the Zollverein. Wine duties in Canada and Australia	102
158	May 30,	Law Officers ..	Answers to queries of Vice-Consul at Memel, regarding the agreement of the criminal laws of England and Prussia on certain specified points	103
159	Oct. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Capture by a Prussian vessel of war of the Danish vessel "Falk," and her subsequent sale at Tien-tsin to Messrs. Alisch and Co. Right of British Vice-Admiralty Court at Hong Kong to adjudicate her restoration to her former owners, on application of Danish Consul	104
160	Nov. 3,	Queen's Advocate	As to the power of a Consul to marry a Christian British subject to a Jewish lady, a subject of the King of Prussia. By 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, a British Consul is bound to marry two persons, one of whom is a British subject, whatever their religious faith may be, provided there be no lawful impediment according to the law of England, and the statute aforesaid, to such marriage. A Consul not bound to celebrate such marriage if it should subject him to pains and penalties in the foreign State in which he resides . ..	105
161	Dec. 4,	Attorney-General	Application of Mr. Renkewitz for a British passport, he being born in the Colony of Tobago, of a Saxon father and a Danish mother, should be granted	105

RIVER PLATE.

162	Mar. 8,	Queen's Advocate	Hostilities in the River Plate. Bearing of Treaty stipulations on freedom of the river navigation pending such hostilities .	106
163	13,	Queen's Advocate	Draft of notification for insertion in "Gazette," warning British merchants against carrying contraband of war during hostilities in the River Plate	106
164	Apr. 3,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Cestus." Case drawn up by Mr. Thornton is fit and proper to be laid before the arbiter on behalf of Her Majesty's Government	107
165	20,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Caledonia." M. P. Justo has no claim to compensation for losses incurred by the burning of that vessel in 1845, during hostilities between Great Britain and the Argentine Republic	107

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
166	May 15, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Approving reply to observations of M. C. Bareiro, on conduct of Argentine Government in allowing a Brazilian squadron to pass up the Paraná	108
167	25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Caledonia." No reason for altering previous decision regarding claim of M. P. Justo	108
168* 168	June 8,	Queen's Advocate	Notification for "Gazette" of the blockade of the ports and coast of Paraguay by Brazil	108 108A
169	Nov. 10,	Queen's Advocate	Notification of blockade of the ports and coasts of Paraguay. Reservation in favour of Treaty rights	109
170	Dec. 2,	Queen's Advocate	Observations on a recent Law issued by the Argentine Congress, in regard to the administration of intestate estates in that Republic. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in favour of intestate property of British subjects	109
171	8,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of a Company of householders on the Government of Monte Video, for repayment of a sum of money advanced by them in 1845, with the promise of redemption in 1848. Sentence of Court of Justice is in opposition to letter and spirit of Article 7 of Convention of September 7, 1858	110

RUSSIA.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
172	Jan. 23,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion as to implication of Captain Nelson in the murder of Captain Middleton at Odessa	111
173	31,	Queen's Advocate	Considers wish of British Factory at St. Petersburgh to induce the Council of the Empire to revise the new Russian law regarding the naturalization of foreigners to be reasonable. Status of a Russian subject carrying on trade in Great Britain	112
174	Mar. 21,	Queen's Advocate	Murder of Captain Middleton. Implication of Captain Sherwood	112
175	June 7,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Messrs. Douglas and Condiff for compensation on account of outrage committed upon them at Kieff	113
176	July 11,	Law Officers	Murder of Captain Middleton. No power to compel Messrs. Nelson and Sherwood to give evidence	113
177	Nov. 29,	Law Officers	Observations on complaint of Russian Government at decision of English tribunals regarding the property of the late Sir James Wylie	114
178	Dec. 29,	Law Officers	Case of property of the late Sir James Wylie. As to expediency of Courts of Law in this country declining jurisdiction in questions pending upon foreign law	116

SALVADOR.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
179	July 28,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. J. Kerferd. Loan advanced to Government of Salvador on the security of certain duties. Breach of faith by changing law by which such duties were secured	117

SAXONY.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
180	Apr. 20,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion as to nationality of a child of foreign parents born on board a British vessel, and of a child born without the British dominions, of foreigners naturalized as British subjects. A child of foreign parents born on board a British ship of war, would be a British subject; such child would also be considered a British subject if born on board a British merchant-ship on the high seas. A child born without the British dominions, of naturalized British subjects, entitled to British protection when not within the States to which the parents originally owed allegiance	117

SIAM.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
181	July 27, 1865	Law Officers	Course to be adopted in a British Consular Court when a foreigner has a complaint to prefer against a British subject. A foreigner who is plaintiff in a British Consular Court must submit to the law and procedure prevailing in that Court	118
182	Aug. 25,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mong Shuay Gau v. the Chief of Chiengmai. Charge against Captain Burn of attempting to bribe the Judge. Interference of Consul to obtain reversal of sentence. Compromise effected between Captain Burn and Mr. Johnstone	118

SPAIN.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
183	Jan. 4,	Queen's Advocate	Sinking of the British vessel "Mermaid" by shots from Spanish fort at Ceuta. Opinion in favour of evidence of captain and crew. Compensation should be urged on Spanish Government. Her Majesty's Government, however, should not refuse the finding of a fairly composed Mixed Commission	119
184	24,	Queen's Advocate	Instructions should be sent to Sir J. Crampton to procure an audience of the Spanish Minister for Mr. J. S. Leigh, in the case of the "Candida"	121
185	Feb. 10,	Law Officers	Limits of jurisdiction of the Bishop of Gibraltar: Cadiz and Tangiers, and countries situate on either side of the Straits of Gibraltar	121
186	Apr. 3,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Spanish Government for compensation for losses sustained by the owners of the "America," condemned by British and Spanish Mixed Court at Sierra Leone, for being equipped for the Slave Trade. Opinion in favour of sentence of Mixed Court	122
187	5,	Law Officers	Jurisdiction of Bishop of Gibraltar. Misunderstanding of the term "jurisdiction." Her Majesty's Government can only give its moral support to such jurisdiction, and the submission of British subjects to the same is only voluntary	124
188	20,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "I O U." Seizure by Spanish naval forces at San Domingo, for an alleged violation of blockade. Her Majesty's Government not necessarily called upon to interfere	125
189	May 5,	Queen's Advocate	Her Majesty's Government should express regret at the decision of the Spanish Government not to grant compensation for the death of G. Good, who was killed at Puerto Plata, during a conflict between the Spanish troops and Dominican insurgents	125
190	16,	Queen's Advocate	Capture of British vessels "Dart" and "Scat" by Spanish blockading squadron off San Domingo. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	126
191	17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Eliza." Seizure by Spanish authorities. Compensation should be demanded of Spanish Government	126
192	Sept. 13,	Law Officers	Tarifa shots. Cases of the "Mermaid" and "Mountaineer." Compensation should be demanded for former vessel. Refusal of Spanish Government to accept proposition of Mixed Commission	127
193	14,	Queen's Advocate	The captain of the "Evelyn" was justified in not surrendering the mate of his vessel to authorities at Cadiz, the injury complained of to a Spanish subject having been committed on the high seas	128
194	Nov. 24,	Queen's Advocate	Hostilities between Spain and Chile. Grounds of hostilities urged by Spain are unjust, unusual, and frivolous. Treatment of neutral vessels by Spanish cruizers. Right of Her Majesty's Government to demand the establishment of a Prize Court by Spain. Use of privateers by Chile. Threatened treatment as pirates by Spanish Admiral	128

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
195	Nov. 30, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Capture of the "Mattias Cousino." Questionable title of the owner. Attempt of the Spanish Admiral to set up a Prize Court on board his ship, contrary to the principles of international law. Right of a neutral to demand trial before a properly constituted Court	130
196	30,	Law Officers	Case of the "Eagle," supposed to be fitting out for privateering purposes. Her Majesty's Government has no legal right to call upon the owner for information as to destination	130
197	Dec. 1,	Law Officers	Threat of the Spanish Government to treat as pirates all vessels of which the captain, the officers, and majority of the crew are not Chileans, or have not received their commissions direct from the Chilean Government, is contrary to the Law of Nations	131
198	1,	Law Officers	Vessels supposed to be fitting out as privateers for service of Chile. Application of Spanish Minister for detention. Insufficiency of evidence to warrant detention	131
199	1,	Queen's Advocate	Further Report with regard to the sentence passed upon the Spanish vessel "America," by the Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone	132
200	6,	Queen's Advocate	Threat of Spanish Government to treat as pirates foreigners found on board Chilean privateers	135
201	8,	Law Officers	Insufficiency of evidence to warrant Her Majesty's Government in detaining vessels supposed to be fitting out in England for the service of Chile	137
202	8,	Queen's Advocate	No further notice of blockade of Chilean ports by Spain required to be inserted in the "London Gazette"	137
203	9,	Queen's Advocate	Approving proposed instruction to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, relative to intended treatment of Chilean privateers as pirates	138
204	16,	Law Officers	Insufficiency of evidence to warrant detention of the "Eagle,"* supposed to be fitting out as a Chilean privateer	138
205	18,	Queen's Advocate	The proposed establishment of a Prize Court on board the Spanish Admiral's ship, on the coast of Chile, is contrary to international law, with regard to cases of neutrals	138
206	18,	Queen's Advocate	Notice to be inserted in the "London Gazette" relative to blockade of Chile by Spanish squadron. List of ports blockaded. Privileges granted by Spanish Admiral in favour of mail-packets of Pacific Steam Navigation Company	139
207	23,	Queen's Advocate	Further opinion in opposition to threat of Spanish Government to treat as pirates foreigners found on board Chilean privateers	140
208	29,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion adverse to grant of certificates by Consuls, certifying that a cargo shipped on account of a British firm was the property of British subjects, so as to protect it from seizure by Chilean cruizers	142

SWEDEN.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
209	Apr. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Her Majesty's Consul at Stockholm is not called upon to certify to the character of the jurisdiction of the Chancery of the Governor of Stockholm	142

SWITZERLAND.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
210	Feb. 2,	Law Officers	Proposed use of Swiss national flag afloat. No principle of international law exists which would justify refusal to recognize the flag of an inland State, when used under the authority of its Government on the high seas	143
211	Nov. 15,	Queen's Advocate	Right of an English Company, styled "The European Central Railway Company," which has its domicil in Switzerland, to the protection of the British Legation	144

---

* See also No. 18, under "Chile."

TRIPOLI.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
212	Jan. 24, 1865	Law Officers	Complaint of M. de Bacquerie against Consul Reade. Consider defence of the Consul as satisfactory and sufficient	144

TUNIS.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
213	June 26,	Law Officers	Murder of M. Schembri at Tunis. Acquittal of Italian, the principal in the murder, by Court at Genoa	145
214	30,	Law Officers	Opinion as to disposal of certain bankrupt property belonging to Mr. Smythe, of London	145
215	Dec. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Approving conduct of Her Majesty's Consul-General in Tunis, relative to the disposal of certain children belonging to a British subject, who had embraced the Mahomedan religion	146

TURKEY.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
216	Jan. 13,	Queen's Advocate	Application of an Ionian, D. Micrulachi, a partner in a mercantile firm at Manchester, for continued British protection. Protection should be continued, in so far as commercial interests are concerned	146
217	13,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of M. Hippodimatopulo against Turkish War Department. Opinion against acceptance of proposal of Aali Pasha	147
218	26,	Law Officers	Consular jurisdiction in Tripoli. Claim of Consul to jurisdiction in cases of an Ottoman v. a British subject not justified by terms of Capitulations	147
219	31,	Law Officers	Patent tax levied on wholesale foreign merchants in the Principalities. Opinion in favour of legality of such tax	148
220	Feb. 7,	Law Officers	Consider it expedient that Her Majesty's Agent in the Principalities should join in any representations made by his colleagues upon questions affecting the interests of foreigners	149
221	7,	Law Officers	British Consular jurisdiction in cases of British subjects accused of offences against the subjects of the Porte. Necessity of strictly maintaining the observance of the Capitulations of 1809	149
222	14,	Law Officers	New law of the Press in Turkey. Consider Mr. Stuart's objections to new law as well founded	150
223	Mar. 14,	Queen's Advocate	Consular jurisdiction in Principalities. Declaration of Prefect of Ibraila. Rights of foreign Powers under Treaty stipulations with Turkey not abrogated by recent Treaties concerning the Principalities	150
224	18,	Law Officers	Claim of certain Turkish subjects to lands near Thebes. No case made out by Turkish Government for intervention of the Protecting Powers	152
225	24,	Law Officers	European Commission of the Danube. No objection to alterations proposed to be made in system of procedure for judging offences made against regulations of the Commission	152
226	Apr. 29,	Queen's Advocate	Slave Trade at Soudan. Opinion regarding measures of suppression proposed by Pasha of Egypt	153
227	May 13,	Queen's Advocate	Letter of introduction to Turkish Ambassador for Mr. N. Buckley	153
228	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Stella." Judgment against owners for sinking a Turkish vessel. Refusal to pay damages. Action for recovery should be brought by parties to whom money is due in the Courts of this country	154
229	30,	Law Officers	Consular jurisdiction in Egypt. Proposed reform of. Principle upon which such jurisdiction should be exercised	154

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
230	June 6, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Application made to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople for surrender of a Venetian seaman, a deserter from an Austrian ship of war, who was serving on board a British vessel. Act 15 and 16 Vict., cap. 26, and Order in Council, apply only to deserters from merchant-vessels within the territories of Her Majesty and the East India Company	155
231	6,	Law Officers	Proceedings of Representatives of Great Powers at Constantinople on the subject of the observance of the Capitulations and Treaty engagements in the Principalities. Approving view taken by Mr. Stuart of delivery of foreigners to their Consuls after conviction	156
232	21,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of M. de Mattos on the Turkish Government, on account of interest due on a sum of money which was delayed payment, contrary to the contract. Claim should be supported by Her Majesty's Government	156
233	22,	Law Officers	Foreign Jurisdiction Act. Consider it desirable that a Bill should be passed declaring that the term "British Colony" includes all Her Majesty's Possessions abroad	157
234	Aug. 14,	Law Officers	Fraud practised by Mr. J. Gout on Messrs. Cavan, Lubbock, and Co. Her Majesty's Government may properly support application made by the Messrs. Lubbock to obtain an Imperial Iradé	157
235	Sept. 20,	Law Officers	Sale of timber in Principalities. Objectionable conditions introduced in contracts of sale to foreigners. Suggest joint remonstrances of Representatives of European Powers in questions relating to Principalities	158
236	Nov. 6,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of M. Condopoulo on account of disposal, by British Vice-Consul at Toultcha, of a vessel and cargo which had been run down by Her Majesty's ship "Weser"	158

UNITED STATES.

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
237	Jan. 6,	Law Officers	Neutrality laws in Canada. St. Alban's raiders. Opinion in favour of the Governor-General of Canada being furnished with extraordinary powers by an Act of the Provincial Legislature, during the existence of the civil war in the United States	159
238	7,	Law Officers	Hong Kong Neutrality Ordinance. Opinion in favour of validity of Ordinance, notwithstanding the distance of five miles of the Colony being still mentioned	160
239	11,	Law Officers	Shipment to New York of certain steam launches for service of Government of United States. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, it having received no information of "an equipment, furnishing, fitting out, or arming," as distinguished from building and sale, which acts alone, in the case of the "Alexandra," were not considered by the Judges as an offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act	161
240	12,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mary" (or "Alexandra"). Breach of Foreign Enlistment Act. Liability of a ship to forfeiture when found in any portion of Her Majesty's dominions, for the infringement of the law in any particular colony	161
241	12,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Extradition of offenders. Amended draft of Order in Council suspending Imperial Act	163
242	12,	Attorney-General	Steam launches purchased in England for use of Government of United States. Suggests a communication being made to Mr. Adams on subject of destination	164
243	14,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mary" (or "Alexandra"). Opinion as to answer to be sent to Mr. Lafone regarding her seizure at Nassau	164
244	14,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Heslop. His claim for compensation on account of loss of property in the United States, he having become completely domiciled	164
245	Jan. 14, 1865	Law Officers	Effect on blockade of the Southern ports of the regulations issued by the United States' Government, for carrying on the trade with those ports	165
246	16,	Law Officers	Her Majesty's Government should not interfere in claim of Mr. E. E. Sewell, on the United States' Government, for having been improperly enlisted in the United States' army.	166
247	17,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Refusal of the United States' Government to grant extradition of T. Kain in 1852	166
248	20,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Hawk" and "City of Richmond." Insufficiency of evidence to prove that they have been fitted out for service of Confederate States. Cannot comply with request of Mr. Adams for their detention	167
249	25,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Rawson	168
250	26,	Law Officers	Opinion in favour of a strong remonstrance being made to Confederate Government against use of British territory for fitting out expeditions against the United States	168
251	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Ajax." Insufficiency of evidence to prove that she was fitted out for service of Confederate States. Instructions should be sent to Governor of the Bahamas to watch her movements	170
252	31,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Approving view of Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, regarding arrest and extradition of persons charged with having taken part in the above raid	170
253	31,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Agreeing with opinion of Canadian Law Officers that sufficient evidence did not exist to justify the arrest and extradition of the parties implicated in above raid	171
254	31,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Nicol to compensation from the United States' Government, on account of detention on board a United States' ship of war of two apprentices who had deserted from the British ship "Cuzio." Refusal of United States' Government to surrender them, in consequence of magistrate at Dover refusing to order arrest of deserters from the United States' ship "Iroquois"	172
255	Feb. 6,	Law Officers	Case of the "Sea King." Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe should be allowed to see depositions made by some of the crew before Her Majesty's Consul at Teneriffe	173
256	7,	Law Officers	Approving proposed answer to representations of Mr. Adams, respecting the proceedings of Confederate Agents in England	174
257	8,	Queen's Advocate	Expenses of Mixed Commission for settlement of claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Companies, on the Government of the United States, under Convention of Washington of July 1, 1863. Expenses should be defrayed by Her Majesty's Government	174
258	10,	Law Officers	Complaint of Mr. R. A. Westbrook that his son had been illegally enlisted into service of United States	175
259	11,	Queen's Advocate	Cotton at the Savannah, belonging to Mr. H. Lafone of Liverpool. Question of restoration to a neutral of goods captured in an enemy's town. Obligation of a belligerent to restore such goods. Difficulty of proof of identity. Her Majesty's Government should protest against compulsory sale of the cotton claimed by British subjects	175
260	15,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. H. C. Westbrook. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, the Report of the American Secretary of the Navy contradicting the statement of Westbrook	176
261	25,	Attorney and Solicitor-General	Question of extradition. Case of Mr. Burley. Consider that the United States' Government having obtained the surrender of Burley on the charge of robbery, would not be justified in having him tried on the charge of piracy. Her Majesty's Government should remonstrate	177

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
262	Feb. 28, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere in the recovery of the effects of Mr. Slattery	177
263	Mar. 2,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Peterhoff" and Mr. Bowden. The judgment of the Court of Common Pleas furnishes no ground for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government with that of the United States	177
264	4,	Law Officers ..	Approving Act of Canadian Legislature for repression of outrages on Canadian frontier. Similar Acts should be passed by Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.	179
265	8,	Law Officers ..	Seizure of cotton, the property of neutrals, by Federal authorities at Savannah. Representations to be made by Her Majesty's Government	179
266	10,	Queen's Advocate	Case of T. W. Benson. Trial for fraud whilst employed as an army contractor. Both by domicil and contract with the United States' Government, Benson was liable to United States' jurisdiction	180
267	14,	Law Officers ..	Regulations made by the United States' Government regarding trade with Confederate blockaded ports. Consider such regulations as vitiating blockade as regards neutrals	181
268	16,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Chameleon," formerly the Confederate States' war-steamer "Tallahassee." Right of a belligerent Government to sell a ship of war to a private merchant. Such vessel should be treated by a neutral as a merchant-vessel belonging to one of the belligerents	182
269	16,	Law Officers ..	St, Alban's raiders. Warrant issued by Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick for arrest. Defects in the requisition made by the United States' Government. Observations on Report of Provincial Solicitor-General	182
270	16,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. R. Smith. A British subject entering a foreign service contrary to a Royal Proclamation cannot claim interference of his Government to protect him against ill-usage	183
271	16,	Law Officers ..	Case of B. Burley. Question of extradition. Approving decision of Canadian Court of Law. Forcible seizure of a merchant-ship by a British subject previously residing in the United States, must be considered as an act of robbery.	184
272	17,	Law Officers ..	St. Alban's raiders. Observations as to legality of issue of warrant by Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, for extradition of certain of the raiders. Approving course pursued by the Lieutenant-Governor	185
273	18,	Law Officers ..	Case of Miss Hill. No ground for interference with regard to her treatment by the Federal authorities, in consequence of communications made by her to Confederate officers	186
274	18,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Chesapeake." Application of United States' Government for extradition of certain persons concerned in seizure of that vessel. Arrest of L. Seely in New Brunswick. Opinion in favour of judgment of Judges of the Queen's Bench, that piratical acts committed on the high seas, on board a United States' vessel, over which British Criminal or Admiralty Courts can exercise jurisdiction, do not constitute offences for which extradition is due, under Treaty with the United States	186
275	18,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Mary" (late "Alexandra"). Power of Her Majesty's Government to indefinitely postpone the sale of the "Mary," if condemned at Nassau for breach of neutrality laws	187
276	20,	Law Officers ..	Observations on decision of United States' Law Courts regarding the extradition of Kain	188
277	21,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Louisa." No ground for official interference of Her Majesty's Government, the owners not having appealed against decision of Prize Court	188

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
278	Mar. 24, 1865	Law Officers ..	Case of T. Saville. Capture on board a blockade-runner. Her Majesty's Government should interfere in favour of release of T. Saville, if unconnected with service of Confederate Government	189
279	24,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Chameleon," late "Tallahassee." Approving conduct of Governor of the Bahamas with respect to the "Rattlesnake" and "Chameleon"	189
280	24,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Night Hawk." Illegal capture and imprisonment of crew. Representations to be made to United States' Government	190
281	24,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. E. Sewell. Her Majesty's Government cannot guarantee him protection should he return to the United States	191
282	25,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Confederate States," late "Laurel." Complaint of Mr. Adams at a mail-bag being placed on board the "Confederate States," after she had been employed to convey arms, &c., to Confederate vessel "Sea King"	191
283	29,	Law Officers ..	Landing of a boat at Nassau from United States' ship of war "Honduras," without the permission of the Governor of the Bahamas. Application of Mr. Adams that Her Majesty's Government should no longer recognize belligerent rights of Confederate States	192
284	31,	Law Officers ..	St. Alban's raiders. The conduct of Mr. C. C. Clay, Agent for the Confederate Government in Canada, in organizing from that colony the expedition against St. Alban's, was a deliberate breach of the Neutrality Laws of Great Britain, and makes the raiders liable to trial for misdemeanour, either at common law or under the Foreign Enlistment Act	193
285	April 5,	Law Officers ..	Observations on Enrolment Act lately passed by United States' Congress	194
286	7,	Law Officers ..	Case of Vernon Locke. His trial at Nassau for conspiracy and forgery, in consequence of the sale of cargo of the "Hanover" whilst in command of the Confederate privateer "Retribution"	194
287	7,	Law Officers ..	Imprisonment of Mr. E. W. Pratt, at New York, accused of participation in the equipment of the war ram "Stonewall Jackson." Necessity of giving further consideration to case should the United States' Government insist upon treating as enemies all persons who may have taken part in the equipment of vessels of war for Confederate States	195
288	7,	Law Officers ..	Proclamation of United States' Government, ordering all foreigners who may have been engaged in violating the blockade of the Confederate ports, to quit within the period of twelve days, under the penalty of imprisonment. Opinion of injustice of such edict	196
289	15,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Chameleon," late "Tallahassee." Right of a neutral to treat as a merchant-vessel a ship of war sold by a belligerent and converted into a merchant-vessel	197
290	19,	Law Officers ..	Captured British cotton at Savannah. Necessity of British subjects substantiating their claims by proper legal proof	197
291	21,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Carrie Mair." Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere, the vessel having been captured within blockaded waters	198
292	21,	Law Officers ..	Mr. W. Foden cannot claim exemption from service in the United States' army, he having become a resident in that country	198
293	21,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Approving conduct of the Governor, on visit to Melbourne, and enlistment of British subjects to serve on board that vessel. Could not serve a warrant on board a Confederate ship of war without permission of commander	199

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
294	April 25, 1865	Law Officers	Case of the "Scylla." Claim of the master Mr. F. D. Hamilton, to compensation, on account of his treatment when the vessel was seized by Federal authorities. Reply to be made to representation	199
295	25,	Law Officers	Arrival at Nassau of the "City of Richmond," after having been engaged in conveying seamen, arms, &c., to the Confederate ship of war "Stonewall." Insufficiency of evidence to prosecute parties engaged, on return to England	200
296	25,	Law Officers	Case of the "San Jacinto." Opinion in favour of view of Governor Rawson, regarding the definition of British waters. Belligerent vessels should be allowed to anchor within British waters for the purpose of assisting vessels of the same character	200
297	28,	Law Officers	Complaint of Mr. Adams that the hostile organizations against the United States' commerce had their origin in the fact of Her Majesty's Government having recognized the Confederates as belligerents. Cases of the "Shenandoah," "City of Richmond," and "Stonewall." Approving proposed reply to Mr. Adams' representations	201
298	May 4,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Menlove, in consequence of the closing of certain banks at New Orleans. Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere	201
299	4,	Law Officers	Mr. C. Noonan is not entitled to claim British protection for his own property or that of his wife at New Orleans	202
300	4,	Law Officers	Case of extradition of Mr. Burley. Consider that the trial of Burley for piracy, when he had been surrendered on a charge of robbery, would be a breach of faith	202
301	5,	Law Officers	Case of V. G. Locke. Extradition. Demand of United States' Government for his surrender on charges of piracy and murder, arising out of the case of the "Chesapeake." V. G. Locke being under trial for violation of laws of Great Britain, should undergo his sentence previous to delivery to United States' Government. Opinion in favour of issue of warrant for arrest, notwithstanding informality in requisition. Decision of Court of Queen's Bench in the case of the "Joseph Gerrity" is opposed to delivery of accused on a charge of piracy	202
302	8,	Law Officers	Cotton of neutrals captured at Savannah. Opinion as to effect of decision of Chief Justice Chase, relative to disposal of property of neutrals captured in an enemy's town	204
303	10,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. V. O'Connor for restitution of certain tobacco which he had stored at Richmond and on board the "Hiawatha." Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to use his good offices. Mr. O'Connor must substantiate his claims with regard to tobacco sold by United States' authorities, before proper tribunals	205
304	10,	Law Officers	Draft of instructions abolishing restrictions on entry of belligerent ships of war into British possessions, saving always the interval of twenty-four hours between the departure of ships of either of the belligerents	205
305	19,	Law Officers	Opinion as to whether the Act of Congress passed in the United States, respecting fees to be levied by Custom-house officers, is contrary to the Treaty stipulations between this country and the United States	207
306	19,	Law Officers	St. Alban's raiders. Opinion that the offence with which Lieutenant Young was charged was a bailable offence	207
307	20,	Law Officers	Persons charged with being accessories to the murder of President Lincoln, if found in British territory, cannot be surrendered except under the provisions of the Extradition Treaty	208

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
308	May 20, 1865	Law Officers	Opinion with regard to the policy to be adopted towards Confederate vessels of war, on termination of hostilities in the United States. On the United States' Government formally communicating that they no longer claim to exercise belligerent rights with regard to neutrals, Her Majesty's Government should consider that hostilities have terminated	208
309	23,	Law Officers	Importance of opinion given by the Attorney-General of the United States on certain questions arising out of the terms of capitulations accorded to General Lee, with regard to the recognition of the Confederates as belligerents	209
310	24,	Law Officers	Claim of Messrs. Laurie and Co., of Leith, on the Government of the United States, for compensation on account of the destruction by the Confederates of certain tobacco stored at Richmond. A foreign Government cannot claim compensation for a subject on account of losses incurred by the casualties of war. Must seek same remedy as other citizens	210
311	24,	Law Officers	Treatment of foreigners accused of blockade-running. The United States' Government cannot at the same time claim the rights of belligerents and deny the existence of an enemy	210
312	24,	Law Officers	Passport regulations established by military authorities at Boston. Hardship of such regulations	211
313	24,	Law Officers	Oath exacted by Federal authorities of foreigners residing at Charleston	211
314	25,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. V. O'Connor on account of loss of tobacco at Richmond does not call for interference of Her Majesty's Government	212
315	25,	Law Officers	Approving course pursued by Governor of the Bahamas with regard to vessels suspected by United States' Government to be for service of Confederate States	212
316	26,	Law Officers	Cotton belonging to British subjects in towns and places captured by United States' forces. Her Majesty's Government cannot complain if such cotton is treated in a similar way as that of citizens of the United States	213
317	26,	Law Officers	Consider that United States' vessels of war conveying mails and carrying passengers of all nations should be allowed to use roadsteads at Mariguana and Inagua	213
318	29,	Law Officers	Approving draft of despatch to Sir F. Bruce on subject of Proclamation issued by the President of the United States with regard to Confederate cruizers	214
319	29,	Law Officers	The Governor of the Bahamas had no power to prevent the shipment of certain guns at Nassau, destined, as stated, for the Havana	215
320	June 1,	Law Officers	Concurring in views expressed in despatch to Lord Cowley, with regard to the British and French Governments mutually declaring that they no longer recognize the belligerent rights of the so-called Confederate States	215
321	2,	Law Officers	Opinion on proposed instructions to public Departments on termination of civil war in the United States; and as to right of the United States' Government to claim any ships belonging to the Confederate Government, which may be found within Her Majesty's territory on termination of the war	216
322	2,	Law Officers	Case of the "St. Mary." Question of admission of a prize into British ports. Want of judgment on part of the Governor of the Bahamas. Illegal commission held by Mr. Brain, the commander, from Confederate Government. Capture by him of the "Roanoke" and "Chesapeake," contrary to the regular or ordinary means of warfare. Demand of United States' Consul for extradition of Mr. Brain, on a charge of piracy. Erroneous interpretation of Act of Parliament, by Governor Rawson, regarding issue of preliminary warrant. Decision of Court of Queen's Bench in case of the "Gerrity," that piracy committed on the high seas, on board a United States' vessel, was not a ground for extradition under the Act	217

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
323	June 3, 1865	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Noonan. Although the natural allegiance of a British subject to the Crown is indelible, and he is still a British subject, still Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere in his behalf with the Government of another country in which he has voluntarily sought and acquired the rights of citizenship	218
324	3,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Burley. Suggests that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should use his good offices to procure immediate trial of Mr. Burley	218
325	6,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. E. W. Pratt. The case should be left to the unfettered discretion of Sir F. Bruce	219
326	9,	Law Officers	Case of the "Dashing Wave" and other vessels seized in the Rio Grande. Sale of a ship and cargo without condemnation is unjustifiable. Representations to be made to United States' Government	219
327	15,	Law Officers	Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, declaring the ports of the Southern States open to foreign commerce, with the exception of Texas, and stating that persons trading in violation of such laws would be treated as pirates. Approving draft of instructions to Sir F. Bruce	220
328	20,	Law Officers	Case of J. Thompson, charged with conspiracy in Canada, to levy war against the United States. Approving indictments	220
329	20,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Pinero" and "El Almandaris." Approving conduct of Governor of Canada with regard to their detention on suspicion of being intended for service of Confederate States	221
330	24,	Law Officers	Case of Colonel Grenfell, charged with conspiracy to levy war against the United States. Right of United States' authorities to deal with the case in all its bearings and consequences	221
331	26,	Law Officers	Case of the "Etta" or "Retribution." The ship of an enemy, which has been a commissioned ship of war, cannot, during the continuance of the war, be released, by sale to a neutral, from liability to capture, notwithstanding her being divested of her warlike character	222
332	27,	Law Officers	Opinion regarding instructions to be sent to Governor of Nova Scotia, with respect to admission into Her Majesty's ports, of Mexican vessels carrying letters of marque from President Juarez	222
333	30,	Law Officers	Opinion with regard to decisions of Prize Court at New Orleans, in cases of certain British vessels captured for breaches of blockade:—"Julia," "Morris," "Mary Ellen," "Flash," "Cora," "Bella," "Matilda," "Pet," "Ben Willis," "Anne Sophia," "Albert Edward," "Cora Smyser," "Lone," and "Alabama"	223
334	July 4,	Law Officers	Outrage committed by the United States' troops on property of Mrs. Molyneux, the widow of Her Majesty's late Consul at Savannah. The property being contained within the official residence of Her Majesty's Consul, duly accredited to the United States' Government, the outrage should be brought to the notice of that Government, and compensation requested	224
335	4,	Law Officers	Communication made by General Canby, the Federal commander of the army of West Mississippi, with regard to course which would be pursued by United States' authorities, on subject of cotton, tobacco, and naval stores, the property of foreigners in the port of Mobile	224
336	5,	Law Officers	Imprisonment of Mr. Heslop. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	225
337	5,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. A. Barclay. Damage inflicted upon his property at Savannah by the United States' troops. Mr. Barclay having become a resident citizen in the United States must prefer his petition for redress in the same manner as any other citizen of the United States	225

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
338	July 7, 1865	Law Officers	Approving draft of despatch to Sir F. Bruce, on subject of his correspondence with the United States' Government, with regard to orders issued by Her Majesty's Government relating to Confederate cruizers	226
339	11,	Law Officers	Case of Dr. Blackburn. Accused of conspiring with others in Canada, to send infected clothing into the United States	226
340	11,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Roach, on account of his vessel the "Madeira" having been run down by the American vessel of war "Clyde." Consider that representations should be made to the United States' Government, such cases not being liable to trial in Admiralty Court of the United States	227
341	12,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Noonan. The British Government cannot grant protection to a British subject who has voluntarily become the citizen of another State when residing within that particular State	227
342	12,	Law Officers	Seizure by Federal authorities at Savannah of cotton belonging to foreigners. Opinion of Judge Daly. Property captured in an enemy's town is primâ facie enemy's property, but on proof of neutral ownership it ought to be restored. Case of Messrs. Bernheimer	227
343	19,	Law Officers	Case of the "Chesapeake." Verdict given in favour of Lieutenant Seely before an Admiralty Court in New Brunswick was correct. Charge of piracy	228
344	23,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Rappahannock," formerly Her Majesty's ship "Victor." Her sale at Calais to an English shipowner. Her Majesty's Consul at Calais can grant a certificate under the Merchant Shipping Act, with the understanding that such certificate will not protect her against any future claim of United States' Government	228
345	25,	Law Officers	Hudson's Bay Company. The right to navigate the River Columbia cannot be considered by the Commissioners as an item of property of the Company, to be made the subject of specific and separate valuation	229
346	27,	Law Officers	Naval forces on North American lakes. Notice of American Government of termination of Agreement of 1817 must be considered as cancelled by subsequent letter of Mr. Seward, dated June 16, 1865	229
347	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Mary" or "Alexandra." Observations on Judgment	230
348	31,	Law Officers	Case of the "Wren," forcibly seized by portion of her crew, whilst sailing under British colours, between Havana and Nova Scotia, taken into Key West as a prize, and libelled in the Prize Court as a prize of war. Previous to making representation to the United States' Government, a communication should be made to Mr. Laird, the owner	230
349	Aug. 1,	Law Officers	Case of the "St. Mary," a Confederate prize schooner. Supplies and assistance granted to her subsequent to termination of war	231
350	12,	Law Officers	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Her Majesty's Government should decline to acknowledge any claim against this country on the part of the owner, or to carry on any further correspondence on the subject. Suggests expediency of foreign Governments extending the limits of sovereignty beyond the three-mile limit	231
351	15,	Law Officers	Claim of Messrs. Aitken, Rodger and Co., against the United States' Government, on account of the destruction of certain cotton, during the advance of the troops under General Sherman. Opinion as to liability of neutral property to destruction during the advance of an army through an enemy's country	232
352	25,	Law Officers	Case of the "Alabama" and other vessels. Claim of United States' Government. Observation on proposed draft of answer	233

1865

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
353	Aug. 25, 1865	Law Officers ..	Case of Jeremiah Townsend. Accused of robbery in America. His illegal abduction from this country, contrary to the principles established by existing Treaty of Extradition	233
354	31,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Wren." Observations on decision of United States' Prize Court, with reference to the case of the "Chesapeake" and "Roanoke"	234
355	Sept. 4,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Tuscaloosa." Approving draft of letter to Admiralty respecting surrender to United States' authorities	234
356	4,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Approving proposed circular of Colonial Office, regarding treatment of the "Shenandoah" in the event of her visiting the British dominions	235
357	5,	Law Officers ..	Opinion regarding claims of British subjects on account of property destroyed at Charleston and its vicinity, by United States' forces. Claimants must rely mainly upon establishing their claims before Court of Claims established by Legislature of United States	235
358	5,	Law Officers ..	No special observations required with regard to opinion of United States' Attorney-General, regarding operation of Acts of Congress of March 12, 1863, and July 2, 1864, with respect to "captured and abandoned property" handed over by the United States' forces to the Treasury Department	236
359	5,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "St. Mary." No reason to question propriety of course pursued by Governor Eyre. The title to such vessel, in the event of her having been left derelict within British jurisdiction, must be decided by proper tribunals	236
360	13,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Dashing Wave" and other vessels captured in the Rio Grande. Opinion in favour of Her Majesty's Government defraying cost of appeal	237
361	13,	Law Officers ..	Forcible removal from a British vessel, by the captain of the United States' corvette "St. Mary," of a seaman who had deserted from his vessel. Course pursued by United States' Government is perfectly satisfactory. Improper conduct of British Consul	237
362	14,	Queen's Advocate	Destruction of British property at Mobile, by explosion of powder magazine. As to interference of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington in favour of Mr. E. Jones and other claimants	238
363	14,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Hutton. No legal steps are required of a British subject who, having become naturalized in the United States, desires to reassume his position as a British subject. Cannot, however, claim British protection should he again return to the United States	239
364	21,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Observations on proposed Admiralty instructions with regard to the treatment of the "Shenandoah" as a pirate	239
365	25,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mrs. Molyneux. Consider that the case should be brought officially to the notice of the United States' Government. Although the house in which her property was destroyed did not officially belong to the Consul, still it contained the archives of the Consulate, and the British flag was hoisted over it	240
366	27,	Law Officers ..	Complaint of Government of United States that the Government of Newfoundland had assisted certain convicts to proceed from that colony to the United States. Opinion against confirmation by Her Majesty of Act of Newfoundland Legislature "to continue the punishment of banishment in certain cases"	240
367	27,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Margaret and Jessie." Opinion with regard to opening of negotiations with foreign Governments on subject of extension of the three-mile limit of maritime jurisdiction. Observations on Minutes of Board of Trade and Admiralty	241

No.	Date.		Subject.	Page
368	Oct. 7, 1865	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Maria." Liability to seizure of a vessel sailing unprovided with the necessary papers	242
369	20,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Wren." Legality of capture. Judgment of Prize Court confirms that of Vice-Chancellor Wood, in the case of the United States v. Trenholm, Fraser and Co., as to succession of United States by conquest to the public property of the late Confederate Government	243
370	30,	Law Officers ..	Case of Mr. E. Pratt. Cannot claim compensation on account of his imprisonment by United States' authorities, he having taken part, as chief officer of the "City of Richmond," in the armament of the Confederate privateer "Stonewall"	243
371	Nov. 1,	Law Officers ..	Approving, with certain alterations, the note proposed to be sent to Mr. Adams in reply to claims and complaints of United States' Government, arising out of course pursued by Great Britain during civil war	245
372	3,	Law Officers ..	Observations on decisions of the United States' Prize Courts in the cases of "Ella," "Annie," "Wando," "Lote Hurley," "Sea Witch," "John A. Hazard"	245
373	6,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Her arrival in the Mersey without any flag flying. Opinion in favour of her forcible detention. Question of ownership should be decided by Court of Admiralty	246
374	7,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Her surrender to Custom-house authorities at Liverpool. Opinion in favour of her being delivered up to Mr. Adams on behalf of the Government of the United States. Such portion of the crew as are British subjects should be proceeded against for violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act. The remainder of crew should not be detained	246
375	7,	Queen's Advocate	Case of Mr. Crutchett. A British subject long resident and domiciled, to all intents and purposes, in a foreign State, acquiring real property in that State, must have recourse and submit, like a native subject, to the law of the land administered in the proper legal tribunals, with respect to that property	248
376	8,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Cannot detain crew except under legal warrant. No question of extradition for piracy can arise; that crime, by the decision of the Judges in the case of the "Joseph Gerrity," not coming under the Treaty of Extradition	248
377	9,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Mary" or "Alexandra." Approving certificate of Judge that there was no reasonable cause of seizure	249
378	9,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Application of Hawaiian Consul at Liverpool for prosecution of crew of the "Shenandoah," for destruction of a vessel sailing under Hawaiian colours	250
379	10,	Attorney-General	Case of the "Shenandoah." Opinion as to liability of crew to be tried for violation of Foreign Enlistment Act, or for destruction of United States' ships	250
380	10,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Suggests omission in letter to Mr. Adams, of the words "and other property, &c."	251
381	11,	Law Officers ..	Case of the "Shenandoah." Approving amended draft of note to Mr. Adams, in consequence of the release of the crew, and the delivery of the vessel to the United States' Consul. The fact of the enlistment of the British subjects forming part of the crew on the high seas would still render them liable to trial under the Foreign Enlistment Act	252
382	14,	Law Officers ..	Approving draft of instructions to Sir F. Bruce regarding threatened raid of Fenians into Canada from the United States	252

1865

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
383	Nov. 14, 1865	Law Officers	Cases of the "Shenandoah" and "Alabama." Further representations of Mr. Adams. The refusal of Her Majesty's Government to surrender that portion of the crew of the "Alabama" which sought refuge on board the "Deerhound" was in accordance with the laws of this country. Case of the "Sea King" or "Shenandoah." Her Majesty's Government could not be responsible for the arming and equipment of that vessel beyond the limits of British jurisdiction. Neither the Executive Power of England, nor the Act of Congress of 1818 of the United States, extend to the detention of an unarmed merchant-vessel on mere suspicion. Her Majesty's Government have not the power to prosecute British subjects under Foreign Enlistment Act, if violation of the Act occurs beyond the jurisdiction of Her Majesty. The admission of the "Shenandoah" into British ports was not a violation of the Declaration of Neutrality issued by Great Britain with regard to civil war in America. Observations on complaint of Mr. Adams that no legal proceedings had been taken against Confederate Agents in this country.	252
384	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Shenandoah." Complaint of Hawaiian Consul at Liverpool, respecting destruction by the "Shenandoah" of a vessel sailing under Hawaiian colours. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to give official assistance in this matter, as the "Shenandoah" must be considered either as a belligerent or a pirate. In the latter case, the crew of the "Shenandoah" would be amenable to the courts of justice in this country	255
385	15,	Law Officers	Case of the "Shenandoah." Approving course pursued by Captain Paynter to ascertain whether any portion of crew were British subjects. Insufficiency of evidence to prove case of piracy	256
386	17,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Shenandoah." Approving draft of proposed answer to Mr. Adams' note	257
387	18,	Law Officers	Cases of the vessels captured in the Rio Grande, the "Sir W. Peel," "Jenny," "Science," and "Dashing Wave." Question of costs and damages	257
388	18,	Law Officers	Case of the "Wren." Consider that the "Wren" was rightly condemned	258
389	23,	Law Officers	Consider that Her Majesty's Government should not adopt principles laid down in Mr. Jefferson's letter to Mr. Hammond of May 13, 1797, in reply to representations of Mr. Adams. The principles laid down in Mr. Adams' letter to M. Correa de Serra, of March 14, 1818, might, however, be safely adopted	258
390	27,	Law Officers	Case of the "Kate Gregg." Approving opinion of the Attorney-General of the Bahamas, with regard to grant of a British register to a vessel built in England and sold during civil war to a resident at Charleston	259
391	28,	Law Officers	Cases of the "Shenandoah" and "Alabama." Amended draft of instruction to Sir F. Bruce, regarding answer to complaints of United States' Government	259
392	Dec. 5,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Crutchett. Claim on account of damage done to his property during occupation by United States' troops. His having become domiciled in the United States, and having purchased landed property, necessitates his having recourse to the same legal remedies as citizens of the United States	259
393	11,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. F. R. Reading. Improper oath administered to Mr. Reading as the condition of his release. The United States' Government did not exceed its rights, under international law, in punishment inflicted upon Mr. Reading	261
394	29,	Law Officers	Case of the "Kate Gregg." Opinion with regard to threatened capture, by the United States, of all vessels formerly the property of residents in the so-styled Confederate States, such vessels having been subsequently sold to a British subject, and having obtained a British register	261

VENEZUELA.

No.	Date.		SUBJECT.	Page
395	Jan. 17, 1865	Law Officers	Case of the "Albion." The owners, Messrs. Leech and Co., must seek redress in same manner as any other owners of Venezuelan vessels, the "Albion" having been chartered and employed during the civil war by the Government of Venezuela	263
396	20,	Queen's Advocate	Notification of raising of the blockade of Guayana should be published in the "London Gazette"	263
397	27,	Queen's Advocate	Claim of Mr. B. Daly on the Venezuelan Government. Instructions given to Mr. Orme on March 30, 1860, to insist upon payment of money due to Mr. Daly, should still be adhered to	264
398	Feb. 10,	Law Officers	Claim of Mr. Chitty on the Government of Venezuela, arising out of loss of property incurred by him in consequence of the emancipation of slaves in that country in 1854. Reluctance of Her Majesty's Government to interfere in favour of British subjects who have become domiciled in a foreign country, and the owners of landed property. Should decline to interfere in case of slave property	265
399	22,	Queen's Advocate	Difficulties with regard to payment of claims of Messrs. Syers, Graf, Nocke, Myer and Co., Andreal and Sprick, for the Venezuelan Government	265
400	28,	Law Officers	Case of the "Albion." Her Majesty's Government is not called upon to interfere	266
401	Mar. 3,	Queen's Advocate	Claims of British subjects on the Government of Venezuela. Evidence which should be required by Mr. Edwardes to certify to claimants being British subjects	267
402	20,	Queen's Advocate	Claims of Messrs. Schloss and Co., and Mr. Michelsen, on the Government of Venezuela. Her Majesty's Government should urge settlement of claims	268
403	20,	Law Officers	Case of Mr. Chitty. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere	269
404	July 22,	Queen's Advocate	Venezuelan bondholders. Her Majesty's Government not called upon to interfere further in their behalf	269
405	Sept. 12,	Queen's Advocate	Case of the "Serafina." Opinion in favour of acceptance of General Falcon's offer of settlement	270
406	20,	Queen's Advocate	Opinion regarding Decree of Venezuelan Government respecting nationality of all persons born in that Republic	270
407	Dec. 23,	Queen's Advocate	Claims of British subjects on Government of Venezuela. Fraudulent claims. Suggests adoption of Report made by Mr. Edwardes. Payment of 6 per cent. interest.	271

A. S. GREEN.

Foreign Office,
March 13, 1867.

1865

Printed for the use of the Foreign Office. March 1867.

CONFIDENTIAL.

Law Officers' Reports: 1865.

Austria.

No. 1.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 24, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me the accompanying papers respecting a commission issued by the Court of Queen's Bench to the Provincial Tribunal of Vienna,* for the examination of witnessess in re Thierry v. Lord Fermoy. That it appears that the Tribunal in question has refused to give effect to this commission upon the grounds, firstly, that it is not admissible, according to Austrian that law, officers of the Government should be heard in evidence in matters which have come to their knowledge in their official capacity; and, secondly, that the Court of Queen's Bench offers no promise of reciprocity in favour of Austria with regard to similar cases, and that with reference to this latter point the Chargé d'Affaires incloses a Memorandum, drawn up by Mr. Howe, a Barrister employed in the case, from which it would appear that the second objection of the Tribunal is founded in ignorance of the English law on the subject; and that the Chargé d'Affaires inquires whether it would be advisable that the Austrian Government should be informed of the real state of the law.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a letter, in original, addressed by the Provincial Tribunal to the Court of Queen's Bench; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should be taken with regard to them.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the first objection raised by the Austrian Tribunal, which relates to the exemption of certain persons, exempt by privilege, from the liability to be examined in a Court of Justice, it must be admitted that the Tribunals of every State are entitled to decide what evidence they will consider admissible in their own Courts, or in judicial investigations carried on in their territories, and enforced by their authority. And if the Austrian Tribunal remains insensible to the argument that the evidence sought to be obtained is to be used in the Tribunal of another State where it is admissible, nothing further can be done in this matter.

With respect to the second objection, namely, the non-reciprocity of British Tribunals, it was well founded before the passing of the 19 and 20 Vict., cap. 113, which gave British Courts the power of aiding foreign Tribunals, which they did not before possess. The objection on the ground of non-reciprocity is really untenable, and probably would be abandoned if this statute were clearly and fully brought, as it ought to be, to the notice of the Austrian Tribunal.

It seems to me that it would be very proper that your Lordship should give instructions to Her Majesty's Representative at Vienna to forward by every means which may be open to his discretion, the execution of this commission. But it must be borne in mind that the application for the execution of it is founded on principles of comity, and not of strict right.

---

* Mr. Bonar, No. 9, January 12, 1865.

1865

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 2.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 14, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Vienna (No. 243), stating that a British subject, married in Austria according to the rites of the local Protestant communities, has applied to him to have his marriage officially registered in England; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would inform your Lordship whether this can be done, and what instructions should, in my opinion, be given to Lord Bloomfield on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Lord Bloomfield should be instructed to the effect, that Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any means by which a marriage of a British subject in Austria, according to the lex loci, can be officially registered in England.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Bavaria.

No. 3.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Munich dated the 18th instant, respecting the claim of Dr. Stenb, a notary public of that city, for 100 florins, stated to be due to him on account of legal assistance rendered to Mr. Edwardes, an English solicitor, who was in August last bearer of a commission from the English Divorce Court to Her Majesty's Legation at Munich, for the purpose of taking the evidence on oath of Mrs. Yeatman, who was a party to certain proceedings then pending in the Divorce Court.

That it is alleged that Mr. Edwardes, who has since returned to London, has hitherto failed to settle the claim of Dr. Stenb, and the latter having now applied to Her Majesty's Legation for redress, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the steps, if any, which can properly be taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is to be regretted that Her Majesty's Minister at Munich allowed Mr. Edwardes to depart from that place without paying Dr. Stenb his lawful fee, or taking from Mr. Edwardes a proper written security that he would discharge this obligation as soon as he arrived in London; for I cannot advise your Lordship that it would be right and proper for your Lordship to take any steps in this matter.

I have, however, placed myself in communication with the Registrar of the Divorce Court, who obtained from Mr. Edwardes, on taxing his costs in the suit, a promise that he would pay Dr. Stenb his fee.

Dr. Stenb may, if he pleases, petition the Judge of the Divorce Court as an additional security; but I cannot with certainty say that the Judge would think he had the power to enforce the prayer of the petition: possibly, however, he might refuse to allow the suit to be proceeded with until the fee had been paid.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Borneo.

No. 4.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 5, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence as marked in the margin* upon the subject of a dispute which has arisen between the Labuan Coal Company and the Sultan of Brunei, as to the amount of rent due by the Company for certain mines held by them at Moarra, together with the draft of a despatch upon the same subject which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Consul at Brunei; and to request that I would take this draft into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the letter of your Lordship is right and proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Brazil.

No. 5.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter from Sir Alexander Reid dated 5th instant, requesting the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to bring about a settlement of the affairs of the late Mr. Alexander Davidson who died possessed of property in Brazil; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with a report stating the course which should, in my opinion, be taken in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I cannot discover, in the very confused statement of Sir Alexander Reid, any special ground for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government with respect to the

---

* Two volumes; Consul-General Callaghan, No. 5, June 17, 1864.

1865

affairs of that gentleman, connected with his executorship of a Mr. Davidson, who appeared to have died domiciled in Scotland, but with property, real and personal, in Brazil.

I think that Sir Alexander Reid should be informed that with respect to property situated in Brazil, he must adopt whatever course he may be legally advised would be most proper to enable him to discharge his duties as executor in that country; but that inasmuch as he represents that the Government of Brazil has in some way, though it is not very clear in what way, interfered with the ordinary course of justice in his case, Her Majesty's Government will give directions to Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro to afford such assistance (if any) as, in the exercise of his discretion, he may think proper, in order to enable Sir Alexander Reid to obtain justice at the hands of the proper Brazilian authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 6.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Mr. Reeves relative to his claim to the estate of the late Mr. Robert James Renny, of which he states that he has been defrauded in consequence of the proceedings of the Brazilian Courts of law; and also a correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Messrs. Burke and Barry, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Consul at Rio de Janeiro bearing upon this subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion: first, on the merits of the case; and secondly, if it is one in which Her Majesty's Government might interfere in favour of the party, whether, notwithstanding the interruption of diplomatic relations with Brazil, there would be any objection to Her Majesty's Consul at Rio representing the case to the Brazilian Government in an unofficial manner.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this appears to me to be a case of very gross and scandalous injustice, lamentable both on account of the injury inflicted on a private individual, one of Her Majesty's subjects, and also on account of the incredibly corrupt administration of justice in the highest Courts of the Brazilian Empire which it reveals. I am afraid that the Brazilian Government is entitled to refuse to listen to any remonstrance on this subject which does not come from a regular diplomatic organ, but I think it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Consul should be instructed to represent this case unofficially to the Brazilian Government. If he be instructed to do so, he should take care to prepare a statement of all the circumstances in careful order, and in as succinct a form as may be consistent with perspicuity. A copy of such a statement should be kept; it may hereafter be very useful. In it the letter of Senhor Cansanção de Sinimbú, Minister of Justice, should I think, find a place.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 7.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, for any observations I may have to make thereupon, a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro, inclosing a memorandum which, in accordance with the suggestion made in my Report of the 13th January last, he had presented to the Brazilian Minister for Foreign Affairs respecting Mr. Reeves' claim to the estate of the late Mr. Robert James Kenny.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro has taken a wise and judicious course, and that his memorandum was properly drawn up.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 8.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 13th January last, relative to Mr. Reeves' claim to the estate of the late Mr. Robert James Renny, of which he states that he has been defrauded in consequence of the proceedings of the Brazilian Courts of Law, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Rio de Janeiro (No. 60), to whom the substance of my above-mentioned Report was communicated, reporting that the Brazilian Government, notwithstanding the representations made by him on behalf of the claimant, have rejected Mr. Reeves' claim. A letter which has been received from Mr. Reeves, dated September 30th ultimo, upon this subject, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Consul Hunt's despatch into consideration, together with the former papers, also inclosed; and report to your Lordship my opinion as to what further steps it is competent for Her Majesty's Government to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Senhor Sinimbú, the Brazilian Minister of Justice (an office analogous, I presume, to the Home Secretary of this country), in a letter which was before me on the last occasion, and which is properly recited in the memorial of Consul Hunt, deliberately says that "this is an infamous affair, one of those enormities so much in vogue in this place" (Rio de Janeiro), "by means of which people are defrauded of their property," "an act of piracy;" and expresses an anxiety "to save our country from the ignominy of so unjust a judgment," having stated premises drawn from the history of this case which fully warrant his conclusion.

That as far as I am able to form a judgment from the papers before me, I entirely agree with the opinion of this high Brazilian functionary. It therefore seems to me proper that the claim of Mr. Reeves should be again pressed upon the Brazilian Government through the proper channel of Her Majesty's Minister, now that diplomatic relations between England and Brazil are renewed.

Probably the case is without precedent, in which, after such an expression of opinion from such an authority as I have referred to, a Government has refused either to compel the due administration of justice in their own tribunals to a foreigner, or to make compensation for the injury which a corrupt judgment has, in the opinion of their own Minister of Justice, inflicted upon him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 9.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 16, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th December instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would have the goodness to inform you whether a person born in Rio de Janeiro of British parents, and having left Brazil when very young, would, on now returning to Brazil, be liable to be considered and treated as a subject of Brazil, and therefore be not entitled to claim to be protected in that country as a British subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the law of Brazil be like the law of England on this subject, the fact of birth in that State would give rise to the obligation of allegiance; and Her Majesty's Government could not properly contend against the application of a law identical with that of Great Britain; but if there be no such law in Brazil, and the mere accident of birth, without formal naturalization, or some specified term of residence, is insufficient to found allegiance there, then the fact that this person was born of British parents would entitle him to British protection until he did some act whereby, according to Brazilian law, he becomes a subject of Brazil.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Chile.

No. 10.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 17, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith various despatches received yesterday afternoon from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile,* respecting the hostile measures adopted by a Spanish squadron against that Republic. That among those measures I should find in Inclosure 7 in No. 33, a notice of blockade of the Chilean ports, and the instructions referred to appear to be those annexed to Inclosure No. 4, of which I should find a translation among the inclosures in the letter from the Admiralty, also transmitted.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit a newspaper in which were translations of some other inclosures, and he was pleased to request that I would take these several papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship, at my earliest convenience: 1st. As to the sufficiency of the notification of blockade, and if it is sufficient, that I would prepare a notice for insertion in the Gazette; and 2ndly. As to any other facts disclosed in the correspondence to which I consider the attention of Her Majesty's Government should more particularly be directed. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that the mail for Chile will be dispatched this evening.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the notification of the blockade is sufficient, and I have accordingly prepared a notification for insertion in the Gazette.

According to the opinion of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, the blockade of Valparaiso is supported by an adequate force; whether the other ports in Chile are or are not effectually blockaded is a question of fact to be determined by the circumstances of each case.

It should be clearly understood both by the Commander of Her Majesty's Naval Forces in the Pacific and by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile that Her Majesty's Government will only récognize an effective blockade, and that the notification in the Gazette does not imply more than a formal announcement of a statement made by the Spanish naval commander, and that by an effective blockade of any port must be understood the presence of a sufficient force to prevent, in ordinary weather, the ingress and egress of vessels.

Assuming the blockade to be effective, it does not appear to me that the instructions issued by the Commander-in-chief of the Spanish squadron are oppressive to neutrals.

Looking to the 9th Article of those Instructions, however, with respect to the Chilean privateers with letters of marque, it is obvious that grave questions may arise. I am unable to see at present how such vessels can be lawfully considered as "pirates."

With regard to the mail-steamer, it would, of course, be very desirable that some arrangement should be effected whereby she may be allowed to carry letters to the different ports of Chile, but I think this can only be done by the consent of the Spanish Admiral.

---

* Mr. Thornton, Nos. 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42.

It is to be observed that the 20th Article of the Instructions of the Spanish Naval Commander is as follows: "You must not hinder neutral men-of-war from entering the port which you are blockading." Therefore, in the event of there being any danger to the lives of Her Majesty's subjects in any Chilean port, no question would arise as to the right of one of Her Majesty's ships to enter the port and take them on board.

It does not occur to me that there is any other point to which the notice of Her Majesty's Government should be directed. The remarkable character of the grounds assigned by the Spanish Government for the prosecution of this war will, of course, not escape attention.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 10.

Notice for the "London Gazette."

Foreign Office, November 17, 1865.

IT is hereby notified that the Earl of Clarendon, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received information from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile, that on September the 24th last the Commander-in-chief of the Spanish Naval Forces in the Pacific communicated to him, the said Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General of Great Britain, "that in compliance with the orders of his Government he declares the diplomatic relations with Chile broken off, and her ports in a state of blockade."

No. 11.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 18, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th November instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a translation of a letter which had been received from the Spanish Minister at this Court, stating that a privateer is being fitted out in a British port with the object of attacking Spanish vessels in the vicinity of the West India Islands during the hostilities which have recently broken out between Spain and Chile, and the Spanish Minister requested the interference of Her Majesty's Government to prevent such a proceeding.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and inform your Lordship of our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government can take any, and if so what, steps in the matter represented by the Spanish Minister.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of more definite information we do not see what steps can possibly be taken by Her Majesty's Government.

It would, in our opinion, be proper to state to the Spanish Minister that Her Majesty's Government will be ready to take all such measures as may be in their power, according to the laws of this country, for the prevention of the illegal equipment of any vessel for purposes hostile to Spain, on receiving definite information, capable of being supported by some legal evidence, as to the facts relative to such intended equipment, but that at present they are in possession of no such information or evidence.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 12.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 27, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 18th instant, on a representation from the Spanish Minister at this Court respecting a rumour that had reached him of a vessel being fitted out as a privateer to cruize against Spanish commerce, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two Reports made to the Treasury, dated the 23rd and 25th instant, respecting vessels fitting out in certain ports of the United Kingdom calculated to be employed for warlike purposes; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion whether any, and if so what, measures should be taken in regard to such vessels.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, although the four ships referred to in these papers all appear to be designed for warlike purposes, there is at present nothing to show that any one of them is intended for any purpose prohibited by the Foreign Enlistment Act; and the statement that the two ships in Messrs. Laird's yard are intended for the Brazilian and Peruvian Governments may, in all probability, be true, as they certainly cannot have been built in anticipation of a war between Spain and Chile.

With respect to the "Pampero," and the other ship at Glasgow, it is less improbable that the agents of the Chilean Government may have been in treaty for one or both of them, as the "Pampero," having been prevented from fulfilling her original destination for the Confederate service, may have been known to be on the builders' hands ready for any purchaser when the news of the commencement of hostilities between Spain and Chile arrived in this country.

We think that it may be advisable at once to direct the attention of the Lord Advocate of Scotland to the question whether any measures can properly be taken by the law of that country for the purpose of delaying the departure of those two vessels until their destination can be ascertained.

It will be for your Lordship to consider whether it will or will not also be desirable to address any inquiry to Messrs. Laird on the subject of the ships at Liverpool. We observe, however, that any such inquiry appears to be deemed unnecessary by Mr. Gardner, the Collector of Customs at that port.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 13.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 30, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 46), inclosing copies of his correspondence with the Panulcillo Mining Company on certain points connected with the blockade of the Chilean coast by the naval forces of Spain; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, if my recollection be correct, one of the instructions of the Spanish Admiral to the blockading cruizers is to warn, before seizure, any merchant-vessel approaching the blockaded port; and if this be so, the vessels of the Mining Company would not be seized unless they persisted in breaking the blockade.

Mr. Thomson should be instructed to state to the British subjects who apply to him that he has no power to protect vessels from the penal consequences of breaking the blockade; and that, though it is true that the blockade is illegal unless supported by an adequate force, that the question whether the force be adequate is one which, according to the English precedents, is cognizable by the Prize Court, subject, of course, to the interference of Her Majesty's Government if that Court should not administer justice, either as to the facts of, or the law applicable to, the case before it.

Meanwhile it is to be observed that the apprehension entertained by the owners as to the seizure of their vessels is rather in favour of the adequacy of the blockading force.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 14.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 18th October, with its inclosures, which your Lordship has received from Mr. George Rose Innes, containing observations as to the blockade by Spain of the Chilean coast, and inclosing a certified copy of his protest against this blockade; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Innes' letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think an answer should be sent to Mr. Innes to the following effect:—That a blockade which is insufficient—making all reasonable allowances for weather and accident—to prevent the general ingress and egress of ships from the ports alleged to be blockaded is invalid in law. But that the main question is always one of mixed fact and law, and, generally speaking, cognizable in the first instance by the Prize Court of the blockading State, subject, if justice be not done, to a demand for redress from the State to which the injured owner belongs.

That Her Majesty's Government, however, have not failed to impress upon the Spanish Government that the blockade cannot be recognized as valid unless the conditions which have been mentioned are fulfilled.

I venture to add that it appears to me worthy of your Lordship's immediate consideration whether the Spanish Government should not be apprized that Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the length of coast of which the blockade is notified, find it difficult to understand how a bonâ fide blockade can be established by the small number of Spanish ships which they are informed are now employed in this service; and that the notification of an unreal and imperfect blockade not only inflicts severe injury upon neutral commerce, but inevitably raises international questions of a very grave character, which it would be most desirable to avoid.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 15.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 9.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December , 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed letter which has been received from the Panulcillo Mining Company, stating that the blockade of some of the ports in the neighbourhood of their property is quite nominal, and requesting to be informed whether vessels arriving at such ports for the purpose of discharging their cargoes and loading again will receive the protection of Her Majesty's ships of war; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to this communication.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think an answer to the Representatives of the Panulcillo Mining Company should be sent to the following purport:—

That unless the blockade announced by the Spanish Admiral be sustained by naval forces which, after making due allowance for accidental circumstances, may be considered as generally adequate to prevent the ingress or egress of vessels into and from the ports alleged to be blockaded, it will be invalid in law, and it must be presumed will be pronounced so to be by the proper Prize Court.

That Her Majesty being neutral in the present war between Spain and Chile, it would not be proper that Her Majesty's ships should be ordered to prevent the lawful exercise of belligerent rights by either belligerent over British ships.

1865

That Her Majesty's Representative in Chile cannot be directed to take upon himself the responsibility of declaring what ports of the coast of Chile are or are not duly blockaded.

That Her Majesty's Government will not fail to protect Her Majesty's subjects against any act of either belligerent which they may be duly advised constitutes any infringement of international law.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 16.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Chile (No. 58), respecting an application which has been made to him to take Spanish subjects under British protection, together with a previous despatch from the same gentleman, showing the measures adopted by the Government of Chile against the subjects of Spain; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion, if possible by to-day, as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Thomson on the question of protection of Spanish subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the facts that the conduct of the Chilean Government is not only at variance with modern international usage, which lies at the basis of international law, but also a plain violation of the Treaty between Chile and Spain, with reference to the treatment of Spanish subjects in Chile after the breaking out of war between the two States, and that the provisions on this important subject are also contained in the Treaties of Chile with other States, and especially with England in the Article of the Treaty referred to by Mr. Thomson;—having regard to these facts, the representation addressed by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires to the Chilean Government was, in my judgment, perfectly proper.

It appears to me quite consistent with strict neutrality that foreign States should very strongly remonstrate against the principle involved in this precedent of disregarding both the general international usage of modern times, and the express obligations of a Treaty, in a matter which so nearly and deeply affects every civilized State.

I am of opinion nevertheless that it would be difficult, in the present circumstances, to justify upon strict principles of international law the application of any coercive measures by England to Chile in order to secure the full observance of the provisions of the Spanish Treaty; but I think that if the lives of the innocent subjects of Spain, an ally of Her Majesty, peaceably resident in Chile, from which the Chilean Government will not allow them to depart, were to be seriously threatened, that active intervention on their behalf by the forces of Her Majesty and of other neutral States would be justifiable, and afford no just ground of war to Chile.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 17.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 30th ultimo respecting the capture of the vessel "Mattias Cousino" by the Spanish squadron off Valparaiso, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch and its inclosures received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Chile (No. 59), on the same subject, together with the instruction founded on my Report which was addressed to him by the last mail; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship as to any further instructions which should be sent to Mr. Thomson on the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I still entertain great doubt whether the belligerent had not a right to consider this vessel to be de facto Chilean. The question of the reality of the transfer to a neutral owner of a vessel which belonged to a belligerent owner is one which often occupies the investigation of a Prize Court.

It is not the mere fact of carrying neutral papers that ousts the right of the belligerent to capture a vessel. It must be shown that she is bonâ fide and entirely divested of all belligerent interest. This must be proved before the Prize Court of Spain: as to the proceedings in which, the owner must take the same measures as a foreign owner would take with reference to a British Prize Court. It may be as well, however, that my view of the law should be communicated by Mr. Thomson to the owner, as it may prevent his incurring useless expense and annoyance.

I have only to add that Mr. Thomson should steadily refuse to recognize the Spanish Admiral's ship as a legitimate Prize Court—a character which, indeed, Admiral Pareja does not now appear to claim for it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 18.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 16, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 8th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two letters, dated the 14th instant, which have been received from the Home Office, containing further particulars respecting the steamer "Eagle," now in the Victoria Docks, and supposed to be destined to be used by the Chilean Government as a privateer against Spain; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether any steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there seems to us to be amply sufficient evidence in this case of such an equipment and armament as would be illegal, if there were anything to show that the "Eagle" is intended for the service of the Chilean Government, or to take part in hostilities between Chile and Spain.

If there were any evidence whatever of such a destination we should not hesitate to advise the immediate seizure of the ship. But on this essential point there is at present a total defect of evidence.

It is for Her Majesty's Government to determine whether they will assume the responsibility of detaining this vessel before any such evidence (without which a seizure or forcible detention could not be justified in a Court of law) is forthcoming. For ourselves, we could not advise that step unless, in the judgment of Her Majesty's Government, or of those on whose information they rely, there were at least strong and reasonable grounds for believing that such evidence, although not as yet in their possession, might, in the event of any detention or seizure, be obtained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 19.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 54), inclosing copies of a correspondence with the firm of Myers, Bland, and Co., as to the steps he was prepared to take in certain supposed cases in connection with the war between Chile and Spain; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon with as little delay as possible, as the mail will be made up on the 16th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I beg leave to refer to my former Reports upon this blockade, more especially to that of the 30th ultimo, as to the course which I think Her Majesty's Representative at Santiago ought to pursue.

The letter of Her Majesty's Representative to Messrs. Myers, Bland, and Co. appears to me proper, but I think it would be desirable that in any further communication which he may make, he should add, in conformity with the suggestions of my former Report that the questions arising out of these blockades are questions of international law which, generally speaking, must in the first instance be discussed and decided upon in a Prize Court, properly constituted, of the belligerent.

That such is the course which Great Britain has invariably pursued herself towards neutrals in all wars in which she has been engaged as a belligerent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 20.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Chile (No. 55), respecting the arrangements which have been made by Commodore Harvey and Admiral Pareja on certain points connected with the blockade of the Chilean ports; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon with as little delay as possible, as the mail for Chile will be made up on the 16th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the arrangement which appears to have been effected between Commodore Harvey and Admiral Pareja, as contained in the papers submitted to me, is one which should receive the approbation of Her Majesty's Government.

It is of course to be understood that the list of blockaded ports is accepted by Her Majesty's Government, subject to the condition that such ports are actually and de facto blockaded by a force adequate for the purpose, and that neutral vessels seized on the allegation that they are endeavouring to break even these blockades are to be legally tried before a properly constituted tribunal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 21.

The Queen's Advocate to Mr. Hammond.—(Received December 19.)

My dear Sir, Doctors' Commons, December 19, 1865.

I DID not gather from the covering letter that my opinion was desired as to whether Commodore Harvey had acted rightly in his arrangements with the Spanish Admiral as to the blockade.

I am of opinion that his conduct was extremely judicious, and that his arrangements with the Spanish Admiral were very favourable to neutral commerce.

I am, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

China.

No. 22.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 17, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch dated December 8, 1864, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at Shanghae relative to the claim of the Chinese authorities to confiscate the British steamer "Mercury," and the charges of piracy and murder brought against Mr. J. C. Baynton, the master of that vessel; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the papers before me raise two questions: 1st. Was Captain Baynton guilty of piracy and murder, or either? 2ndly. Was the "Mercury" confiscable under the Treaty of Tien-tsin? In order to answer these questions properly it is necessary to distinguish between two periods; the periods before and after the 25th of May, 1864.

It appears that the "Mercury" was chartered 9th April, 1864, by certain Chinese authorities, whom Captain Baynton did, and reasonably might, consider as sufficient for the purpose to protect certain Chinese fisheries in the Chusan Archipelago. The charterer was Hungtao, an officer having a button of the fourth rank, the Agent of the Taoutae of the Province. During the period the "Mercury" was so engaged, her British character was in obeyance; she did not carry British papers or a British flag. Whether or not she transgressed any Consular directions in being so employed, does not clearly appear, but the fact would not materially affect the answer to the questions proposed.

During this period the vessel must be considered as Chinese, and therefore unaffected by the Treaty of Tien-tsin. Disputes arose among the Chinese authorities as to whether Hungtao was warranted in employing the "Mercury," or whether this power was not vested in another Chinese officer (Yu Shih-kao). The British authorities interfered. Mr. Brown, the Acting Commissioner of Customs at Ningpo (who appears to have held different opinions, at different times, as to the lawfulness of the employment of the "Mercury"), caused the vessel to be brought into Ningpo by a revenue cutter: there Mr. Holt, Acting Consul, arranged, as he thought, the whole matter. Under his directions the "Mercury" was to resume her British character, flag, and papers. Captain Baynton was warned not to go again to Chusan, and the "Mercury" actually cleared for Foo-chow on the 25th May. It is after this period that the difficulty of the case begins.

Unfortunately Captain Baynton had not been paid for the services of the "Mercury" during the former period. Hungtao told Captain Baynton that he had not the money at Ningpo, but promised that if he would take him on leaving the port to one of his (Hungtao's) stations, he would collect and give him the money.

Captain Baynton most unwisely assented, and called at several places, Changtoo, Kingshan, and Pinkeamum; no money was, however, obtained, but the captain allowed Hungtao to carry off from Changtoo a boat which he asserted was his, but which afterwards turned out did not belong to him.

At Changtoo they were encountered by a fleet, under the authority of the rival Chinese officer (Yu Shih-kao), and a conflict took place, which ended in some lives being lost. The taking of the boat is the foundation of the charge of piracy, and the loss of these lives the foundation of the charge of murder. The whole matter was very properly investigated under the orders of Sir H. Parkes. The Chinese authorities, however, contributed very little evidence, and seem to have been with difficulty persuaded to produce that little; in fact, they acted throughout as if they knew that Captain Baynton was not guilty. Captain Baynton's defence was that he was fired upon first by the fleet of junks; that Hungtao, a Chinese officer of high rank, assured him they were pirates, and requested him to fire; that he believed him and acted in self-defence only. And on the whole it appears to me that there is no sufficient evidence to warrant Captain Baynton being put on his trial either for piracy or murder.

With respect, however, to the confiscation of the "Mercury" a different answer must be given. The XLVIIth Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin provides, "British merchant-vessels are not entitled to resort to other than the ports of trade declared open by this Treaty. They are not unlawfully to enter other ports in China, or to carry on clandestine trade along the coasts thereof. Any vessel violating this provision shall, with her cargo, be subject to confiscation by the Chinese Government."

1865

I think the "Mercury" has been guilty of entering forbidden ports in China, and is liable to confiscation, if the Chinese authorities insist upon the enforcement of this penalty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 23.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 25, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 17th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Pekin respecting the case of the "Mercury" (No. 70, December 1, 1864); and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether I am of opinion that any further observations and instructions should be addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in this case beyond those contained in the accompanying draft of a despatch sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires on the 27th ultimo (No. 56).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that no further observations or instructions need be addressed to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in this case beyond those contained in the draft of the despatch.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 24.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 9.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 8, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking (No. 80, December 29) respecting the case of Dr. Rice, a British subject convicted of killing a Chinese at Hankow; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that the view taken of this case by Mr. Wade is correct; namely, that Mr. Webster committed grave faults both in omitting to send Dr. Rice for trial before the Supreme Court at Hong Kong, and also in neglecting to report this case in a proper manner to Mr. Wade.

It is probably not necessary for us to express an opinion upon the offence itself, which was committed by Dr. Rice; but we think the facts were such as to make it proper that Dr. Rice should, at least, have been tried upon the more serious charge of murder, which (certainly not without apparent cause) was brought against him by the Chinese authorities.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 25.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to transmit to us the accompanying drafts which have been prepared for Sir Edmund Hornby, Her Majesty's Consuls in China and Japan, and Her Majesty's Ministers in China and Japan, in transmitting to them the Order in Council of the 9th of March last; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion whether these drafts are proper and sufficient.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of the Order in Council.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the drafts, with certain alterations, will be proper and sufficient for their object. In considering them, we have availed ourselves of the assistance of Mr. Reilly, by whom the recent Order in Council and Rules of Procedure were prepared; and we think the alterations suggested by him in the copies of the several drafts to which we have affixed our initials are proper to be made.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 26.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Wade (No. 23), relative to proceedings taken at Tamsuy in the case of Mr. R. D. Enscoe, master and owner of the British schooner "Madge," on account of an attempt made by him to land clandestinely a quantity of opium at the port of Kelung; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this mattter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an attentive perusal of these papers leads us to the conclusion that the letter of Mr. Wade to Mr. Swinhoe contains, in every respect, an able and just exposition of the conduct which ought to have been, and a proper censure of the conduct was, pursued at Tamsuy in case of the "Madge;" and, with respect to the port of Kelung, we are of opinion that Mr. Wade was right in holding the Rules 2 and 3 (to which he refers) to be applicable to the present condition of that port.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 27.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 21, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence,* respecting proceedings taken by Mr. Vice-Consul Markham at Shanghae, in regard to certain seamen belonging to the British ship "Forerunner;" and also a letter from the Board of Trade, dated May 13, relative to this case; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, with reference to the provisions which bear on the case, of the Mercantile Marine Act and of the China Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853, which was in force at the time.*

---

* Messrs. Hudson, December 7 and December 13, 1864; Sir H. Parkes, No. 81, February 22, 1865.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Sir Harry Parkes is right in the construction which he puts upon sections 239, 269, and 518 of 17 and 18 Vict., cap. 106 (the Merchant Shipping Act), and the 41st section of the Order in Council (then in force) of 13th June 1853 (Hertslet, ix, 229). The seamen were guilty of a misdemeanour, under the 239th section of the Merchant Shipping Act. Crimes under that Act, committed on the high seas, are punishable in the same manner as if they had been committed within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Court of Admiralty; and if this misdemeanour had been committed within the jurisdiction of Her Majesty's Court of Admiralty, the offenders would, under section 518, have been triable before two justices of the peace. The 41st section of the Order in Council provides "that the Consul, within his Consular district, may exercise any of the powers which by any Acts of the Imperial Parliament now enacted, or hereafter to be enacted, for the regulation of merchant seamen, or for the regulation of the mercantile marine, may be exercised by one or more justices of the peace within Her Majesty's dominions." We think, therefore, that these men were subject to the jurisdiction of the Consul, though his power of inflicting punishment for the offence was very limited in comparison with that possessed by a Court of Criminal Admiralty Jurisdiction. There appears to us to be much force in the suggestion of my Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, that immediate punishment of a lesser kind may be a more effectual check to the commission of such crimes than a severer punishment inflicted after considerable delay.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 28.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 21, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Wade (No. 41), relative to certain regulations drawn up by Mr. Hewlett, Acting British Consul at Foo-chow, with a view to prevent passengers arriving at that port on board British vessels from joining the Chinese insurgents, and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the course pursued by Mr. Wade, both in disapproving the regulations of Mr. Hewlett, and in the provisions which he (Mr. Wade) substituted for those regulations, was right and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 29.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th June instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking, as

---

* See Hertslet, vol. ix, p. 210.

marked in the margin,* relative to a proposal of the Committee of renters of land in the British quarter at Hankow, that the leases under which renters hold land at that port should be modified, so as to allow the transfer of lots to other than British subjects; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion upon the several points in connection with this matter adverted to by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are disposed to agree generally with the opinions expressed by Mr. Wade in these despatches. The most material points appear to be the following:—

1. We agree with Mr. Wade that it would be expedient to relax the present rules affecting the tenure of land, both at Hankow and at other places in the Chinese dominions.

2. We think that the mode of relaxation should be that suggested by Mr. Wade in his despatch (No. 50, three inclosures, March 30, 1865), namely, that the British holder should be allowed to alienate his portion of land to a foreigner on the condition that the transferee be a citizen of a Treaty Power, and that the Representative of that Power accept as binding on the transferee the conditions of the leases now issued to British subjects, and undertaking to enforce them; and, moreover, that the transferee be not allowed to alienate the land so acquired, except upon the like terms and conditions.

3. We also agree with Mr. Wade in his objection to the use of the term "concession." We think it should not be applied to British lands, and that the disuse of it should be recommended to the Renters' Committee. It appears to us that the argument of Mr. Wade upon this point is convincing, and that "the authoritative declaration" which he requests your Lordship to make in furtherance of his views upon this subject, and as to the restriction of the powers claimed by the "Conseil Municipal," may be properly made.

4. With respect to the expediency of a foreign Government becoming a lessee in the first instance of the lands at Nanking and other places, we also agree with Mr. Wade.

5. The proposed demarcation of lots, roads, and the like, at the opening of a new port under Consular jurisdiction in the first instance, and if possible, also with the consent of the Representatives of the Treaty Powers, appears to us to be a wise suggestion.

6. Upon the general question of the limitations within which exclusive foreign authority should be exercised in these settlements, and of the recognition, and indeed demand for the aid, of Chinese authority apart from these limitations, we are also disposed to concur with Mr. Wade.

It appears to us that the general principle upon which the line of demarcation between the native and the foreign authority is drawn by Mr. Wade is sound and correct, namely, that all that relates to the cleanliness and convenience of the settlement should be left to the foreign authority, and that the expenses of these matters should be defrayed by the settlement; but that all that relates to the protection of person and property, and to the proper province of the police, should be furnished by and at the expense of the Chinese Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
And for the Attorney and Solicitor-General.

No. 30.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 31, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Mr. Wade, and its inclosures (No. 58, April 10, 1865), respecting the case of an Italian named Belfiori, who was accused of homicide at Swatow, and tried before the Chinese authorities; and was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the course pursued by Mr. Wade and by Mr. Consul Caine, together with any other observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to the commands of your Lordship we have taken the papers referred to us into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the view which Mr. Wade has taken of this case. It was, we

---

* Mr. Wade, No. 35, March 14; Nos. 50, and 52, March 30, 1865.

1865

think, proper for the influence of the Consuls of the other foreign nations to be used, for the purpose of obtaining, in the first instance, a fair trial, and afterwards (if practicable) a mitigation of the extreme punishment awarded by Chinese law for the Italian found guilty of homicide in this case.

But we agree with Mr. Wade in regretting that, in their reasonable desire to save this man from capital punishment, Mr. Caine and his colleagues should have lost sight of the fact that there existed no authority of any foreign nation, either in China or at Hong Kong, which could legally undertake to inflict upon him any punishment whatever, or even to detain him in custody with a view to any future punishment, on board a British ship or on British territory, for this offence. The result is, that the Chinese authorities have been misled into giving complete impunity to a criminal guilty of a very grave offence, by their willingness to substitute, in deference to the feelings of the European Consuls, the European penalty of imprisonment for that prescribed by their own law; and it is much to be feared that the good faith of the foreign Consuls who were parties to the arrangement under which Belfiori was sent to Hong Kong may, in consequence, be seriously suspected by the Chinese authorities.

We think that, in this respect, Mr. Caine has fallen into a most unfortunate error of judgment; and that the substance of the instructions as to his future conduct, given to him by Mr. Wade's letter of the 10th April last (Inclosure No. 10 in Mr. Wade's No. 58), may well be approved and confirmed by your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 31.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures (No. 78, April 17, 1865), respecting the case of two persons accused of robbery at Ningpo, who, having succeeded in escaping to Hong Kong, have been able to avoid being brought to trial; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not disposed to agree with the Attorney-General for Hong Kong that it would have been an improper exercise of prerogative on the part of the Governor of Hong Kong to have sent these men, or, at all events, the man who admitted himself to be a British subject, to Ningpo for trial; nor is it apparent to us why this person could not have been dealt with as a criminal subject to the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Hong Kong, under Article 30 of the Order in Council of 1853. For the future, however, the recurrence of any failure of justice from similar causes will, it is to be hoped, be prevented by the operation of Article 158 of the new Order in Council of the 9th March, 1865.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 32.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 6, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated August 30, inclosing a copy of a letter from the Acting Governor of Hong Kong, in which he raises the question whether the power of pardoning criminals convicted of offences in China which was conferred upon the Governor of Hong Kong by the Queen's Letters Patent of the 13th of October, 1863, has not become inoperative by the repeal of the Order in Council of the 13th of June, 1853.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to refer us to the Reports of the Law Officers of the Crown of the 13th of January and 20th of February, 1862, and to transmit to us the correspondence, as marked in the margin,* relative to the power conferred in 1863 upon Her Majesty's Minister at Peking, and upon the Governor of Hong Kong concurrently, of pardoning criminals convicted by Her Majesty's Consular Courts in China; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, more especially with reference to the Order in Council of the 9th of March last.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that a copy of the Letters-Patent issued to Sir Frederick Bruce is annexed to the despatch to that Minister, No. 136 of the 24th of August, 1863, and that we should observe that it was stated in the letter from the Home Office, of the 16th of March, 1863, that the draft Letters Patent had been settled and approved by the Law Officers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as there was no mention whatever of the Order in Council of June 13, 1853, in the Letters Patent which appointed Sir F. Bruce, we thought it our duty to request the Colonial Office to furnish us with a copy of the Letters Patent of the Governor of Hong Kong; and, upon a perusal of them, we perceive that they do refer in distinct terms to that Order in Council, which appears, indeed, to be the foundation of, or the inducement to, the grant of the Letters Patent. By the 79th section of the Order in Council of the 9th March, 1865, a power is granted of sending offenders convicted by the Courts in China and Japan to Hong Kong; and we infer from the letter of Mr. Layard that it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government that the Governor of Hong Kong should continue to exercise the power of pardoning criminals sent to Hong Kong.

Upon the whole (although we are by no means satisfied that the power of pardoning conferred by the Letters Patent of the 13th October, 1863, is limited or controlled by the recital to which we have referred), we think the safest course would be that fresh Letters Patent should be issued to the Governor of Hong Kong, conferring upon him this power.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 33.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, October 23, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Peking (No. 129) respecting the case of the master of the British steamer "Elfin," who was tried before Her Majesty's Consul at Taiwan, for assisting the Chinese authorities against a pirate; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Vice-Consul Swinhoe appears to us to have entirely misconceived the law, and his own duty, in this case.

It is clear that the master of the "Elfin" was guilty of no offence, unless it was the merely technical one of leaving port without the ship's papers, which ought not, we think, to have been regarded as any substantial offence under the actual circumstances, and which formed no part of the real grounds of Mr. Swinhoe's sentence.

We think that the view of this whole matter taken by Mr. Wade in his letter to Mr. Swinhoe of 19th April last is correct, and that it has been dealt with by him in a proper manner, except that the fine imposed upon the master of the "Elfin" ought, in our opinion, to have been wholly, and not partially, remitted, and the conviction absolutely set aside.

---

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 133, October 1; Colonial Office, November 23, 1861; to Colonial Office, January 24; Colonial Office, February 3, 1862; Home Office, May 16; to Home Office, May 25; Home Office, June 25; to Colonial Office, July 30; Colonial Office, August 19; to Colonial Office, August 24; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 13, August 24, 1863; Colonial Office, April 18; to Colonial Office, April 25, 1864.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 34.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 25, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request our early attention to the correspondence inclosed.*

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that it had originated in the execution by a cruel death of a Chinese subject whose extradition as a pirate was demanded of and granted by the Governor of Hong Kong; and in a previous instruction given by Mr. Secretary Cardwell, though not received at the time, prohibiting the surrender of pirates except under the assurance that they would not be dealt with in a manner revolting to humanity.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Her Majesty's Government are as yet imperfectly informed in regard to the case of the surrendered pirate. But that when the reports which have been asked for have been received from the Acting Governor of Hong Kong and from Her Majesty's Consul at Canton, they would be referred to us.

But that in the meanwhile there are other questions on which your Lordship desired to have our opinion.

The question of the claim of the Acting Governor of Hong Kong to correspond directly with the local authorities at Canton has been disposed of by Mr. Secretary Cardwell's instruction prohibiting that practice.

The material questions arise under the XVIth and XXIst Articles of the Treaty of Tien-tsin.

The first of these Articles is clearly limited to the trial and punishment, by their own authorities, of Chinese subjects who are charged with having committed crimes within the dominions of the Emperor of China.

The main difficulty arises under the XXIst Article, which provides for the general surrender of Chinese criminals charged with offences committed in China, for whom a demand has been made, and supported by evidence, on the British Colonial authorities.

It appears that there are certain crimes punishable in China by a lingering and cruel death. Among these is the crime of piracy.

In the year 1855,† a question arose as to the disposal of pirates captured by British naval forces on the coast of China. That question was, at the time, considered by the legal authorities, in accordance with whose opinion Her Majesty's Naval Officers have since been instructed, while delivering up to the Chinese authorities pirates captured within Chinese jurisdiction, to make "an express stipulation with the said authorities that the pirates receive a fair trial, and are not subjected to torture, or any punishment repugnant to the usages of civilized nations."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should see, by his letters to the Colonial Office of the 2nd and 8th instant, and by your Lordship's instructions to Sir Rutherford Alcock (No. 3, November 8), of which copies were inclosed, the course that, pending a final decision, it is proposed to follow, to guard against a recurrence of a similar result of extradition as that which has recently occurred.

But that the point which he was now specifically to submit for our consideration is, whether, as a Christian Power, Great Britain would not be entitled to insist on the renunciation by the Chinese Government, in some form or other, of the infliction of cruelties repugnant to humanity on Chinese criminals placed at the disposal of the local authorities; and, failing to obtain this, to refuse altogether to give effect to the XXIst Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that much inconvenience is felt from the omission in the Treaty of any reciprocal provision for the surrender of persons, whether Chinese or others, who, having committed crimes in Hong Kong, have sought refuge in the Chinese dominions. The Chinese authorities, indeed, while claiming to try fugitives, subjects of China, who, having committed crimes in Hong Kong, have sought an asylum in China, refuse to give them up for trial in Hong Kong. But that it is not quite clear whether this refusal extends to the Chinese subjects of the British Crown, whom the Chinese Government have, of course, no right to claim to deal with as subjects of the Emperor.

As regards the extradition of the Emperor's subjects, the question arises whether, in strictness, a nation is bound under an Extradition Treaty to give up one of its own subjects. In this country no objection is made on that ground; but it is believed that France would not surrender a French subject.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship is prepared, with our concurrence, to instruct Her Majesty's Minister at Peking to endeavour to come to some understanding with the Chinese Government on this matter, and to record that understanding either in the shape of a Treaty or otherwise, as may be found practicable; but that your Lordship would be glad to receive from us any suggestion as to the exact proposition which it would be expedient to place before the Chinese Government.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe another question, respecting Chinese witnesses whose evidence is required in cases pending before the Colonial Courts. That the Chinese authorities do not seem indisposed to allow their attendance; but in cases when the witnesses are themselves accused of crimes, they require a guarantee for their safe return in custody to China, to be dealt with by Chinese law for the crimes laid to their charge.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, as many considerations on this point might occur to us, your Lordship wishes to have our opinion upon it.

And that other points might occur to us, on the perusal of this correspondence, as deserving our attention, as to which your Lordship desired him to invite a full expression of our opinion.

Mr. Hammond was further directed by your Lordship to state that, in dealing with questions of this kind with the Chinese Government, it will be necessary to take into account the feelings and prejudices of a peculiar people, and to be satisfied with obtaining an end without too much insisting on formalities.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not entirely agreed upon this case. The Attorney and Solicitor-General feel unable to say that, upon recognized principles of international law, Her Majesty's Government would be entitled to refuse performance of the XXIst Article of the Treaty of Tien-tsin, unless the Chinese Government would agree, in cases of extradition under that Article, to renounce the execution of their own laws in points as to which those laws do violence to the usages and feelings of Christian and civilized nations. They do not see how the Article can be read as containing any implied condition that the criminal law of China shall, in these cases, be administered in a manner conformable to Christian views of humanity; and they think it would be difficult, in principle, to maintain that ground, having regard to the fact that this is a Treaty, not between two Christian Powers, but between a Heathen and a Christian Power.

The Queen's Advocate, on the other hand, is of opinion that a Christian Power, in a Treaty of Extradition with a Heathen State made in the nineteenth century, must in fairness be understood to have attached to the obligation of extradition in certain cases the implied condition that, whatever be the extent of the punishment to be inflicted on the criminal to be delivered up, it shall not be attended with torture. For instance, he deems it to be inconceivable that any authority, acting under Her Majesty, should deliver up a Chinese subject guilty of felony with the knowledge that he will be burnt alive, or subjected to any torture by the Chinese authorities, and he thinks that the Chinese Government should be distinctly apprized, if not so already, that no Chinese criminal will be delivered up for the future without a sufficient guarantee, in each case, that he will be fairly tried, and that his punishment, if he be found guilty, be unaccompanied by any kind of physical torture.

But we all agree in thinking that it will be very expedient to endeavour to obtain, by a Supplementary Treaty or Convention, some modification or explanation of this Article which may provide against the delivery up of criminals, liable by Chinese law to such punishments as we justly deem inhuman, without a security against the infliction of those punishments; and, for this purpose, we think full advantage may properly be taken of all the uncertainties and doubtful questions which may fairly be represented as making this Article, as it now stands, scarcely susceptible of any clear or satisfactory construction.

---

* Three volumes; List of Papers.

† N.B.—Before the Treaty of Tein-tsin.—R. P.

It applies only to "criminals," whose "guilt" may be "proved," in Hong Kong, but it does not define what shall be considered crimes, or what guilt, for this purpose. The rule, in all our other Extradition Treaties, is not to regard anything as a crime for the purpose of extradition, which would not be so in the place where extradition is demanded, if the act had been done in that place. It is difficult to see how the authorities of Hong Kong can try the question of guilt by the rules of Chinese, and not of their own law.

It applies only to those who "shall take refuge," &c., which would not extend to pirates or others captured and taken to Hong Kong by British authorities, who would be justiciable there by British law.

It cannot, we think, be extended to mere political offenders, and it would be a just ground of complaint on our part, if advantage were taken of extradition on one ground, to try and punish a man upon a different charge, and not on that upon which extradition was demanded.

These suggestions, together with the manifest insufficiency of Article XVI to meet the requirements of a due reciprocity in our own favour (as to which we concur in the views suggested by your Lordship), may, we think, well be made the basis of a negotiation for the revision of those Articles of the Treaty.

As to witnesses sent to Hong Kong from China, local legislation will be necessary to secure their return.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 35

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 28, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with Earl Russell's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th ultimo, in which we stated that, though by no means satisfied that the power of pardoning offenders convicted in the Consular Courts in China, which was conferred upon the Governor of Hong Kong by the Letters-Patent of the 13th October, 1863, is limited or controlled by the recital therein of the Order in Council of the 13th June, 1853 (now repealed), we were nevertheless of opinion that the safest course would be that fresh Letters-Patent should be issued to the Governor of Hong Kong, conferring this power upon him, he was directed by Earl Russell to state to us that his Lordship concurred in this opinion, as the Order in Council of the 9th of March last provides that convicted offenders shall, as heretofore, in certain cases be brought within the Colony of Hong Kong to undergo their punishment. That his Lordship also desired him, at the same time, to submit to our consideration whether it would not be desirable to issue fresh Letters-Patent to Her Majesty's Minister in China. That the Letters-Patent issued to Sir F. Bruce did not, it is true, recite the Order in Council of 1853, but they appear to have conferred the pardoning power upon Sir F. Bruce alone, and, consequently, not to extend to his successor, even if they may be assumed to have extended to the gentleman who was appointed to act as Chargé d'Affaires during what was, at the time, believed to be Sir F. Bruce's temporary absence from China.

That Earl Russell wished further to consult us whether it would not be desirable to confer this pardoning power upon Her Majesty's Minister in Japan, making of course the Letters-Patent issued to the Governor of Hong Kong applicable to Japanese cases also. That if we should be of opinion that Letters-Patent should be issued in these several cases, Earl Russell wished to know whether, in our opinion, the Letters might not be made general, so as not to be confined to the person actually holding the office of Her Majesty's Minister in Peking, or in Japan, or of Governor of Hong Kong, but to extend to the person or persons who might be discharging the duties of either of those offices, in the event of the death of the Minister or Governor, or of his absence from his post for any other cause.

The previous papers were returned therewith for reference, if required.*

---

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 133; Colonial Office, November 23, 1861; to Colonial Office, January 24; Colonial Office, February 3, 1862; Home Office, May 16; to Home Office, May 25; Home Office, June 25; to Colonial Office, July 20; Colonial Office, August 19; to Colonial Office, August 24; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 13; Colonial Office, August 30, 1865.

In obedience to the above commands we have further considered this case, and have the honour to report—

That we think it would be expedient to issue fresh Letters-Patent to Her Majesty's Minister in China, and to issue such Letters to Her Majesty's Minister in Japan, conferring the power of pardoning criminals; and we agree that it would be expedient to make the Letters-Patent of the Governor of Hong Kong applicable to cases in Japan.

We think, also, that it would be proper so to frame the Letters-Patent as to continue the power of pardoning therein contained to the successor or occasional deputy (in case of absence) of the officer to whom they were originally granted.

With reference to the inquiry made in the letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 2nd instant, we consider it to be the better opinion that the Letters-Patent of the 13th October, 1863, to the Governor of Hong Kong, are not repealed, but are still in force; but, for the reasons stated in our former Report, and which we understand to have met with Earl Russell's approval, we think it is expedient to obviate, by the issue of further Letters-Patent, every question of this kind.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 36.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 9, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir Rutherford Alcock with respect to the rendition of Chinese criminals, and to request that we would take the same into immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent; Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that your Lordship would be glad to be informed of our opinion, if possible, by this day, the 9th instant, in order that the instruction may be dispatched by this day's mail; and to call our attention to a question in the margin of the fifth page of the draft.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the draft despatch, including the passage noticed in the margin of page 5, is proper to be sent, with the addition of a short passage at the end of page 12, which we have noted in the margin of that page.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 37.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 20.)

Doctors' Commons, December 19, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Chin-kiang, dated September 25, reporting the circumstances of a murderous attack committed upon two British subjects and an American at that port.

A letter (and its inclosure) from Mrs. Filleul, dated December 5, the mother of one of the young men, who subsequently sank from the wounds which he received on the occasion in question, in which she attributes her son's murder to a desire to prevent his obtaining possession of some property belonging to his elder brother, who had previously died in China, was also inclosed, and stating that Mrs. Filleul consequently requests that a searching inquiry may be made into the matter with a view to secure for the heirs the property still remaining, as also to obtain proper indemnity from the Chinese Government on her behalf; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Consul Harvey appears to have taken, with vigour and success, every measure that could be taken in this unhappy affair. I am quite unable to see any ground for requiring compensation from the Chinese Government on account of this murder. It would be proper, I think, to tell Mrs. Filleul that Mr. Harvey will be instructed to give any assistance in his power towards recovering the property spoken of by her; but that the account is so extremely vague that there appears little hope of a successful result.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 38.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 29.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 28, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that in his letter of the 8th ultimo he had informed us that the Reports which had been asked for from the Acting Governor of Hong Kong and from Her Majesty's Consul at Canton, relative to the case of the pirate Ho Yu-teen, whose surrender to the Chinese authorities formed the subject of Colonel Sykes' representation of the 25th of last July, should be referred to us as soon as they should be received; and he was accordingly now directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to that letter and to our Report of the 25th ultimo, two letters from the Colonial Office,* the last inclosing a Report from Acting Governor Mercer, and two despatches from Consul Robertson,† respecting the case of this man; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the Ordinance No. 2 of 1850, under which the Governor of Hong Kong acted in this case, was sent therewith.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the general subject of the Treaties of Extradition between Great Britain and China, we crave leave to refer to our former Report.

With respect to this particular cese of the man Ho Yu-teen it appears to us that the Acting Governor of Hong Kong took every precaution in his power to carry the provisions of the Treaty of Extradition into proper execution. The man was charged, not with piracy, which would be justiciable at Hong Kong, but with robbery, which brought him within the terms of the Treaty. The case was properly investigated, and there was abundant evidence to support the decision of the magistrate.

We have the honour to agree with Mr. Cardwell that no blame attaches to Mr. Mercer in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Colonial Office, November 14 and December 6, 1865.
† Mr. Robertson, September 22 and September 25, 1865.

Columbia.

No. 39.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá (No. 26), relative to a tax which has been imposed by the Constituent Assembly of the States of Bolivar on all persons engaged in industrial pursuits at Carthagena; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon. A despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Carthagena upon this subject was also inclosed (No. 2, June 1).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That at present I agree with the opinions of Messrs. O'Leary and Fonblanque, that the simple imposition of this tax, which equally affects natives and foreigners, does not call for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Her Majesty's subjects resident in these States.

Certainly, however, no such interference should take place until the decision of the Supreme Court, to whose jurisdiction the British residents have voluntarily resorted, has been declared. If it should hereafter be proved that the tax has been imposed or levied with plain injustice towards Her Majesty's subjects, or that the States of Bolivar have released the subjects of any other foreign State from the tax which they continue to impose upon British subjects, the whole matter ought again to be submitted to the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 40.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 22.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 22, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá (No. 27), respecting a law which has been passed by the Columbian National Congress defining the condition, rights, and obligations of foreigners. A correspondence which took place in 1848 and 1855 relative to similar laws in force in New Granada at those periods was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship of my opinion as to the nature of the instructions, if any, which should be addressed to Mr. O'Leary thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. O'Leary has pursued a right course. It does not appear to me necessary that any instructions should be addressed to Mr. O'Leary, though it would be proper that he should be desired to apprize the Columbian Government that Her Majesty's Government approve of his letter to that Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 41.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 19.)

Doctors' Commons, December 19, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bogotá (No. 64), respecting a question which has been put to him by a Señor Montoga, who is anxious to know whether his children, born in England, are entitled, whilst in the United States of Columbia, to the privileges and exemptions secured by Treaty or otherwise to British subjects domiciled there, and also whether they are liable to serve in the Columbian army; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. O'Leary.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this is really a question of Columbian municipal law; but upon the statement contained in these papers I have no doubt that the children of Señor Montoya, who is a native Columbian, are domiciled in Columbia, and that they are subject to the obligations of Columbian citizenship. The fact that Señor Montoya is a naturalized British subject does not exempt him from the operation of the law of the State of his birth and natural allegiance while he resides in that State.

On the whole, the opinion expressed by Mr. O'Leary is quite correct.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Costa Rica.

No. 42.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 8.)

Doctors' Commons, April 7, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Central America (No. 11), inclosing a copy of a Decree issued by the Government of Nicaragua, prohibiting under certain penalties all commercial intercourse between that State and Costa Rica, together with a copy of a Decree of the Guatemalan Government prohibiting also, under certain penalties, all intercourse whatever between that Republic and Costa Rica; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Fraser as to the legality of such acts not being absolute declarations of war on the part of Nicaragua and Guatemala.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Fraser should be instructed to the effect that he must continue his remonstrance to the Governments of Nicaragua and Guatemala as to the hardship and injustice inflicted by their Decrees upon the commercial interests of British subjects, resident and commorant within the territories of these States, under the faith of Treaties and of general usage that they would be allowed to carry on commercial operations with all States with whom these Governments are not, as they are not with Costa Rica, at war. And that Her Majesty's Government confidently expect that the due consideration of this injustice or hardship will induce these Governments to withdraw the Decree for which it would be difficult to find any precedent, or to justify upon the ordinary usages of international law.

I do not advise that Mr. Fraser be instructed, at present at least, to place his remonstrance upon any other footing than that which I have already pointed out.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Denmark.

No. 43.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to inclose a letter from Messrs. Willis and Co., dated the 19th instant, praying for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in support of a claim upon the Danish Government on account of a loss sustained by them through the capture, by a Danish man-of-war, and detention at Copenhagen, of the Hanoverian vessel "Margaretha," having on board a cargo of tallow consigned to the applicants; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether the claimants are entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Articles of Peace between Denmark and Germany referred to in the letter of Messrs. Willis do not accompany the papers submitted to me in this case; but I should think it most probable that the decision of the authorities as to the construction of that Treaty was correct, namely, that it related to the belligerents who were parties to it, and not to neutrals who were not parties to it.

The claim of Messrs. Willis ought, it would appear to me, to be made in the first instance to the Danish Government. They were entitled to have their vessel tried in the Prize Court of Denmark, and to a proper legal sentence of acquittal, with costs and damages, if their ship was innocent and her capture unjustifiable.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 44.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Walters and Bubb, requesting the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to obtain from Denmark compensation for the capture and detention of certain German vessels during the war between Denmark and Germany; and to request that I would take this paper into consideration, and inform your Lordship what answer should be returned to Messrs. Walters and Bubb. A copy of the Treaty of Peace of 1864 between Austria, Prussia, and Denmark, is inclosed for my convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that an answer should be sent to Messrs. Walters and Bubb to the following effect:—That whatever claim they may have in this matter must depend upon their representing, and having for the time being the status of, German owners of German vessels and cargoes. The Treaty was concluded between, and had exclusive reference to the belligerents,—Austria, Prussia, and Denmark, and is one of which a neutral State like Great Britain, who was no party to the Treaty, has no right to enforce the provisions on behalf either of a belligerent or a neutral owner. The Treaty does not contemplate, either in its general principles or in its particular provisions, the interests of neutrals. If the underwriters are right in considering, as they say, that "they acquire all the rights of the Austrian or Prussian owner," it is to the Government of these owners that they should have had recourse, before the Commission, which was partly composed of Austrian and Prussian Commissioners, had concluded its sittings, for redress against any miscarriage of justice in the treatment of their claims by that Commission.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 45.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 10.)

Doctors' Commons, June 9, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 11th July last, and to previous correspondence on the subject of the capture and condemnation by the Danish Prize Court of the British vessel "Estella," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Burnitt, the owner of the "Estella," forwarding a translation of the Judgment of the Danish High Court of Admiralty, by which Judgment the decision of the Prize Court is reversed and the vessel released, but without costs and damages; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon a review of the case, as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Burnitt's inquiry whether he is entitled to claim damages from the Danish Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a consideration of the precedents in the English Prize Court on the subject of awarding or refusing costs and damages in cases of this kind obliges me to say that it is probable that if, mutatis mutandis, the case had been tried here, the English Court would have given the same sentence as the Danish Court. I cannot, therefore, advise your Lordship that you ought to address any remonstrance to the Danish Government on account of the Danish Prize Court's refusal to award costs and damages to the owners of the "Estella."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 46.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 19.)

Doctors' Commons, June 17, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. A. W. Stratton, asking for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in order to procure compensation from the Danish Government for the expense and delay to which he was subjected in obtaining the property left by his deceased wife. A correspondence which took place with regard to this case, together with my Reports on this subject were also transmitted; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take Mr. Stratton's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in supporting Mr. Stratton's claim for compensation.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have no information as to the history of this case since my Report upon it was made to your Lordship on the 16th of June, 1863. I perceive that in that Report I expressed "a firm conviction that if it should turn out, as the Vice-Consul has from the first declared, that Mr. Stratton has been put to unnecessary cost and expense by an unfounded litigation, the Danish Tribunal will condemn the adverse party to pay the costs." I perceive from Mr. Stratton's letter that a decision was given in his favour by the legal tribunal at Copenhagen, on the 14th of October, 1863; whether the sentence did or did not also decree the costs of the litigation to be paid to Mr. Stratton, or if not, upon what grounds it declined to do so, I am not informed. As I understand this case, it had become, whatever it originally was, a private suit between two litigant parties; and at present I do not see upon what grounds the Government of Denmark can be called upon to pay any compensation to the successful litigant, on the ground of the time which was occupied in investigating the merits of the controversy, unless, indeed, the Government in some way interfered with the judicial proceedings, as to which I have no evidence at present before me.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 47.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

Doctors' Commons, June 27, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that, with reference to that portion of my letter of the 17th instant in which I stated that I had no information as to the case of Mr. Stratton since my Report upon it was made in June 1863, he was directed to call my attention to the two accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, dated in August and September 1863, which may have escaped my notice, and which appears to show that the transaction was not in the form of a private suit between two litigant parties, but of an investigation by a Magistrate; and further to state that your Lordship would be glad, before referring the case to Copenhagen, to be informed whether these papers would cause any modification in the views expressed in my above-mentioned Report, which was also returned.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That my attention is now directed to two despatches, dated August 17 and September 17, 1863, from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, and which are therefore both subsequent to my Report of the 16th of June of that year.

It would certainly appear from the first of those despatches, taken by itself, that there was no private litigant, for in it his Excellency, among other things, says that he had ascertained that "the Magistrate was about to dispose of the property among Mrs. Stratton's relatives on his own initiative;" but in the inclosure of his Excellency's despatch of September 17th there is a statement from Mr. Petersen, who appears to be the Magistrate or Judge of a Court of Probate, that the relatives of Mrs. Stratton did appear in Court, and did insist upon the alleged marriage being judicially inquired into, and the fact of its alleged dissolution. The words of Mr. Petersen are, "Whereas the relatives have maintained their assertion that the deceased was a Danish subject, and that her estate should pass through the hands of the Court of Probate of this place, and they have finally claimed that the question at issue should be decided by the said Court."

It would therefore seem to me that, practically, the relatives were litigants in the first suit, and it would appear, primâ facie at least, that as their claim was unsuccessful, they ought to have been condemned in the costs of trying the question upon which they asked for the decision of the Court.

I should be glad, therefore, to receive the information upon this subject to which I adverted in my last Report. At present I do not clearly understand how much of this litigation was consequent upon the course taken by the Judge alone, and how much of it was caused by the opposition of the relatives of Mrs. Stratton to the claim of Mr. Stratton. It is true, indeed, as suggested, that the Court of Probate in England would not allow a grant of administration, except to a party who had made a proper primâ facie title to it, whether the application was contested or not; but if a next of kin or relative appeared to oppose the grant, there would be immediately a suit between two parties, one of whom might, or might not, according to the circumstances, be liable to pay the costs of the inquiry or litigation. I may also observe that it does not appear from Mr. Stratton's letter (dated 2nd June, 1865), when he was first apprized that his case was settled in his favour on the 14th of October, 1863.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 48.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 13.)

Doctors' Commons, July 13, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 6th instant, stating that, with reference to my letter of the 29th of April last on the subject of the claim of Messrs. Willis and Co. for compensation, on account of the capture and detention by the Danish Government during the recent war, of a cargo of hemp and tallow, on board the Hanoverian vessel "Margaretha," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen, stating that the Danish Government refuse to entertain the claim of Messrs. Willis on the ground that Article XIII of the Treaty of Vienna, respecting compensation for captured property, referred solely to German property, and that, as neutrals, Messrs. Willis have no claim under international law. Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that I should doubtless observe that in conversation with Sir Augustus Paget, the Danish Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the ship and cargo had been condemned by a Prize Court; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether, in face of the refusal of the Danish Government to entertain the claim on the grounds above alluded to, it would be expedient for Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter. The previous papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the decision of the Danish Government that the Treaty is not applicable to neutrals accords with the opinion which I had the honour to express in my former Report. I also stated in that Report that the owners of the "Margaretha" had a right to trial and sentence in the Prize Court, but it now appears that this vessel has been tried, and has been duly condemned in that Court.

I am of opinion that there is no obligation on Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 49.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 19.)

Doctors' Commons, July 17, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 17th and 27th ultimo relative to Mr. Stratton's claim for compensation from the Danish Government for the delay and loss he incurred in obtaining possession of his deceased wife's property, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a copy of a despatch (No. 76) which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Copenhagen in reply to the inquiries addressed to him on the subject, and which furnishes the information desired by me in my above mentioned Reports; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether, under the circumstances of the case, Mr. Stratton is entitled to the support of Her Majesty's Government in favour of his claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That it now appears that the suggestion in my last Report, that "this case had become, whatever it originally was, a private suit between two litigant parties," was perfectly correct.

I still do not understand why the Court at Copenhagen did not condemn Mr. Lohman, the defeated litigant, in costs; why, to use Mr. Vice-Consul Lange's expression in his letter to Sir A. Paget, "both parties were free of Court charges."

However, it is clear to me that this suit has been conducted with all due regard to substantial justice, and according to the ordinary practice of the Court at Copenhagen; and I see no ground whatever for making any demand for compensation to Mr. Stratton against the Danish Government, who could not have interfered with the ordinary course of justice in the tribunals of that country any more than the English Government could have interfered if there had been a suit between a Danish and an English subject in this country; and I humbly advise that an answer to this effect be sent to Mr. Stratton.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Equator.

No. 50.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 7.)

Doctors' Commons, March 6, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Quito (No. 5, January 15), respecting the intention of the Equatorian Government, which had been signified to the British Vice-Consul at Guayaquil, of taking by force from the English steamer touching at that place any political exiles who may remain on board during the vessel's stay in that port; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Fagan in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That merchant-vessels, while in the ports of a foreign State, are so far amenable to its jurisdiction as to be liable to be searched for native subjects credibly alleged to be on board, and charged with offences committed within the territories of that State; and that it is competent to the proper authorities of such State, especially after due warning, as in the present case, to take such persons out of the merchant-ship.

I think that the mere presence of Her Majesty's mails on board a merchant-vessel would not afford to such persons, while she was in port, an exemption from the liability to be seized.

In the present case, however, the vessel does not even appear to belong to the class of mail-steamers between England and South America.

Mr. Fagan appears to me to have taken a proper course in warning these vessels that they ought not to incur the risk of lowering the national character of their ship by bringing such persons into these ports, and thereby provoking and justifying the interference of the local police.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

France.

No. 51.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 17, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris, inclosing a copy of a letter from the Préfet de Police, containing information supplied by him at the request of British Embassy for the use of Mr. Linden, of New Square, Lincoln's Inn Fields, respecting a Turkish officer named Riskallat, and another person, who appear to be involved in legal proceedings about to be instituted in this country; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether a copy of the inclosure of Lord Cowley's despatch might be given to Mr. Linden.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1865

That we think that a copy of so much of the Report of the Préfet de Police as is included between the second paragraph beginning, "Il s'agissait de savoir," &c., down to the close of the last paragraph but two, ending with the words "hotel de cette ville," might be furnished to Mr. Linden, on his undertaking not to attempt to use that copy as evidence of any of the facts stated in it, in any Court of Justice.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 52.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 28.)

Doctors' Commons, January 28, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 17th December last addressed to the Law Officers of the Crown, and to their Report of the 6th of October, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 1, January 6), inclosing a note verbale containing the reply of the French Government to the invitation of Her Majesty's Government, that the Government of the Emperor should declare the Slave Trade piracy, and should affix the penalties of that crime to all persons who shall be convicted of being engaged in Slave Traffic, in a Court which takes cognizance of piracy, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and prepare the draft of such an answer as I may consider proper to be returned to the note verbale of the French Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I humbly submit to your Lordship the appended draft answer to the note verbale of M. Drouyn de Lhuys.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMOEE.

Inclosure in No. 52.

Draft of Answer to Note-Verbale of French Government.

THAT Her Majesty's Government have perused with mingled satisfaction and regret the note verbale of M. Drouyn de Lhuys.

It is a matter of satisfaction to them to learn that the municipal law of France places the odious crime of slave-trading in the category of those criminal offences which are visited with the severest punishment, and Her Majesty's Government have no reason whatever to doubt the sincerity of that abhorrence with which M. Drouyn de Lhuys speaks of this abominable traffic; but in proportion to this satisfaction is the regret which Her Majesty's Government are constrained to feel at the rejection by M. Drouyn de Lhuys of a proposal, by the adoption of which Her Majesty's Government had earnestly hoped that the last traces of this great guilt might be effaced wherever the flag of France or of England floated.

Her Majesty's Government must observe that, however severely the municipal law of France may punish, within the territory of France, the French slave-dealer, the offender would not naturally bring himself within the operation of the law, while the absence of French cruizers from the African coast enables him to exercise his trade with comparative impunity. For while it may, Her Majesty's Government believe, with truth be said that few, if any, Frenchmen engage in this accursed traffic, the evil is that the French as well as the English and Spanish flag may be, and often is, wrongfully assumed by the slave-traders of all nations. The most effectual remedy would appear to be that, within certain latitudes and under certain limitations, the right of ascertaining whether the vessel be a slaver or a foreign merchantman should be conceded to the ships of war of Christian States, while, if the vessel proved to be a slaver, she might, in the absence of any Mixed Commission Court, be delivered to the authorities of the country to which she belonged. But if the French Government consider this suggestion for any reason impracticable, Her Majesty's Government are not the less desirous of stating that they attach the greatest importance to a joint declaration of France and England that, as far as their influence extends at least, this accursed traffic should be placed in that category of piracy to which by its nature and the reason of the thing it properly belongs.

Murder and robbery of the worst kind are its inevitable companions; for in no other light can be regarded the stealing of human beings of all ages and all sexes, and the death of many who perish either on the coast or during the horrors of the transit from the shore of Africa to the shore of some Christian State.

It is true, indeed, that the authority of publicists and jurists, and that a certain usage of nations, may be cited to show that slave-trading has not been hitherto considered piracy by international law; but international law, like all other law, has a deeper foundation than mere usage.

International law, like all other law, makes progress with the advance of Christian civilization, and if it be found that a practice not hitherto treated as a positive violation of its provisions be nevertheless a crime of the darkest character against our common humaity, it would surely become the great Christian States to include, by their united verdict, this atrocious crime among those which it is the duty of international law to prevent and punish.

Scarcely more than a century ago jurists of eminence were found to maintain the abstract right of a Christian belligerent to sell prisoners of war into slavery; in still more recent times the Bey of Tunis and the Bey of Algiers traded in Christian slaves. No Christian Government now would maintain the former opinion, or deny that the practice of the Algerines was justly punished as piracy by the armed forces of Christian nations.

But it is said that a bare declaration by France and England that slave-trading should be considered by them as piracy would have little or no practical effect unless accompanied by a mutual right of visit and search of each other's vessels, and that this is a thing which France could not permit.

Her Majesty's Government, fully appreciating the high sentiment of national honour which induces France to make this refusal, regrets that it should be called forth in the present instance, because England, which claims to be as jealous as any nation of the honour of her national flag, would feel a pride in submitting it, with reasonable and proper limitations, to the visitation of a French officer for so holy and noble a purpose.

But if circumstances unhappily render these means of destroying this wicked trade impossible, Her Majesty's Government still think the joint declaration of France and England that the Slave Trade is piracy would be a great boon to Christendom, and to the interests of the civilized world. No practice was more firmly embedded in the law of nations than that of privateering, and yet how much has the bare declaration of the chief States of Christendom done to put an end to this usage; in like manner, the example of France and England making a public declaration that Slave Trade was piracy would be followed no doubt by the adhesion of other nations, especially Spain and Portugal, and the new Empire of Mexico—kingdoms whose sentence would have, from peculiar circumstances, so much weight in this matter.

Upon the whole, therefore, Her Majesty's Government still earnestly hope that the Government of the Emperor may be induced to reconsider this proposal, and to take a step which, without wounding national susceptibilities, would make France a fellow-worker with England in removing the great reproach of Christendom.

R. P.

No. 53.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 31.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 28, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of January instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 2nd ultimo, respecting the demand for the extradition of the French fraudulent bankrupt Dulac, who had fled from the Island of Réunion and taken refuge in Mauritius, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us, that as we were clearly of opinion that the extradition in such a case could not, on the true construction of the Convention of Extradition between Great Britain and France, and of the Act of Parliament for giving effect thereto, be made on production of a warrant issued by a magisirate in the French Colony, your Lordship was desirous of proposing to the French Government to conclude an additional Article to the Convention, with a view to prevent the inconvenience and failure of justice which must occasionally occur, from the want of a suitable provision in the Convention to meet such cases.

1865

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state, that your Lordship accordingly directed him to transmit to us the draft of such an Article, and of a note to the French Ambassador, proposing it; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and report to you whether we saw any objection thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed additional Articles will suffice for the object for which they are framed, and that your Lordship's letter to the French Ambassador is fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 54.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 8, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 21st ultimo, inclosing a copy of a correspondence received from the Governor of the Windward Islands, reporting the circumstances under which he had declined to surrender to the Commander of the French ship of war "L'Amaranthe" four sailors who had deserted from that vessel and taken refuge in St. Lucia; and to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the proceedings of Governor Walker in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Administrator of the Government of St. Lucia was rightly advised by the Attorney-General of that island, that these French seamen could not be delivered up under the existing Treaties between France and Great Britain.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 55.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 15, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a copy of a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 187), reporting that a contract for the establishment of a National Bank in Mexico was signed on the 11th instant, and that, among other advantages, the privilege of exporting silver free of duty would be enjoyed by it; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether, under the IVth Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Mexico (a copy of which was inclosed for reference), it is not in the competence of Her Majesty's Government to claim a similar privilege.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the IVth Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and Mexico entitles Her Majesty's Government to claim that "no other or higher duties or charges" be imposed upon the exportation of silver to British territories than is imposed upon the exportation of that article to the territories of any other foreign State.

If the effect of the Contract signed at Paris is to enable silver to be exported from Mexico to French territories free of duty, I think it is competent to Her Majesty's Government to require that the same privilege be accorded to British territories. It is not, however, by any means clear to me that such would be the effect of the Contract signed at Paris; or that it would do more than confer privileges on a National Mexican Bank, the consequences of which (of whatever members the bank may be composed) would apply equally to all foreign States. It is, of course, necessary to examine the Contract itself before any satisfactory opinion can be formed upon the purport and effect of it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE

No. 56.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 3, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith the accompanying correspondence* with Mr. Ferdinand Niemann, a naturalized British subject, who is anxious to obtain the assistance of Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris in order to enable him to lay before the French authorities a claim he prefers against Mr. F. W. Hermann, a merchant at Bahia, who is at present in custody at Paris at the instance of the Brazilian Embassy in that city; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion as to any steps which Her Majesty's Government can properly take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken the papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris might be instructed, so far, to assist Mr. F. Niemann so as to enable him to lay his claim against Mr. Hermann before the French authorities.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 57.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 6, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Mr. Stubs, dated the 27th ultimo, complaining of proceedings in France as regards trade marks, which he considers are injurious to his interests; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether this is a matter in which your Lordship can take any or what steps on behalf of Mr. Stubs.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I consider the decision of the "Cour de Paris" to have been right, and that of the "Cour Impériale" and of the "Cour de Cassation" to have been wrong.

The Cour de Paris held that the French Law of 1857, and the Treaty with England of 1860, enabled the English proprietor Stubs to recover damages against the Frenchman who counterfeited his trade marks, that is, who sold, as his own production, certain articles marked with the name of Stubs, who invented them, and had a patent for them.

The Courts which reversed and annulled this sentence held that long usage of the Stubs trade mark in France (for about seventy years) had caused the use of this trade mark to belong to the "domaine public," and that the Law and the Treaty referred to had no retrospective operation upon articles already, by virtue of long usage, belonging to the "domaine public."

The answer is, that long usage can only prevail when the party injured might have interfered, and has not done so; but that in this case Stubs had always protested against the counterfeit, but before the passing of the Treaty had been able to obtain no redress. That the maxim of jurisprudence "contra non valentem agere non currit præscriptio"

---

* Mr. Niemann, March 2; to Mr. Niemann, March 2; Mr. Niemann, March 2, 1865.

1865

applies; and that the sentences of French Courts in 1846 (so much lamented even then by the most eminent French jurists), and previously to the Treaty, had, indeed, freed the authors of the counterfeit from liability to punishment in France at that period, but had not given them any property in the counterfeited mark. That the Treaty had clothed Stubs with the legal means of protecting himself from the usurpation of his name, the moral right to do which he had always possessed.

I am of opinion that the English Courts of Justice would protect the Frenchman's trade mark in similar circumstances.

I think that, although the construction of the French Law and the Treaty belongs to the French Tribunals, there is ground for representing to the French Government that these decisions must greatly impair the usefulness of the Treaty.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 58.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 9.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 239), inclosing a copy of a letter from the Préfet of Police, containing information supplied by him at the request of Messrs. Lewis and Cutts, Solicitors, of Ely Place, Holborn, with reference to a person named Victor Legrand, who is at present confined in Newgate Prison on a charge of extorting money from Mr. Walker; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it would be advisable to communicate the information in question to the parties interested.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the information in question might be properly communicated to Messrs. Lewis and Cutts.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 59.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 8th instant respecting a case which had arisen at the Windward Islands, in which the Governor had declined to surrender to the Commander of the French ship of war "L'Amaranthe" four sailors who had deserted from that vessel and taken refuge in St. Lucia, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Colonial Office upon this subject, inclosing a copy of a correspondence received from the Governor-in-chief of the Windward Islands; from which it appears that that officer has instructed the Administrator of the Government, in case of desertion from foreign ships of war to those islands, to be guided by the Act of Parliament 15 Vict., cap. 26, and the Order in Council, which determine the course to be pursued in regard to the apprehension and surrender to foreign Powers of deserters from merchant-vessels.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that the Secretary of State for the Colonies proposes to disapprove Governor Walker's instructions to the Administrator; and that he was directed by your Lordship to request our opinion upon this matter.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the day before he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Colonial Office, relative to the question of the surrender of the four saliors who had deserted from the French ship of war "L'Amaranthe" at St. Lucia.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have the honour to agree with Mr. Secretary Cardwell that the instruction, given by the Governor-in-chief of the Windward Islands to the Administrator of the Government of St. Lucia is wrong; and that the provisions of the 15 Vict., cap. 26, are not applicable to deserters from a foreign ship of war.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 60.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 31.)

Doctors' Commons, March 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Marseilles, reporting the sudden departure of and defalcations by Mr. Birch, who held the post of British Vice-Consul at that port; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether I consider that, in view of the fact that Mr. Birch was not a salaried officer of the Crown, but merely held the position of a paid Clerk at Her Majesty's Consulate, the losses incurred by Mr. Consul Mark should be made good to him out of the public funds.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I understand that Mr. Birch, though he bore the title of Vice-Consul, discharged the duties only of a paid Clerk of the Consul, by whom he was selected, and to whom he was alone responsible for the money which he was entrusted by the Consul to receive as his private agent, in the same manner as the clerk of a firm would be entrusted by the manager of it.

I do not think that the general principles applicable to such a case warrant the Consul in claiming assistance from the public funds to make good the defalcations of Mr. Birch.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 61.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports of June 18th, November 17th, and December 7th last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Earl Cowley (No. 25, Commercial), containing the reply of the French Government to the representations which Her Majesty's Government have made regarding "expertise" in France; and Mr. Layard was to request that we would take this despatch into our consideration, together with the previous correspondence,* and that we would report to your Lordship such observations as we may have to offer in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these further papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Memorandum of the French Minister of Commerce, communicated in the note of M. Drouyn de Lhuys, is principally addressed to the proof of a point which we never controverted, namely, that it is competent to the French Government, by proper means of investigation and trial, to protect itself against the fraudulent introduction into France, as British, of articles which, although regularly documented, are not really of British origin. We accede to the view that the governing Article of the Treaty is the first, under which goods of British origin only are entitled to the benefit of the Treaty. But we find in the French Memorandum no answer to our view, founded on the same Article, that all goods which are really of British origin, which are introduced into France without fraud, and of which the British origin is authenticated in the mode prescribed by the Treaty, are entitled to its benefits; and that it is inconsistent with the Treaty to exclude such goods merely because certain experts, acting under a municipal law of France, may be of opinion that the allegation of British origin is false and fraudulent; fraud, and the place of growth or manufacture of particular goods, being questions of fact which ought to be the subject of evidence, and not of mere science, on which the opinion of experts might be held conclusive. The application of such a test as this to the question of origin manifestly opens a door to the erroneous, and merely arbitrary, exclusion of particular goods from the benefit of the Treaty, while they are really entitled to it.

---

* To Earl Cowley, No. 1,225; Earl Cowley, No. 1,167; to Earl Cowley, No. 1,397, 1863; Earl Cowley, No. 113; to Earl Cowley, No. 261; Mr. Grey, No. 15; to Earl Cowley, No. 596; Board of Trade, September 10; to Mr. Grey, No. 50; Mr. Grey, Nos. 76 and 130; to Mr. Grey, No. 201; Mr. Grey, No. 308, October 7, and October 10; to Earl Cowley, No. 790 and 791, 1864; Earl Cowley, No 20, 1865.

1865

Having regard, however, to the practical considerations suggested by Earl Cowley in his despatch of the 27th February, 1865, it may, perhaps, appear to your Lordship to be unnecessary, at the present time, further to pursue this controversy with the Government of France.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No 62.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands, signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 29th ultimo relative to the defalcations of Mr. Birch, lately British Vice-Consul at Marseilles, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at that port, dated April 25, containing additional observations in regard to this matter; and Mr. Murray was to request that I would inform your Lordship whether I see any reason for altering the opinion already expressed by me thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I regret to say that, in the additional observations furnished to your Lordship by Her Majesty's Consul at Marseilles, I find no reason for altering the opinion which I have already had the honour of expressing to your Lordship on this unfortunate case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 63.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 31.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 29, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence which has taken place between the Foreign Office and Messrs. Morlet, and Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris,* subsequent to the receipt of our Report of the 4th of August last respecting the case of the British schooner "Blue Jacket," which had been compelled by the French steamer "Milan" to desist from discharging her entire cargo at Campeachy, although duty on the whole was exacted at that port; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take into consideration the answer which has now been returned by the French Government, as contained in Lord Cowley's despatch (No. 517) of the 1st instant, to the representation made by his Excellency founded upon our Report above referred to, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the further course which Her Majesty's Government should take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to vary the opinion expressed in our former Report on this subject. The real point of the case, namely, the ineffectiveness and practical non-existence of the blockade at the time when the "Blue Jacket" was prevented from pursuing her lawful trading operations, remains untouched by the French Government, who continue as before to assume that point, as if it were not in dispute. If the matter proceeds further, it will, we think, be necessary to request the particular attention of the French Government to this subject, and of course to state to them distinctly (if this has not already been done) on what grounds Her Majesty's Government have been led to the conclusion that there was no legal blockade.

If Her Majesty's Government should for any reason deem it inexpedient to enter into, or to press, a controversy upon this point, we are unable to suggest any other steps which they can take in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 64.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 17, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that upon the receipt of my Report of the 29th of May last, respecting the proceedings of the French authorities in the Gulf of Mexico in regard to the British vessel "Blue Jacket," Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris was instructed to ask the French Government upon what grounds the French Government deemed the blockade to have been effective at the time when the proceedings complained of took place; and Mr. Hammond was directed by your Lordship to transmit a despatch from Lord Cowley containing the reply of the French Government, upon which he was to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Lord Cowley states that the French Government contend that "Le Milan" was on the spot before the arrival of the "Blue Jacket." It would rather have appeared to me that the French Government considered the blockade of Campeachy to have been effective, because the "Blue Jacket" arrived off Campeachy after the formal declaration of blockade, and after a French cruizer ("Le Milan") had received orders to enforce the blockade; but the complaint of the "Blue Jacket" is, that at the time of her arrival off Campeachy there was, de facto, no French ship of war on the station, and therefore no legal blockade; to constitute which there must be not only a formal declaration of blockade, and an order given for its enforcement, but the actual presence of a naval force on the spot.

In this case it is alleged that the "Le Milan" did not arrive until after the "Blue Jacket" had actually begun to discharge her cargo, and, if so, the "Blue Jacket" could not have broken a blockade which at the time of her entering the port did not de facto exist. But even if "Le Milan" was on the spot and failed to prevent the entry of the "Blue Jacket," the blockade was ineffective as far as the "Blue Jacket" was concerned.

As I understand the case, she, a neutral vessel, had passed into a friendly port, and was only liable to be seized if she came out with cargo while the blockade existed.

It is of course for your Lordship to decide whether the case be, all the circumstances considered, of sufficient importance to render necessary the continuance of the discussion respecting it with the French Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—On referring to the former Reports, I perceive that the French Government assert that the "Blue Jacket" at the time of her being prevented from discharging the remainder of her cargo was lying out of the territorial waters of Mexico; this fact, if it be true, may furnish some colour for a very arbitrary exercise of extreme belligerent rights to a neutral

---

* To Earl Cowley, No. 670; Messrs. Morlet, March 25; to Messrs. Morlet, March 25; to Earl Cowley, No. 262; Earl Cowley, No. 515, 1865.

1865 vessel. Possibly, all the circumstances considered, your Lordship might think it expedient to apprize the owner of the "Blue Jacket" that, after a full discussion of the question with the French Government, it did not appear to Her Majesty's Government that the prohibition by the belligerent ship to a neutral vessel to discharge a part of her cargo on a coast which that belligerent's vessel was, during the time while the discharge was taking place, blockading, warranted Her Majesty's Government in demanding compensation from the Government of the belligerent for a loss of price incurred by the neutral on account of his being compelled to complete the discharge of the cargo at another port.

R. P.

No. 65.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 26.)

Doctors' Commons, September 23, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Algiers (No. 50, September 5) respecting the Consular attestation prescribed by the Foreign Marriage Facilitating Act, 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, and the application of that Act to his own marriage in his own Consulate.

The draft of an answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Mr. Churchill's despatch was also inclosed, and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the general provisions of the 12th and 13th Vict., cap. 68, and more especially to those contained in the 9th section, I am of opinion that under those provisions the officiating chaplain at Algiers (referred to in Mr. Churchill's letter) may lawfully celebrate the marriage of the Consul at the Consulate, and that the same may be lawfully registered by the Consul himself, under the 11th section of that statute. I think it would expedient that a letter to this effect should be sent to Mr. Churchill, as it is certainly desirable that the marriage should not be solemnized by himself.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 66.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 7.)

Doctors' Commons, October 7, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the Home Office, inclosing a correspondence relative to the proceedings of certain English fishing boats, in seizing and taking to Whitby a French fishing boat which had caused damage to the nets of one of the former; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to any steps which should be taken in the matter.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th instant, transmitting a letter from the Home Office containing further information respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if the account of Superintendent Gregory (September 24) to the Chief Constable of the North Riding be accurate, no offence was committed by the Penzance fishermen. It appears that the French vessel while in English waters took the English nets on board, and intended to go to Scotland with them; and it is stated that when the Penzance vessels pursued the French vessel, the latter "wore round to meet them, and they came into the Whitby Roadstead together," no Englishman being, as I understand, on board the French vessel at the time; that legal advisers were employed by both parties, and a sum paid for the damage.

In these circumstances it does not seem to me that Her Majesty's Government are bound to take any steps.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since writing the above Report I am honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, transmitting further papers, which do not induce me to alter the opinion above expressed.

R. P.

No. 67.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 14.)

Doctors' Commons, November 14, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter dated the 6th instant, which has been addressed to your Lordship by Messrs. Clarkson Son and Cooper, stating that on the 3rd instant the French steamship of war "Dix Décembre" ran into and sank the Spanish merchant steam-ship "Murillo," in the neighbourhood of the South Foreland, thereby causing the loss of the whole cargo, and, it is feared, the death of three persons.

That Messrs. Clarkson state that the collision was occasioned solely by the bad navigation of the "Dix Décembre," and under these circumstances they request the intervention of Her Majesty's Government to obtain from the French Government compensation for the sufferers; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take Messrs. Clarkson's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government ought to take any, and if so what, steps in the matter to which it relates.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government ought to take no official steps in this case. The vessel alleged to be the wrong-doer is a French ship of war; the vessel alleged to have been injured is a Spanish merchant-ship. It is, therefore, primâ facie a matter between the Spanish and French Governments. I do not think that the fact of their being cargo on board belonging to a British merchant takes it out of this category.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 68.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 18, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that much inconvenience has for many years past been experienced in the Colony of British Guiana from the immigration from the conterminous French Colony of Cayenne of persons who are either escaped convicts, or convicts who have either entirely served out their sentences or are at large under a system analogous to that of tickets-of-leave in this country. That various plans have been, from time to time, proposed with a view to rid the Colony of such persons, as detailed in the Memorandum which accompanies this letter; and that it is now suggested that the Colonial Legislature should pass an Ordinance subjecting such persons to the penalty of banishment. The reasons for suggesting this measure will appear on a perusal of the accompanying correspondence with the Colonial Office.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to request that we would peruse and consider these papers, and report to your Lordship our opinion upon the subject.

He was also pleased to add that the French Ambassador has within the last few days, by order of his Government, given official notice of their intention to terminate the Convention of Extradition between Great Britain and France of February 13, 1843,* and that the nature of the answer to be returned to his Excellency's note is under the consideration of Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Home Department.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That of the various plans proposed in these papers for getting rid of these persons

---

* Hertslet, vol. vi, page 244. (See Article IV.)

1865

from the Colony, we think the one now suggested, namely, that the Colonial Legislature should pass an Ordinance subjecting them to banishment, is the best, and we humbly advise that it be carried into execution.

We entertain, however, serious doubts whether, in case of such persons not leaving the Colony within the time prescribed, it will be advisable (even if an affirmative answer should be returned by the Governor to Mr. Cardwell's question) to adopt the plan of compelling these persons to leave the Colony in some vessel bound for the country from which they came. We think that such a course, in some cases, might lead to complaints on the part of foreign Governments; and the Government of the Colony might be under the necessity of making arrangements with the masters or owners of ships, for the conveyance of these persons to some foreign destination, which would probably give occasion to various legal questions.

No Colonial Act or Ordinance can authorize deportations to any place beyond the limits of the Colony, and it follows that the infliction of imprisonment, or some other penalty, within these limits, is the only sanction by which a sentence of banishment can, in case of disobedience, be enforced.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 69.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received January 3, 1866.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 31, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence, which has been received from the India Office, relative to an outrage committed by some French sailors, forming part of the crew of the Imperial ship of war "European," while on shore at Singapore, which resulted in the death of a British subject; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion in regard to the nature of the answer that should be sent to the Government of India on the point raised by the Governor of the Straits Settlements as to whether a legal demand could be made under the French Extradition Treaty for the surrender of a French subject perpetrating a crime upon British territory and taking refuge on board a French man-of-war prior to arrest, and by whom such demand could legally be made.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by the Advocate-General of India as to the proper interpretation of the Extradition Treaty of the 13th February, 1843, between England and France, and that we think that the words "Diplomatic Agents" do admit of a formal requisition being made by the Governor in the name of Her Majesty, and that a requisition may be properly made by the Governor on the present occasion for the extradition of the French sailors charged with the perpetration of this crime.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Frankfort.

No. 70.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 13.)

Doctors' Commons, February 13, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort, inquiring whether it would be allowable for him to permit marriages between Jews, or in which one of the parties might be a Jew, to take place at Her Majesty's Legation. A copy of the Act of Parliament under which marriages are solemnized, and of the oath which is required to be taken by persons proposing to be married at Her Majesty's Embassies or Legations, was also inclosed; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Minister's question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the words of the oath cannot be altered or omitted, but that if the Jew chooses to take the proper oath, and go through the ceremony according to the rites of the Church of England, he ought to be allowed to do so. It does not seem to me to be any part of the duty of Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort to inquire into the religious faith of the subjects of Her Majesty who desire to be married according to the prescribed forms in the chapel of the Embassy.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 71.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 5.)

Doctors' Commons, December 5, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me three letters and a statement respecting the circumstances under which the son of Mrs. Baldock, a minor, is detained, as she alleges, against her will in Darmstadt.

A despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort (No. 93), inclosing a full report on the case and detailing the steps taken with regard to it by himself before the local legal Tribunals, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether, under the circumstances, Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort should be instructed further to interfere; and if not, what course Mrs. Baldock should be recommended to adopt in the matter.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, transmitting a further despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort respecting the circumstances under which the boy Baldock was detained at Darmstadt against the will of his mother.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have no difficulty in advising your Lordship that Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort should not be instructed to interfere further in this matter. Justice seems to have been well administered by the local Tribunals. The extremely foolish and injudicious conduct of Mrs. Baldock's agent, Madame de Jouy, appears to have been the principal cause of the confusion and trouble in which this simple matter became involved.

If your Lordship thinks that any advice should be tendered to Mrs. Baldock, it should be to bring her son home as soon as she pleases, there being no obstacle to her doing so.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 72.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 29.)

Doctors' Commons, December 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence which has taken place since the date of my letter of the 5th instant respecting the detention of Mrs. Baldock's son at Darmstadt.*

That I should see from these papers that the youth has been released, and has returned to England, but that the greater portion of his effects are still retained. That the despatch of the 15th instant from Her Majesty's Minister at Frankfort, which I should find among the papers, contains a copy of a document which he has received from the Darmstadt Government, which purports to be a memorandum of the terms in which Mr. Kösterns, who detained the youth, is prepared to compromise the dispute about the effects.

That the same despatch contains a receipt given by Mr. Kösterns' daughter to Madame de Jouy, acknowledging that she has received her effects, which document was forwarded by Madame de Jouy to Her Majesty's Minister, and has subsequently been reclaimed by her, and which the Darmstadt Government believe to have been improperly obtained by Madame de Jouy, as it has been reported to them that Miss Kösterns' effects are still in that person's possession; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what further steps, if any, it would be advisable to take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that there is no reason for any further official interference in this matter. There is no longer any question of the personal liberty of the boy, and the question as to whether his clothes are or are not rightly impounded for a debt is one, I think, for the Civil Tribunal at Darmstadt, and not for Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—I think that the receipt may be returned to Madame de Jouy, but it would be expedient to preserve an exact copy of it.

General.

No. 73.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 10, 1865

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 8th of March instant, stating that a question having arisen as to the position of foreigners naturalized in a British colony, he had the honour, by direction of your Lordship, to request that we would, at our earliest convenience, favour your Lordship with an answer to the following question:—

Is a foreigner, so naturalized, entitled to the protection of the British Government beyond the precincts of the Colony in which he has been naturalized; reservation being, of course, made of the rights claimed over him, on his native soil, by the Government of which he is by birth a subject?

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this question into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that a foreigner, duly naturalized in a British Colony, is entitled, as a subject of the Queen in that Colony, to the protection of the British Government, in every other State but that in which he was born, and to which he owes a natural allegiance.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mrs. Baldock, December 2, 5, 10, and 14; to Mrs. Baldock, December 7; Sir A. Malet, Nos. 94 and 98; to Sir A. Malet, Nos. 5 and 6.

No. 74.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 28.)

Doctors' Commons, March 28, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,* together with a Memorandum which has been prepared in the Foreign Office, relative to certain islands in the Pacific Ocean, for the grant of Crown leases of which applications have been made by certain British subjects in the Australian colonies; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether a title can be made to these islands by any foreign Power.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That as far as I am able to form an opinion from the papers before me I think that no foreign State can maintain any title to these islands. They appear to bear no trace of the existence of the dominion of any foreign State, and having been discovered by subjects of Her Majesty they accrue to the Crown, if it think fit to take possession of them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 75.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 24.)

Doctors' Commons, July 20, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Smith, Registrar of the Mixed Commission Courts established at Sierra Leone under the Treaties concluded by this country with foreign States for the suppression of the Slave Trade, reporting the death of Mr. Skelton, Judge in those Courts.

Mr. Murray was also pleased to state that it will be seen that, in consequence of Mr. Skelton's decease, and the absence of the Governor and of the Chief Justice of the Colony of Sierra Leone, a difficulty has arisen as to who is the proper person to fill the vacant Judgeship pending the appointment of a successor to Mr. Skelton.

And he was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Smith under the circumstances of the case.

And he was also to add that your Lordship would be glad to receive my Report in time to send instructions to Sierra Leone by the packet appointed to take out the mails to Africa on the 23rd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the words "the principal Magistrate" must be construed in accordance with the 2nd section of the Act of Parliament, to be "the principal Magistrate then residing and acting in the Colony," and therefore that Mr. Huggins, the Queen's Advocate, is the proper person to fill the office ad interim of the Judge of the Mixed Commission Court.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Colonial Office, January 6; Foreign Office, March 2; to Admiralty, March 7; Admiralty, March 10, 1865.

1865

Prussia and Austria did not, by this engagement, agree that the future Government of the Duchies should be bound to grant to such merchandize any other exemptions or facilities than those which Denmark was at that time bound to grant, by the Treaty of 14th March, 1857. They did not agree to extend to the roads or canals within the ceded Duchies, after their severance from the Kingdom of Denmark, any further exemptions or facilities which might result, not from any legislation of their own or of the Government of the Duchies, nor from any stipulations of the Treaty of 14th March, 1857, but from the mere subsequent spontaneous legislation of Denmark herself, without their consent or concurrence.

The recent abolition of transit dues by Denmark (so far as it affected articles not exempted from such dues by the prior Treaty), which the Treaty of 1857 contemplated indeed as possible, but did not require, was an act of spontaneous legislation of this kind, and could operate only within the territories which, at the time of such legislation, belonged to Denmark.

The stipulations of the 5th and 6th paragraphs of the IInd Article of the Treaty of 14th March, 1857, as to extending the exemptions of the 5th paragraph to "other articles" which might "hereafter, on any line of communication whatever, be allowed a similar exemption," and as to placing the roads or canals in question upon a footing of equality "with the most favoured roads upon the King of Denmark's territory," in case "the transit duties should be reduced below the rate above specified," bind the King of Denmark, within the limits of his own territory, for the time being; but they do not, in our opinion, enable him to bind, by Danish legislation, the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein after their severance from his territory.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

Report of the Queen's Advocate.

I am sorry to be obliged to differ from my colleagues upon this matter. The reasoning which leads me to a conclusion at variance with the one which they have arrived at is as follows:—

It is clear that by the XVIIth Article of the Treaty of Austria and Prussia with Denmark (30th October, 1864), the new Government of the Duchies succeeds to whatever rights and obligations, relative to matters of public interest in the ceded territory, had been previously stipulated for by the Crown of Denmark.

The King of Denmark, if the Duchies had remained in his possession, would certainly have been bound, after the Law of the 1st of April, 1865, to abolish transit duties on the lines of communication in the Duchies between the North and the Baltic Sea; and with respect to the obligation of the present Government of the Duchies, the true question appears to me to be whether paragraphs 5 and 6 of the Treaty of March 14, 1857 (for the redemption of the Sound dues), must not fairly be considered as contemplating the further reduction or abolition of the transit duties, and not whether that Article rendered such future reduction or abolition a matter of absolute certainty.

I think such a reduction or abolition was clearly contemplated by this Article. The Protocols and the Declarations, especially of Lubeck, Hamburgh, and Mecklenburg (referred to in the letter of M. Schleiden), which preceded this Treaty of 1857, strongly support this view, and good faith requires that Treaties of this kind should receive a liberal construction. If this view be correct, then, the abolition of the transit duties having actually taken place, the abolition of the road and canal duties in the Duchies is obligatory on the present Government of those Duchies; because it is an obligation which, according to the above-mentioned XVIIth Article of the Treaty of 1864, belongs to the category of "droits et obligations résultant de contrats régulièrement stipulés par l'administration de Sa Majesté le Roi de Danemark pour des objets d'intérêt public concernant spécialement les pays cédés."

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Greece.

No. 79.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 28.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, March 28, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, inclosing copy of a note which he had received from the Greek Minister for Foreign Affairs in reply to the one which he addressed to his Excellency founded upon the opinion contained in our Report of the 22nd of December last, on the subject of the refusal of the Greek Government to execute sentences pronounced in British Consular Courts against Ionians before the 2nd of June last; and to request that we would take these papers, together with the former ones inclosed therewith, into our consideration and furnish your Lordship with a Report thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take the accompanying despatch from Mr. Logie into our consideration, together with the papers referred to us in his letter of the 24th February on the subject of the refusal of the Greek Government to execute sentences pronounced in British Consular Courts against Ionians before the 2nd of June last.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 24th February on the subject of the refusal of the Greek Government to execute Judgments pronounced by British Consular Courts against Ionian citizens while under the protection of Her Majesty, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Italian Minister at this Court, requesting the good offices of Her Majesty's Minister at Athens to induce the Greek Government to come to a decision upon the claim of Messrs. Rodokanaki and Copello against the Ionian Verissi; and to request that we would take these papers, together with the former correspondence on the subject inclosed therewith, into our consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosure from Mr. Logie, and to request that we would take these documents into our consideration, together with the papers referred to us in his letters of the 24th of February and 11th instant, relative to the refusal of the Greek Government to execute Judgments pronounced by British Consular Courts against Ionian subjects.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that this is a case within the rule applicable to Judgments pronounced in a ceded territory before the cession. That rule would apply if we were dealing with any Judgment pronounced in the Ionian Islands. But we are here dealing with Judgments pronounced within the extra-territorial Turkish jurisdiction of Great Britain, which extra-territorial Turkish jurisdiction belongs to Great Britain at this moment as much as it did before the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece. Great Britain has not ceded that jurisdiction to Greece; the Court which pronounced these Judgments is not at this moment a Greek Court; it remains just what it was before; and the only change is, that the person of a Greek defendant is no longer amenable to the authority of that Court, and that we have lost the power to compel his obedience to a sentence by which he was and is bound.

We continue to think (as was stated in our Report of December) that the analogy most in point is that of a foreign Judgment; and that, under the peculiar circumstances of these cases, Her Majesty's Government has a right to expect from the Greek Government that they shall be treated as valid English Judgments, not open to appeal or cassation before any Greek Court.

1865

If the position of the Greek Minister, that they have become Greek Judgments by the cession of the islands, were sound, we should not be disposed to take exception to the rules for dealing with them laid down in his despatch. But we think the principle unsound; and we agree with the able Report of Mr Logie. Without binding ourselves to the adoption of all his premises, we agree in his conclusion, that these cases should be pressed on the Greek Government alone, and that every endeavour should be made to obtain from them a distinct engagement that both these Judgments shall be forthwith and unconditionally executed, on the application of the Supreme Consular Court.

It is very fortunate that Mr. Erskine was so discreet as to abstain from introducing into his communication with the Greek Government anything to the effect of the concluding passage of the Foreign Office despatch of the 27th of December, 1864. For (unless the Law Officers' Report on which that despatch was founded, was miscopied) it will be seen, on reference thereto, that the Law Officers did not "concur with Signor Pellegrini in thinking that these British Consular sentences might still be executed against Ionians by the sole authority of the British Consular Courts in Turkey," &c. On the contrary, they expressed (for reasons substantially the same with those offered by Mr. Logie) their dissent from that suggestion. We presume that the two important words "do not" (before "concur") were accidentally omitted in the draft of the Foreign Office despatch.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 80.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 22.)

Doctors' Commons, April 21, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 74), respecting the circumstances under which Mr. E. Draculi, a pensioner of the Ionian Government, has had his pension suspended by the Greek Government; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take this question into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That whether Mr. Draculi was or was not entitled to receive the allowance of a Representative in the Greek Parliament, as well as the pension secured to him by the Convention of March 29, 1864, is a matter exclusively for the determination of the Greek Government; but the Convention between Her Majesty and the King of the Hellenes guarantees to Mr. Draculi the payment of a pension. The Convention recites that "whereas certain Ionian subjects are in the enjoyment of pensions granted to them under the Ionian Government, His Majesty the King of the Hellenes undertakes that their rights shall be respected, and that they shall continue duly to receive the same." In the present instance the payment of it appears to have been suspended by the Greek Minister of Finance in order that the Greek Government may repay itself for money alleged to have been improperly paid or received by Mr. Draculi as a Representative.

Without maintaining that there may not possibly arise cases in which the Greek Government may be warranted in suspending payment of the guaranteed pension, they certainly ought to be of a most exceptional character. The terms of the Convention are specific; the pensioners are to "continue duly to receive" their pensions. The present case does not appear to me to justify the Greek Government in departing from the engagements of the Treaty. If the allowance as Representative has been improperly received, the Greek Minister should resort to proper legal means of municipal law to compel the repayment of it, and not place an embargo on a pension which he is obliged by the international engagements of a Treaty to pay.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 81.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 31, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a copy of an instruction given to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, founded on our Report of the 8th of November last, respecting the case of certain persons formerly in the service of the Ionian Government, but now pensioned by the Government of Greece under the Convention of the 29th March, 1864, together with Mr. Erskine's reply, and a further instruction addressed to him.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he inclosed a letter dated May 6 from the Colonial Office, inclosing a further letter from Mr. Boyd, who claims to be allowed to receive his pension, irrespective of any employment which he may hold under the British Government. And that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take Mr. Boyd's application into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to any instructions which might be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens on the subject.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 10th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Mr. Boyd dated the 11th instant, and to request that it might be taken into consideration with the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter of Mr. Boyd should be forwarded to Her Majesty's Representative at Athens, with instructions to support the claim which it contains and to endeavour to induce the Government of the King of the Hellenes to take it into their favourable consideration. The principle involved in this claim seems already to have been conceded by the Greek Government, in a just and liberal spirit, in the similar case of Mr. Stevens (see the printed correspondence pages 29-31;) and we cannot suppose that a like act of justice will be much longer denied to Mr. Boyd.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 82.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 6, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th of May ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 28th of March on the question of the refusal of the Greek Government to execute sentences pronounced in British Consular Courts against Ionians before the 2nd of June last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 94), reporting the result of his endeavours to induce that Government to execute forthwith the Judgments in the two suits of Copello and Rodocanachi against Verissi; and to request that we would again take this question into our consideration (the former papers being therewith annexed), and favour your Lordship with our opinion in regard to the arrangement suggested by M. Braila, the Greek Minister for Foreign Affairs.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the arrangement embodied in the proposed Convention of M. Braila does, upon the whole, appear to us to be a solution of the existing difficulties on this subject, which it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should adopt.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 83.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 4, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st June ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 6th ultimo, in which we stated that we were of opinion that it would be expedient to conclude the Convention proposed by the Hellenic Government for giving effect to Judgments pronounced by British Courts in Ionian suits before the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, he was directed by your Lordship to state to us that it was necessary, according to diplomatic usage, that the Convention should be signed in English, as well as French, and that your Lordship had accordingly caused a translation of the French draft to be made; but as there are many technical terms in the original, your Lordship requested that we would have the goodness to examine the English translation, and to make any corrections therein which we may consider necessary to adapt it to the French version.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have made some slight alterations in the English text of the Treaty, which, so altered, appears to us to be fit and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 83.

Draft of Convention.

HER Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and His Majesty the King of the Hellenes, being desirous to regulate by a special Convention the effects which are to result in Greece from judgments or decrees pronounced, previously to the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, by British Tribunals or Courts in Ionian suits, have named as their Plenipotentiaries, that is to say:

Her Majesty the Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Honourable Edward Morris Erskine, Her Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary to His Majesty the King of the Hellenes;

And His Majesty the King of the Hellenes,

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

All definitive judgments or final decrees pronounced in Turkey or in countries beyond Christendom before the $\frac{\text{21st May}}{\text{2nd June}}$, 1864, the date of the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, by British Consular Tribunals or Courts in suits between Ionian subjects, or between Ionians and subjects of any

SA Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes, désirant régler par une Convention spéciale les effets que produiront en Grèce les jugements ou arrêts rendus avant l'annexion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce par les Tribunaux et les Cours Britanniques sur des procès Ioniens, ont nommé pour leurs Plénipotentiaires, à savoir:

Sa Majesté la Reine du Royaume Uni de la Grande Bretagne et d'Irlande, l'Honorable Edouard Morris Erskine, Son Envoyé Extraordinaire et Ministre Plénipotentiaire près Sa Majesté le Roi des Hellènes;

Et Sa Majesté le Roi des Hèllenes,

Lesquels, après s'être communiqué leurs pleins pouvoirs respectifs, trouvés en bonne et due forme, sont convenus des Articles suivants:—

ARTICLE I.

Seront exécutoires tant en Grèce que par devant les autorités Consulaires Helléniques à l'étranger, sans révision du fond du procès, tous les jugements ou arrêts définitifs rendus en Turquie ou dans les pays hors de Chrétienté avant le $\frac{\text{21 Mai}}{\text{2 Juin}}$, 1864, jour de l'annexion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce, par les Tri-other State, shall be executable as well in Greece as before Hellenic Consular authorities abroad, without revision on the merits of the case, if at the time those judgments or decrees had acquired the force of a final decision. They shall be invested with the executory formula by the Hellenic judicial authority before which execution shall be solicited, without any other formality than the production of an authenticated copy of the judgment or decree, at the end of which the Ambassador or Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty at Constantinople shall have affixed the words "définitif, et passé en force de chose jugée," dated and signed by him.

The execution of the same shall take place on the application of the interested party in the forms and by the ways and methods authorized by Hellenic law, or, if any method is specified in the directory part of the judgment or decree, by that method, provided it be not contrary to the laws of public order in Greece.

ARTICLE II.

The definitive judgments or final decrees pronounced by British Courts and tribunals under the conditions above-mentioned, which may not have acquired the force of a final decision up to the date of the annexation of the Ionian Islands to Greece, shall be declared to be provisionally executable by the Hellenic tribunals, and shall be carried into effect, notwithstanding any act done by way of appeal, or of staying execution, upon the production, for each of such judgments or decrees, of an authenticated copy bearing the visa of the Ambassador or Chargé d'Affaires of Her Britannic Majesty at Constantinople, attesting that it is definitive and provisionally executable, but subject to appeal or opposition, or to any other duly specified mode of action by which it may be impugned or the execution of it stayed. But if such judgments or decrees should afterwards be disputed in the competent methods, the Hellenic tribunals shall determine therein.

ARTICLE III.

Suits commenced and not terminated by British Consular Tribunals or Courts up to the $\frac{\text{21st May}}{\text{2nd June}}$, 1864, shall continue their course before the Hellenic tribunals.

ARTICLE IV.

The present Convention shall continue in force during five years dating from the exchange of the ratifications When that period shall have expired, the judgments or bunaux Consulaires ou les Cours Britanniques entre sujets Ioniens, ou entre Ioniens et des sujets de tout autre Etat, si à cette époque ils avaient acquis l'autorité de la chose jugée. Ils seront revêtus de la formule exécutoire par l'autorité judiciaire Hellénique devant laquelle l'exécution sera demandée, sans aucune autre formalité que la production d'une copie authentique du jugement ou arrêt, à la fin duquel l'Ambassadeur ou Chargé d'Affaires de Sa Majesté Britannique à Constantinople aura apposé les mots "définitif, et passé en force de chose jugée," datés et signés par lui.

Leur exécution aura lieu à la diligence de la partie intéressée dans les formes et par les voies et moyens autorisés par les lois Helléniques, ou si quelque voie se trouve spécifiée dans le dispositif du jugement ou arrêt, par cette même voie, pourvu qu'elle ne soit contraire à des lois d'ordre public en Grèce.

ARTICLE II.

Les jugements ou arrêts définitifs rendus par les Cours et les Tribunaux Britanniques dans les conditions ci-dessus énoncées, qui n'auraient pas acquis l'autorité de la chose jugée jusqu'au jour de l'annexion des Iles Ioniennes à la Grèce, seront déclarés provisoirement exécutoires par les Tribunaux Hellènes, et mis à exécution, non obstant tout recours, sur la production pour chacun d'eux d'une copie authentique, portant le visa de l'Ambassadeur ou Chargé d'Affaires de Sa Majesté Britannique à Constantinople, et attestant qu'il est définitif et provisoirement exécutoire, mais sujet à appel ou opposition, ou à tout autre recours dûment spécifié. Mais si plus tard ils sont attaqués par la voie qui leur est ouverte, les Tribunaux Helléniques en statueront.

ARTICLE III.

Les procès commencés et non terminés par les Tribunaux Consulaires ou les Cours Britanniques jusqu'au $\frac{\text{21 Mai}}{\text{2 Juin}}$, 1864, continueront leur cours devant les Tribunaux Helléniques.

ARTICLE IV.

La présente Convention continuera d'être en vigueur pendant cinq ans à partir de l'échange des ratifications. Passé ce terme, les jugements ou arrêts émanant des Cours decrees emanating from British Courts or Tribunals, which shall not then have been declared executable by the Hellenic Tribunals, shall no longer enjoy the advantages conferred upon them by the present Convention, but they shall retain all their other effects according to Hellenic law.

1865

ARTICLE V.

The present Convention shall be ratified, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Athens within six months, or sooner if possible.

In witness whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same, and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done at Athens, the day of , in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty five.

et des Tribunaux Britanniques, qui n'auraient pas été jusqu'alors déclarés exécutoires par les Tribunaux Helléniques ne jouiront plus des avantages qui leur sont conférés par la présente Convention, mais ils conserveront tous leurs autres effets d'après les lois Helléniques.

ARTICLE V.

La présente Convention sera ratifiée, et les ratifications en seront échangées à Athènes, dans l'espace de six mois, ou plus tôt si faire se peut.

En foi de quoi les Plénipotentiaires respectifs l'ont signée, et y ont apposé leurs sceaux.

Faite à Athènes le , de l'an de grâce mil huit cent soixante-cinq

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 84.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 18th March last, relative to the claims of some Turkish subjects to certain lands near Thebes, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, and the correspondence which took place subsequent to the date of our Report, a note from Musurus Bey, inclosing a memorandum containing observations on the decision come to in this matter by the Government of Great Britain, France, and Russia: and he was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That the note and memorandum of Musurus Bey do not induce us to alter the opinion which we expressed in our last Report on this subject.

If (as we understand to be the case) Turkish subjects have not been legally competent since the Treaty of the 21st July, 1832, to acquire or hold lands in Greece, the claim of the Turkish subjects, advocated by Musurus Bey, which rests upon an alleged re-transfer to them in 1840, of the lands alleged to have been sold to M. Zacharoff after the Treaty of the 21st July, 1832, and before the Convention of 1837, seems to labour under a radical defect; even though every disputed question of law and of fact arising previous to such alleged retransfer could be assumed in their favour. For it by no means follows that because M. Zacharoff, if a bonâ fide purchaser, might have been entitled to the same rights which were conceded to other purchasers of lands under similar circumstances by the Hellenic Government under the Report of the Commission of 1849, it was therefore competent for him, either by a resale, or by the mutual cancellation and abandonment of his contract of purchase, to vest his rights, as such purchaser, in any Turkish subjects, whether those from whom he himself derived title or any others. Nor does it seem to us to be a sufficient answer to this objection that M. Zacharoff (if a bonâ fide purchaser, of which fact no evidence seems yet to have been offered) had been kept out of possession, down to 1840, by the acts of the Greek Government. The right reserved to Turkish land-owners by the Treaty of the 21st July, 1832, being at most to sell, and a sale (as it is alleged) having been actually and bonâ fide made, the alleged transaction of 1840 does not seem to us to have been one which, in any view of the case, the Greek Government could be called upon to recognize.

With respect to the other points in which the views expressed in the Report of the Representatives of the three Powers at Athens (23rd January, 1865), are now controverted by his Excellency Musurus Bey, we think it sufficient to refer generally to the Reports of our predecessors.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 85.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 21.)

Doctors' Commons, September 20, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 152) explaining fully the circumstances connected with the case of Mrs. Ingate, the widow of a British subject who had established a commercial firm at Patras, who had to proceed to Greece in order to administer the estate of her late husband.

A letter received from Mrs. Ingate's mother on her daughter's behalf, together with an instruction which was addressed to Mr. Erskine thereupon, was also inclosed,* and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion on the case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That whatever ground there may be for supposing that Mrs. Ingate's dealings with the creditors of her late husband are not altogether above suspicion, it seems unfortunately difficult to doubt that the Greek Tribunal, both in allowing the intervention of the Italian Legation (a fact apparently admitted) to prevent the examination ordered by the Court of Malleso's books, accounts, &c., and in the revoking order of the Judge Canellopoulos, has failed in the pure administration of justice. Nevertheless I think Mr. Erskine is right in apprising Mrs. Ingate that she should (the litigation relating to a matter cognizable only by the Greek Tribunals) exhaust the remedy of an appeal before she calls for the interference of Her Majesty's Minister. I venture, however, to make the suggestion that Mr. Erskine might find an occasion of speaking unofficially to the Greek Minister of Justice upon the subject of Mrs. Ingate's complaint, and that there is reason to believe that more speedy justice would be in consequence administered to her.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 86.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, September 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter, dated the 29th ultimo, from Mr. Routh, the legal adviser of Messrs. Capello and Rodocanachi, calling attention to the inclosed copy of a letter which he has addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens in regard to the Convention between Great Britain and Greece for carrying into execution British Judgments in Ionian suits.

A despatch from Mr. Erskine on the subject of Mr. Routh's complaint was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration with reference to our Report of the 6th June last, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, transmitting a further letter from the Italian Minister at this Court on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not sure whether Mr. Routh objects to the terms of the Convention on the ground that it leaves an appeal to the Greek Court open to the parties against whom his clients have obtained Judgments in the British Consular Court at Constantinople, or on the ground that it does not sufficiently provide against any perversion of justice under colour of that right of appeal.

---

* Mrs. C. Palk, August 2; Mr. Erskine, No. 87, August 9, 1865.

1865

If his objection be to the admission of any such appeal at all under the circumstances of his clients' cases, we think it is not well founded or reasonable. It was not in our judgment expedient that Her Majesty should insist upon the continuance, in such cases, of the jurisdiction of the British Privy Council as the proper Court of Appeal, notwithstanding the transfer of the sovereignty of the Ionian Islands to Greece. But if that jurisdiction was not to be preserved, and if no right of appeal had been given to the Courts of the country in which the Judgment was to be executed, the consequence would have been that the defendants would have lost their right of appeal altogether, and Judgments which were not originally conclusive would have been rendered so, merely by the change of sovereignty; which would have been, in our opinion, much more unjust to the defendants than the necessity of justifying their decrees before an Athenian instead of an English Court of Appeal can be to the plaintiffs.

The same reason which made it proper to provide for the continuance before Greek Courts of suits in progress, in which no definitive Judgments had been pronounced, made it also reasonable to give an appeal to the Greek Court from Judgments which, at the time of the transfer of sovereignty, were still appealable to Her Majesty in Council.

But if the point of the objection be, that the terms of the Convention do not adequately provide against any possible perversion of justice (supposing the existence of that disposition to do injustice which Mr. Routh, without any sufficient ground that we can see, imputes to the Greek Courts and Government), we think that, under the particular circumstances of these cases, there is some apparent ground for that objection.

When the terms of the Convention were originally before us, we were not aware that an appeal from the Judgment obtained by Mr. Rodocanachi had been actually brought before the Athenian Court, and had been already decided against that gentleman in his absence.

We think that, under these circumstances, it would have been prudent and desirable to stipulate, in the Convention, that no Judgment obtained in any British Consular Court, which was subject to appeal or other opposition at the time of the cession of the Ionian Islands to Greece, should be reversed or set aside, or otherwise treated as void, or deprived of effect, or prejudicially affected, by reason of any proceedings whatever which might have been taken in any Hellenic Court before the date of the ratifications of the Convention; and also that in case of any such appeal from any such Judgment to an Hellenic Court, the Appeal should be determined upon its merits according to the law by which the cause was governed at the time of its decision by the British Consular Court, and not according to any different law which might prevail in the dominions of His Hellenic Majesty.

We think it would be desirable (if not too late) even now to introduce a supplementary Article into the Convention into this effect. Under the Convention, as it stands, Her Majesty's Government would (we think) have just ground of complaint if these principles of judgment were not adopted by the Hellenic Courts; but it would be very desirable, if practicable, to exclude any ground for future discussion on that subject. We do not think it is by any means so clear as Mr. Erskine seems to imagine, that the money decreed in these cases either ought to be, or would be, ordered to be paid to the plaintiffs, pending an appeal, even if the Convention were executed in the best possible faith and according to the principles of judgment above-maintained. It is quite consistent with our own jurisprudence that payment of money under a Judgment may be stayed (in order to secure final justice) pending an appeal; and such a power seems to be contemplated, in cases proper for its exercise, by the express terms of this Convention. The difficulty of getting the money back again if the appeal should be successful (to which Mr. Erskine seems to allude, as making it a matter of practical indifference to the plaintiff, after he has received his money, whether there is any appeal or not), seems to us to be a strong reason why the Greek Courts should not, in all such cases, enforce actual payment before the right thereto has become final and absolute.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S—Since the above was copied we have received Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 25th instant, with the inclosures therein; on which, however, we do not think it necessary to make any further remark.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 87.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 4.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 4, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 21st of April last, on the subject of the sequestration of Mr. Draculi's Ionian pension by the Greek Government, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 172), inclosing a copy of a note from the Greek Minister, justifying the course they have taken in this matter; and to request that I would again take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which should be taken in regard to Mr. Draculi's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I still doubt the strict right of the Greek Government to lay an embargo on this fund; but if the "cumul," as it is called, is contrary to law (and the decision of the Court must soon determine this point), it is perhaps too much to expect the Greek Government to bring their action against Mr. Draculi, when they can repay themselves from money due to him which passes through their hands. But, however this may be, I do not advise Her Majesty's Government, after the explanation of the Greek Minister, to take any further steps in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 88.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 13, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our letter of the 29th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an instruction which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Erskine, Her Majesty's Minister at Athens, accompanied by a draft declaration for carrying into effect judgments pronounced by British Courts in Ionian suits; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are opinion that the draft of the instruction is fit and proper to be sent, and that the draft declaration is, with the slight verbal alteration which we have suggested, right and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 89.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr, Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying draft of an instruction, which, founded on our Report of the 29th of September, was addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 114), on the subject of a Declaration, or supplementary Article, to be attached to the Convention respecting British judgments in Ionian suits; he was also to transmit the accompanying despatch from Mr. Erskine, reporting the result of his endeavours to carry out that instruction; and inclosing a copy of a report of a Commission of the Chamber of Deputies on the subject of the Convention itself; and was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship any observations or suggestions we may have to offer thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it is desirable to endeavour to arrive at some arrangement of this embarrassing question, as to which it cannot be said that any clear or certain rule is afforded by the settled principles of private international law; the case of an extra-territorial tribunal, which by subsequent international arrangements during the interval between a particular judgment and its execution, loses a jurisdiction over the defendant which it possessed at the date of the judgment, being altogether novel and peculiar.

As far as we can understand from the papers before us, the nature of those modifications of the present Convention which the Commission of the Greek Parliament think desirable (if any Convention is made), we think they are likely to afford the basis of such a reasonable revision of the terms of the Convention as may be satisfactory if the supplementary terms proposed by Her Majesty's Government (in a form modified to correspond with the altered form of the original Articles) should be at the same time adopted. And we think it will be expedient that Mr. Erskine should be instructed to do all in his power in order to arrive at a final agreement with the Hellenic Government upon this footing.

We cannot assent to the view of the Athenian Commission, that any Convention or legislation upon the subject is superfluous; and, so far as the question of reciprocity is concerned, it may safely be stated that the tribunals of this country would certainly treat any sentence of the British Consular Court at Constantinople in favour of Ionian subjects from which an appeal had not been made in due time to Her Majesty in Council as final and conclusive, unless it appeared on the face of the proceedings that the Court had not jurisdiction over the parties and the subject matter of the cause.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Hayti.

No. 90.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 4.)

Doctors' Commons, January 4, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note which your Lordship has received from the Haytian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court dated the 20th ultimo, inclosing copy of a Treaty signed on the 3rd November between Hayti and the United States of America; and to request that I would take this Treaty into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon. Mr. Layard was also pleased to inclose, for my perusal, some correspondence which took place between your Lordship and Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Hayti with reference to the negotiation and signature of this Treaty.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I think the original objections of Mr. Spenser St. John were well founded. That I think the Haytian Government should be distinctly apprised that Her Majesty's Government regard this Treaty with great surprise and concern. With great surprise, inasmuch as it appears to Her Majesty's Government a most inconsistent act on the part of a State which, like Hayti, has signed the Declaration of Paris, having for its principal object the abolition of privateering, to consent to a subsequent Treaty which confers especial privileges upon privateers; and that the excuse put forward by the Haytian Government that the Treaty is made with a nation which has not signed that Declaration, and that Hayti will keep faith with the Powers who have signed that instrument, is really valueless, inasmuch as the very fact of admitting United States' privateers into the harbours of Hayti (to say nothing of the especial privileges which they are to enjoy) would, in the event of a war between the United States and any Power that had signed the Declaration, be, in fact, to lend efficient aid to the system of privateering, practised perhaps only by the United States during the war.

That Her Majesty's Government also view the Treaty with great concern, inasmuch as it is obvious that both on this account, and also on account of the especial favour covenanted to be shown to the United States, when belligerent, by Articles XV, XXIX, and XXX, it is impossible not to foresee that the other belligerent may deem himself entitled, if not obliged, to treat the Haytian Government, not as a neutral, but as an ally of the United States in any future war.

The United States' Government is of course aware of the embarrassment into which the provisions in their original Treaty with France as to the bringing prizes into their ports involve their country at the breaking out of the Revolutionary war in 1792; and even if it be intended (which is doubtful by the concluding words of the XXIXth Article of the Haytian Treaty) to accord this favour to other nations as well as to the United States, the experience of the present war must surely satisfy all Governments of the great improbability, if not of the moral impossibility, of being able to preserve neutrality in such circumstances.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 91.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, December 18, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of December instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 15th instant, with its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, stating that the Governor of Jamaica had ordered the deportation from that Colony of certain Haytian refugees who had been conspiring against the Government of Hayti; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion thereupon, and as to the answer which Mr. Secretary Cardwell proposes to return to Governor Eyre upon the subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Cardwell, and we think that the instructions which he proposes to send to Governor Eyre are proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 92.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 22.)

Doctors' Commons, December 22, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General for the Republic of Hayti (No. 36), containing observations on the right of Her Majesty's Consulate to afford an asylum to political refugees.

An instruction which, upon the receipt of my Report of the 11th instant, was addressed to Mr. St. John, the concluding paragraph of which has reference to this subject, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any further observations I may have to offer thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Spenser St. John seems to draw no distinction between the house of the Consulate and of the Embassy with respect to the question of an asylum. There is, however, no doubt, speaking generally, that the law of nations does make the important distinction between them which was adverted to in the former Report.

It is certainly possible that by long usage, as well as by direct concession, the Consular residence may have acquired privileges in this matter which are usually incident only to the house of the Embassy.

It is a matter for your Lordship's consideration whether or not it be expedient that a formal concession of such privileges should be obtained from the Government of Hayti, and the decision on this point may perhaps be influenced by the inquiry as to whether such privileges are now conceded to the Consulates of other foreign States. France, I believe, has always been inclined to extend as much as possible the privileges of her Consuls.

One obvious disadvantage of obtaining such increase of privileges is, its tendency to involve Her Majesty's Government in the civil quarrels of the State in which the Consul is resident.

In the meanwhile there is no sufficient evidence before me that Her Majesty's Consul at Hayti has at present any privileges beyond those usually incident to his office.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 93.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 23.)

Doctors' Commons, December , 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that a despatch has been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in the Republic of Hayti, stating that he had been informed by the Haytian Secretary for Foreign Affairs that the blockade of Cape Haytien had been raised, and that the port had been opened to commerce; and that as the notification of such blockade has never been made public, Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would inform your Lordship whether, in my opinion, it is necessary that the notification of the raising of the blockade of Cape Haytien should be made public.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it is not necessary that a notification of the raising of the blockade of Cape Haytien should be made public.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Italy.

No. 94.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 11.)

Doctors' Commons, March 11, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying correspondence which your Lordship has had with the Italian Minister at this Court respecting the nationality of certain parties at Messina, together with a correspondence on the same subject with the British Vice-Consul at that place, from which I should see that in the case of Mr. Richard Edward Sofio, Mr. Richards was informed that, as that person was born in Messina, he could not be protected as a British subject in the dominions of His Italian Majesty. That as, however, the Italian Minister has applied in other cases, and as Mr. Richards states in his despatch of the 1st instant, that there are about 100 individuals residing within his Consular district all born in Messina, or in Sicily, who claim British protection on the ground that their fathers were British by birth, Mr. Hammond was to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion as to whether the instruction given to Mr. Richards in Mr. Sofio's case were right and proper, and are applicable to other cases.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there are two abstract propositions respecting the subject which have at different times been found difficult to reconcile in practice. One, that the sons of British-born subjects are bound by the obligations of allegiance, and therefore entitled to the protection of Her Majesty. This is the proposition which was present to the mind of Sir W. Temple, and is stated without qualification in his despatch of the 16th of September, 1837, to the British Consul at Messina (Inclosure No. 14, Mr. J. Richards), and which was unhesitatingly admitted, it is to be observed, by the Neapolitan Minister for Foreign Affairs.

The other, that as Great Britain claims as a maxim of her municipal and constitutional law that all persons born in British territories are British subjects, she cannot refuse the recognition of the same principle to other States. It seems to me, however, that these two propositions may be sufficiently reconciled in practice.

With respect to States which have the same rule of law as Great Britain on this subject of the accident of birth impressing a national character on the person born, and which also claim from Great Britain the recognition of this law, such recognition ought not to be refused by Her Majesty's Government. Therefore, if the law of the Kingdom of Italy be, that a person born in Italian dominions owes allegiance to the King of Italy, and the Italian Government claims to treat such person as an Italian subject; he, though the son of a British father, ought not, while in the Italian dominions, to be protected by British authority from discharging the duties incident to the fact of his birth, such as serving in the national army and the like.

Such person, however, is entitled to British protection in every other State but the Kingdom of Italy, and moreover ought not to be compelled at any time by the Italian Government to the performance of any service which would bring him in direct conflict with his allegiance to the British Crown.

It may also be as well to state, with reference to this subject, that the son of a British subject born in the house of the Embassy, or in the lines of Her Majesty's army, or on board one of Her Majesty's ships, though locally born in the dominions or waters of a foreign State, is entitled to be considered as born in Her Majesty's dominions.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 95.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 4.)

Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin (No. 82, March 9) relative to a question which has arisen in connection with the proposed sale of the Italian State railways: that it appears that in July 1851, the Italian Government contracted a loan with the London house of Hambro and Son, which, besides the ordinary State security, obtained in addition the further one of a mortgage upon certain Government railways; that by the 14th Article of the Contract, copy of which accompanies Mr. Elliot's despatch, it is established that if the Government determine to sell to any Company the railways mortgaged to the Messrs. Hambro, the holders of the bonds of the loan shall be entitled to exchange them, at par, for a corresponding amount in shares of the Railway Company at their nominal value; that the Italian Government having sold the State railways to the Lombard and Central Italian Railway Company, the holders of the Hambro bonds conceive themselves, under the clause above cited, to have a right to exchange their

HAÏTI.

No.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received December 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 11, 1865.

Circumstances connected with the loss of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog" at Cape Haïtien.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the [illegible] ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in Haïti, reporting the circumstances connected with the loss of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog" at Cape Haïtien, together with the previous despatches which had been received from Mr. St. John, as well as various letters from the Board of Admiralty, relating to the state of affairs at Cape Haïtien; and to request that we would take all these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether, under the circumstances therein set forth, Captain Wake, commanding Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog," was, by any acts of provocation or hostility on the part of the insurgents, justified in using force against them; and whether he was justified in resenting the firing by the insurgents into the "Jamaica Packet," which vessel was sailing under the British flag, though being at the time in the service of the Haïtian Government.

Was Captain Wake justified in using force against the insurgents?

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the [illegible] ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the [illegible] November, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the letters which your Lordship had received from the Revolutionary Council at Cape Haïtien, respecting the state of affairs at that place, and [illegible] the proceedings of the British Vice-Consul and of the Commander of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog." And also a letter, with its inclosures, which had been received from the Board of Admiralty, relative to the proceedings of Captain Wake, and to the circumstances connected with the loss of Her Majesty's ship under his command; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

These papers raise two very serious questions for our consideration, viz.:—

1. As to the conduct of the "Bulldog" in forcibly protecting the "Jamaica Packet" from the visitation of the ships of war belonging to the Revolutionary Council at Cape Haïtien.

2. As to the conduct of the "Bulldog" in making war upon the Revolutionary Council, sinking their ships, and silencing their fort.

There is, however, a question of fact, which presents itself in limine, as [illegible] bearing upon our opinion as to both these matters, [illegible] which, unfortunately, we have no very clear information. This [illegible] question of fact is, whether Her Majesty's naval officers on this [illegible] had, or had not, received orders from Her Majesty's Government [illegible] to the conduct which they ought to pursue as to this Haïtian [illegible].

[illegible] rebellion which so assumes the character and dimensions [illegible] to induce the relations of belligerent and neutral. The [illegible] properly used to designate not an infraction [illegible] on the high seas, but an act of national authority in [illegible] country. If it should be the case that Her Majesty's naval officers were instructed in no way to recognize the rebel forces as belligerents, then the conduct of the "Bulldog" was (so far as any principle of international law is in question) fully justifiable; and the Revolutionary Council has no de facto or de jure international status which can even entitle them to be heard. The Government of President Jeffrard is the only organ of communication which Her Majesty's Government can recognize; and he has no complaint to prefer against the "Bulldog." It is, of course, quite consistent with this view that, upon the same hypothesis, our own Government might have reason to blame an officer who, in their opinion, had officiously and unnecessarily interfered to aid a foreign Government against insurgents. If, on the other hand, this contest was, in the instructions given to Her Majesty's naval officers, treated as a state of war, in which they were to observe a strict neutrality, and, without a direct and positive recognition of the revolutionary party, to abstain from any conduct which might be injurious to them, then there was an order, amounting to the practical recognition of them as belligerents, and imposing a consequent duty of neutrality upon Her Majesty's ships.

Captain Wake's action in forcibly protecting the "Jamaica Packet" from visitation of ships of war belonging to the Revolutionary Council at Cape Haïtien.

We should be disposed to think, from the papers before us, that this latter view was the one taken by Captain Wake himself, for, in his letter of the 18th October, he says of the rebels that they "were in possession of, and the de facto Government of, Cape Haïtien:" and in another part, "I have promised to observe a strict neutrality, and the Council cannot allege that I have shown any disposition to depart from it." He, nevertheless, maintains that they were not at liberty to exercise belligerent rights beyond the limits of Cape Haïtien waters, and that, if they were, "they must instruct their Commanders to refrain from interfering with ships carrying the British flag, which flag is a primâ facie evidence of their nationality." He applies this doctrine to the "Jamaica Packet," of which he says: "In the case of the 'Jamaica Packet,' this primâ facie evidence was fully borne out by the papers produced by her captain. She is an English ship, chartered by the Government of the Haïtian Republic for the purpose of carrying stores" (which, in his subsequent statement, he describes as partly consisting of gunpowder). "She is," he adds, "unarmed, and her crew English." He, therefore, forcibly prevented the revolutionary ships of war from exercising the belligerent rights of visitation, search, and detention. There is no doubt, however, that if the revolutionary party were belligerents they were entitled not only to search, but to capture, and subsequently to condemn this ship as [illegible] pro hac vice the property and in the service of their enemies, whatever register she might have, whatever flag she might fly, and whatever might be the national character of her crew. If, therefore, the Revolutionary Council ought to have been treated as belligerents, this act of Captain Wake was wrong—founded, it appears, upon an error in law into which [illegible] of considerable difficulty and embarrassment might not unnaturally lead him at the moment.

2. With respect to the second question, we must observe that there are some material facts as to which we are not certain that we are rightly informed.

If we are to form our judgment upon the statement of Captain Wake himself, and the letters which he appends to it, the substantial facts appear these: After the affair of the "Jamaica Packet," the revolutionary party broke into the British Consul's house, took forcibly from thence certain refugees, Haïtians, and imprisoned them; a great panic prevailed, and it was feared that foreigners would be massacred. Captain Wake wrote to the Consul "to haul down his flag and come on board;" and to General Salnave (the revolutionary leader) to demand redress for the insult offered to the British flag by withdrawing the refugees from its protection. General Salnave [illegible] no answer, but his party again entered the Consul's house and took from thence two other refugees, Haïtian ladies. And [illegible] from [illegible] were pointed against the "Bulldog." The Captain of an American man-of-war tried in vain to mediate. Captain Wake prepared for battle, and [illegible] upon the revolutionary party, destroyed their two ships of war [illegible]

Captain Wake was not warranted in making war upon the Revolutionary Council on account of the removal of refugees from the British Consulate.

It will be observed that the insult complained of was, so far as these papers inform us, the forcible abduction of refugees from the protection of the British Consul's house and flag. But the Consular dwelling has not the privileges which attach to the dwelling of an Ambassador, and without stopping to inquire whether such a privilege as the reception and protection of refugees would have been incident even to the latter, it is clear that it was not incident to the former. The fact of their removal, therefore (even by force, if that was necessary), was not a violation of international law, nor an insult to Her Majesty's flag. It did not, therefore, warrant Captain Wake in making war upon the Revolutionary Council.

In the letters, however, of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, Mr. Spenser St. John, of the 18th October, to the Senior Officer of Her Majesty's naval forces, and of the 28th October to your Lordship, it is further stated that the Consulate was plundered, and that General Salnave, in the presence of Her Majesty's Consul, incited his men to assassinate Captain Wake. If these statements were accurate, and if these facts occurred simultaneously with the forcible abduction of the refugees, or before any act of hostility on the part of Captain Wake, they might materially affect the opinion which we have expressed. At present we think ourselves bound to accept Captain Wake's own history of what happened, in which these material facts are not once mentioned, and upon that history the present Report is founded.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

List of Papers.

Mr. S. St. John	(No. 16)	May	23, 1865.
Ditto	(No. 18)	June	8, ,,
Admiralty	..	June	16, ,,
To ditto	..	June	21, ,,
Admiralty	..	June	29, ,,
To ditto	..	July	4, ,,
Mr. S. St. John	(No. 19)	June	24, ,,
To Admiralty	..	July	20, ,,
Mr. S. St. John	(No. 21)	July	8, ,,
Admiralty	..	July	31, ,,
Ditto	..	August	14, ,,
To ditto	..	August	24, ,,
[illegible] Committee of Public Safety ..	..	July	20, ,,
Mr. S. St. John	(No. 25)	July	24, ,,
Ditto	(No. 26)	August	8, ,,
Admiralty	..	September	6, ,,
[illegible]	..	September	8, ,,
To Admiralty	..	September	13, ,,
Mr. S. St. John	(No. 27)	August	24, ,,
Ditto	(No. 28)	September	8, ,,
Ditto	(No. 29)	September	23, ,,
Ditto	(No. 30)	October	9, ,,
Ditto	(No. 31)	October	24, ,,
To Admiralty	..	November	23, ,,
[illegible]	(No. 39)	November	16, ,,
To Mr. S. St. John	(No. 2)	November	17, ,,
Mr. S. St. John	(No. 32)	November	23, ,,
Admiralty	..	November	25, ,,

[illegible] Revolutionary Council	..	October	19, 1865.
Ditto	..	October	23, ,,
Ditto	..	October	24, ,,

HAÏTI.

60

No. .

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 22, 1865.

Loss of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog."

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified to us by Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th December instant, stating that he had been directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Board of Admiralty, together with its inclosures, respecting the loss of Her Majesty's ship "Bulldog," and requesting that we would take those papers into our consideration, together with those already before us, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience; and we have accordingly taken all the before-mentioned papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report to your Lordship thereupon that—

We beg to refer to our former Report in the case of the "Bulldog," and to the opinion which we therein expressed upon these proceedings. The subsequent information which we have derived from these papers confirms us in the view which we were then obliged to take.

It seems now to be clear that there was a state of war de facto between the Government and the revolutionary party at Haïti; that the belligerent right of blockade had been recognized by Her Majesty's naval forces on behalf of one of the parties in this contest, and that orders had been given to Captain Wake not to interfere, although Her Majesty's Government had not formally recognized the existence of a state of war.

We find it impossible to escape from the conclusion that Captain Wake did, upon an erroneous notion that he had a right to protect the steamer which was employed by the Haïtian Government, actively interfere against the revolutionary party; and from this source it is evident to us that all the subsequent mischief flowed.

The next error seems to have been the notion that the Consul was entitled to receive and protect refugees in his house, and the present papers more than confirm our former opinion that no injury was inflicted upon the official house of the Consul previous to the time when the "Bulldog" opened her fire. Indeed, it would now appear that no injury whatever was inflicted upon the official house, and very little, if any, upon the private dwelling of the Consul.

True aspect of the whole affair is that of an active intervention on behalf of the Government of Haïti at variance with policy of Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the subsequent action of the "Galatea," we presume that this must be treated as having been taken under the orders of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, upon whom the responsibility must principally rest; and we cannot but think that the true aspect of the whole affair, from first to last, is that of an active intervention on behalf of the Government of Haïti in this civil war, at variance with the policy which Her Majesty's Government had determined to adopt.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
R. PHILLIMORE.

No. 93 A.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 11.)

Doctors' Commons, January 10, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 13th ultimo, relative to the claims of British subjects in connection with the affairs of the Apulian Railway, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, therewith, a letter from Mr. Conder, inclosing a further statement respecting his case, and expressing a wish to have an interview with me thereupon; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would make arrangements for a meeting with Mr. Conder, and communicate to your Lordship any further observations I may have to make on the case after my interview. The former papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have had a long interview with Mr. Conder, and received from him an elaborate statement of all the proceedings which have taken place with respect to his claims, as one of the concessionnaires or grantees of the Apulian Railway, both before the Civil Tribunals and by the direct action of the Executive Government, apart from, and indeed in opposition to, the principal Civil Tribunals.

I think it unnecessary to trouble your Lordship in this Report with a recapitulation of all the details of this long-pending and rather complicated case.

The question whether, and how far, Her Majesty's Government ought to accede to the request of Mr. Conder, and intervene on his behalf by a direct application to the Italian Government, does not seem to me to require for its solution any such recapitulation.

The principal features of the case, as it now stands, are these:—

It is undisputed that on the 19th of May, 1856, Mr. Conder became, so to speak, a co-concessionnaire of the grant or concession of the Apulian Railway, which had been made to Melisurgo on the 6th of April, 1855.

It appears from the Instrument (which Mr. Conder has shown me) of this Concession, that (Articles 12 and 13) if the railway was not open for public traffic, at least for the greater part, after the lapse of five years, that the caution-money mentioned in Article 23 was to be forfeited to the Royal Government; but that even in this event, as soon as ten miles of the railway from Naples were completed, the caution-money was to be restored to the concessionnaire, and the ten miles to be substituted for it as the property of the Government, the Crown might grant a second term, if it thought fit, to the concessionnaire.

It appears that the original term of five years would have expired before the requisite works were completed, and that the term was enlarged to six years, but that eighteen months before the expiration of this term the Government thought proper to treat the concession as null and void, on the ground of the non-fulfilment, or rather of their opinion of the impossibility of the fulfilment, of the contract, and to bestow the grant on other parties. Primâ facie, at least, this determination of the Government was in direct contravention of the 26th Article of the grant, which had expressly provided as follows:—"The questions that may arise from the present contract shall be decided, without judicial forms, by two arbitrators, of whom one shall be nominated by the Royal Government, and the other by the concessionnaire. In case of difference of opinion, the third arbitrator necessary shall be the President of the Grand Civil Court of Naples, whom the King, in the plenitude of his sovereign power, expressly dispenses from the disposition of Article 212 of the Law of the 29th of May, 1817. The said arbitrators shall judge, without appeal, and their sentence shall have the force of a legal judgment, against which no extraordinary remedy shall be admissible, especially application for reversal." Mr. Conder claimed the execution by the Government of this Article, and cited the Agente del Contenzioso, that is, the Law Officer intrusted with the defence of the Neapolitan Government against all claims. The Court of the First Instance at Naples considered itself incompetent to entertain the case; but the Court of Appeal, called the Grand Civil Court of Naples, gave sentence for the appointment of arbitrators, as sought by Mr. Conder (1861-62).

At this period in the history of the case the Government appears to have determined on [illegible] an arbitrary power incident to the old Kingdom of Naples (and [illegible] [illegible] extent of its injustice), of transferring the cognizance of this [illegible] from the Civil Tribunals to the Executive itself, on the ground that the interests of the [illegible] were affected. The Government with this view referred the matter, as they [illegible] to the Privy Council (a [illegible] body analogous to it at Naples), and that body all but unanimously decided against the Government that the arbitration clauses of the instrument ought to be put in force. Much delay thereupon ensued, the Government refusing to act upon the decision of the Privy Council, being, it must be presumed, apprehensive that the arbitrators would decide in favour of Mr. Conder. At last, being much pressed, though unofficially, by Her Majesty's Representative at Turin, they took the singular course (as I understand it) of instructing the Agente del Contenzioso to cite Melisurgo and Conder before the Privy Council or the Council of Prefecture (of which body I am informed that the Agente is himself a member), in order that these gentlemen might "hear it declared by that body that they had no right to any reference or nomination of arbitrators, nor to any discussion before any authority subordinate to the Royal power," that is, in other words, the Italian Government again insisted upon withdrawing the interpretation of this contract from the cognizance of the ordinary and proper tribunals of justice, and upon dealing with it by the arbitrary power of the Executive itself.

---

It may be observed, in passing, that the citation confers one advantage upon Mr. Conder, namely, that by its recital of the proceedings which have taken place, it places beyond doubt a point which the Italian Government formerly disputed, namely, the right of Mr. Conder to sue in his own name for the execution of his contract as a co-concessionnaire with Melisurgo.

It does appear to me that Her Majesty's Government, in this state of things, are entitled to press upon the Italian Government the injustice of depriving Mr. Conder of the right which clearly accrues from the language of the instrument of the concession. I think this is the point which it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should urge; and in all probability the result of their so urging it would be, that some compromise would be offered by the Italian Government which Mr. Conder would no doubt be well inclined to accept.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 93 B.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Doctors' Commons, January 27, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 10th instant, respecting the claims of Mr. Conder and other British subjects against the Italian Government, arising out of a concession for the construction of the Apulian Railway, he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, inclosing a letter from M. Jacini, the Italian Minister for Public Works, stating the conditions upon which alone the Italian Government are disposed to enter into an arrangement with the claimants in this case.

A correspondence which has passed between the Foreign Office and Messrs. Conder and Barry, on the subject of the Italian proposals, and which include some further information furnished by Mr. Barry in support of the claim, was also inclosed; but that in transmitting these papers Mr. Hammond was to explain that your Lordship considered it advisable to defer acting upon my Report above referred to, until answers should have been received from Messrs. Conder and Barry to the communication of the Italian conditions; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should now be pursued by Her Majesty's Government with reference to this claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in my former Report I suggested, that if Her Majesty's Government were to press upon the Italian Government the right of Mr. Conder to the nomination of arbitrators, some compromise might probably be offered by that Government.

It seems now unnecessary to take this course, inasmuch as Messrs. Conder and Barry appear to me to have acted very wisely in accepting, as I understand them to have done, the arrangement proposed by the Italian Government; and though I adhere to the opinion that the refusal to allow Mr. Conder's claim to be taken before arbitrators was indefensible on the part of the Italian Government, I have the honour to [illegible] Her Majesty's Government that it would be wise and proper, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, to accept the present offer of the Italian Government as a [illegible] [illegible] of this [illegible].

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT [illegible]

1865

bonds at par against shares in the new Company. That the Italian Government, however, take a different view of the matter, in which they are supported by the Committees of the Chambers of Deputies, and by a special Commission appointed to report on the subject; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that I would take this question into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the leading principles of jurisprudence applicable to an agreement of this description are: first, that the language of the Articles shall be interpreted according to their plain and natural meaning, unless such a construction would involve a manifest contradiction or an absurdity; and, secondly, that if there be an ambiguity in the language, it shall be construed rather adversely than favourably to the borrower who needed the loan and prepared the agreement.

It appears to me that the language of Article 14 is perfectly plain, and certainly does give Messrs. Hambro and Co. the option of exchanging their loan, at par, against a corresponding number of shares, at their nominal value, of the Railway Company to whom the Italian Government (which represents the original borrower, the Sardinian Government) has sold the railways mortgaged to this firm.

It appears to me impossible, with any regard to fairness or the true principles of interpretation, so to restrict the expressions "qualche Compagnia" as to make them signify a Company only which has not already issued its shares.

The plain dictates of justice, no less than the acknowledged rules of interpretation, required that if an important limitation of a general term employed in a contract without any restriction was intended, it should have been somewhere expressed, and not have been left to be imported into the contract at a future period by an elaborate argument on the part of the borrower to the injury of the lender. The consideration of the other Articles of the Contract does not, in my opinion, furnish any justification for the insertion of this new condition.

I do not comprehend the force of the argument adopted in the Report of the Committee to the Italian Minister of Finance, that by this construction the lenders "would not only have right of converting a right of mortgage into a joint dominion right, but the acquisition of an unjust gain would depend upon their option."

I see no unjust gain in the transaction. The Sardinian Government (then the Government of a poor State) required foreign capital to enable it to carry on a very important domestic undertaking; and in order to obtain the capital, offered terms such as might be supposed equivalent to the risk which the capitalist incurred.

I am equally at a loss to understand the argument, that because the Italian Government have sold other railways besides those mortgaged to the Messrs. Hambro, therefore the conditions of the 14th Article are inapplicable. I do not see how this fact can in any way affect the question. The simple truth is, that the argument now advanced by the Italian Government amounts to this—that the Sardinian Government, while it gave, in literal terms, an advantageous option to the lenders, as an inducement to supply the loan, meant all the while to reserve to itself means, which it forhore to express, of rendering that option altogether illusory.

I have read with sorrow and surprise what I must consider the sophistical attempt of the Committee, instituted by the Italian Minister of Finance, to alter the plain conditions of a contract with a foreign firm, which it is obviously inconvenient to the Italian Government to fulfil.

I humbly report my opinion that if the Italian Government persist in adopting this construction of the contract, they will be guilty of a breach of good faith to the Messrs. Hambro.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 96.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, with reference to my Report of the 27th of January, on the case of the Apulian railway, a draft of a despatch which, in conformity with my Report, was addressed by your Lordship to

Her Majesty's Minister at Turin. That I should perceive by Mr. Elliot's reply that the parties in this country who are interested in the matter, namely, Mr. Conder, who, after the conclusion of the contract, associated himself with the original contractor, M. Melisurgo, and Mr. Barry, the representative of Messrs. Pickersgill, and others who provided for the contractors the greater portion of the deposit required to be made by the latter, having misapprehended the offer made by M. Jacine, the Italian Minister, in the Memorandum inclosed in Mr. Elliot's despatch No. 11 of the 7th of January, Mr. Elliot thought it advisable to defer acting upon your Lordship's instructions until some further explanation could be obtained from the parties; reporting, at the same time, that M. Chiassusso, the Advocate, who had often been consulted in the case, had written direct to Mr. Barry on the subject. That, in this state of things, having obtained from Mr. Barry a copy of M. Chiassusso's letter, which inclosures, with others that Mr. Barry has also sent to Mr. Hammond, he (Mr. Hammond) informed the several parties, by direction of your Lordship, of the answer received from Mr. Elliot, and invited them to make any further statements they might think fit.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose those statements, and to request my opinion as to the instructions to be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Turin.

That the case, however, being one of a very complicated character, and the position of the several parties not very clearly defined, at least so far as their right to be assisted by Her Majesty's Government is concerned, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether the following is not a correct statement of the case, and of the extent of the obligations of Her Majesty's Government to render official assistance.

Melisurgo obtained a contract with the Bourbon Government of Naples, to which he afterwards admitted Conder. A part of the conditions of the contract was that the contractors were to find a deposit amounting, in the whole to 300,000 ducats, 50,000 to be paid within eight months, and the remaining 250,000 to be paid within the four months next ensuing after the first payment. This deposit was to be invested in Neapolitan Rentes, either in Melisurgo's name or in that of some other party named by him, but not to be sold out without the assent of the Government. This assent was obtained as regards the 50,000 ducats, which Melisurgo obtained from different sources, and the money was sold out and released; and it is made cause of complaint by Mr. Barry that this portion of the deposit has been preferentially released, leaving only in the rentes the sum representing the 250,000 ducats which Melisurgo obtained from certain parties in this country now represented by Mr. Barry, the rentes standing in the names of those parties, and they receiving the dividends, but having, at present, no control over the principal.

The contract has remained unexecuted, the concession being assigned by the Government to other parties on the ground of non-execution, the validity of which ground is disputed by the contractors, and specifically by the British subject Conder. Conder now claims from the Italian Government, first, the release of the deposit on the ground that the fulfilment of the contract was impeded wrongfully by the Government; and, secondly, full compensation for works done and materials supplied; and he invokes a provision of the contract purporting that any difference arising during its execution should be settled by arbitration.

The right of the contractors to obtain a settlement by arbitration has been established before the Neapolitan Tribunals, but the Government have claimed, in virtue of an obsolete law, that the case should be determined by a special Tribunal at Turin.

The Government have, however, expressed a readiness to treat for the release of the deposit and a settlement of accounts, provided the consent of Melisurgo can be obtained, either voluntarily or forcibly, by legal process, to a settlement being made by the Government with Conder, and the parties who advanced the deposit. The British Minister at Turin has been instructed to press the right of Mr. Conder to the appointment of arbitrators, but without success; nevertheless, in the interval, the obnoxious tribunal is abolished, and cases formerly triable in it are henceforth to be determined in a regular Court of Law.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that your Lordship understands that the only point of the case in which any of the British parties are entitled to be assisted by Her Majesty's Government is that which relates to obtaining for Mr. Conder, a British subject, the nomination of arbiters, to which it is held the contract entitles the contractors. That this appointment of arbiters would, of course, be also in the interest of M. Melisurgo, though not a British subject, in his character of original contractor. That if this is the case, the question would arise whether the substitution for the exceptional Tribunal of the "Amministrativo Contentioso," of a regular Tribunal before which Mr. Conder might proceed against the Italian Government, may be held sufficient to render any further pressure on the Italian Government for the nomination of arbiters unnecessary, and, if so, whether Mr. Conder should be recommended to have recourse to the Tribunal open to him.

1865

That it would seem that Mr. Conder cannot claim the assistance of Her Majesty's Government in order to obtain a settlement with the Italian Government, under any circumstances, or at all events until he obtains voluntarily, or by course of law, the consent of M. Melisurgo to a separate settlement, and the renunciation by the latter of any opposition to such settlement being effected without his participation.

That as regards the parties represented by Mr. Barry, it would seem that they have no direct claim on the Italian Government. indeed, they have proceeded against Conder and Melisurgo for recovery of the deposits; they entered into no contract with the Neapolitan Government, but merely advanced the money to Melisurgo, to whom and to his associates they are to look for reimbursement, either on the ground that the contractors have been wrongly dealt with, or that they are, in fact, the wrong-doers, in failing to fulfil their contract, on the assurance of their intended fulfilment of which the parties advanced the money.

That the further question then arises, whether the money, having by the terms of the contract been invested in rentes, the mere release of the embargo placed by the Government over those rentes is all that the depositaries, whether in the first or second degree, can claim, or whether they are entitled to receive in money the amount deposited in money, and not merely the amount of stock, however depreciated in value it now is, which was purchased when the money was first deposited.

That this question, however, would seem to be equally one between the parties and the contractors, and not between them and the Italian Government, and, at all events, not one for the settlement of which they can claim the assistance of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to add that he had entered into these details in order that I might understand the points in regard to which your Lordship would be glad to have my opinion after a re-consideration of the whole case as stated in the papers in the volume now sent to me, and which contains all the correspondence on the subject up to the 31st of last month.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the case of Mr. Conder, the history of it, so far at least as is requisite for the consideration as to whether and how far this gentleman may be entitled to call upon Her Majesty's Government for their assistance, appears to me to be fairly and properly stated in the letter of Mr. Hammond.

In the first Report which I had the honour to make upon this subject (dated 6th July, 1864), I expressed my general concurrence with the views of my predecessor in office (before whom the case had also been laid), and my opinion to the effect that Mr. Conder could not claim a better position than M. Melisurgo, the original grantee: and that Melisurgo had, so far as this contract was concerned, placed himself on the footing of a Neapolitan subject; and that with respect to the execution of this contract, he could not claim any right which was not incident to a Neapolitan subject; but that I thought Her Majesty's Government might direct Mr. Elliot to urge upon the Italian Government that Her Majesty's Government considered that Mr. Conder was unjustly treated in being denied the recourse to arbitration for which specific provision was made in the contract. In my Report of the 13th December, 1864, I repeated in substance this opinion. In my last Report of the 10th January of this year—made after an interview which I was requested to have with Mr. Conder—I entered at greater length into the history of the case, but again arrived at the conclusion that the interposition of Her Majesty's Government should be limited to pressing upon the Italian Government the justice of Mr. Conder's demand for the appointment of arbitrators, and the removal of the case to this tribunal from another Court of a most objectionable kind, to which the Italian Government, availing themselves of a most obnoxious privilege of the Neapolitan Crown, had submitted the matter.

At this period, Mr. Conder represented that the Italian Minister of Public Works had proposed terms which might end the controversy; that, in fact, the Minister offered to release the whole caution money, and repay the outlay.

It now appears that Mr. Conder has materially misapprehended the offer of the Italian Minister, which was, in effect, no more than a declaration of his willingness to treat with Mr. Conder as soon as he could produce the consent of M. Melisurgo.

In my first Report I had expressed my opinion that such a demand was reasonable on the part of the Italian Government, and I certainly understood from Mr. Conder that he had obtained this consent.

In the proceedings before the peculiar Court to which reference has been made, the Italian Government had cited personally Mr. Conder, and had, as I observed in my last Report, so far as that Court was concerned, given him a locus standi before it.

But it now appears that this Court, justly complained of by Mr. Conder, has been abolished, and that the claim of this gentleman will be referred to the ordinary Tribunals. It must be presumed that these Courts will decide (as indeed the Grand Civil Court—see printed papers by Mr. Conder, Naples, 20th October, 1862—seems, in 1861, to have done) in favour of the arbitration provided for by the contract.

But however this may be, and in any case, I think that the construction of this Italian contract, and the validity of all its provisions and the consideration of all its incidents, must be left to the ordinary Italian Courts of Justice. The grievance of the extraordinary and unjust tribunal against which the interposition of Her Majesty's Government has been hitherto mainly directed, is now removed; and though I think Her Majesty's Government might again direct Mr. Elliot still to express their hope that the arbitration will be fairly carried into effect, I am of opinion that Mr. Conder should be apprised that he must not rely upon any further interposition from Her Majesty's Government; that he must now, and henceforth, consider that he must make out his case as an Italian subject would be obliged to do before the proper Italian tribunals, and to take whatever measures—whether for obtaining or compelling the assent of M. Melisurgo—he may be advised are necessary, either for that purpose, or for entering upon an amicable arrangement out of Court with the Italian Government.

With respect to the parties represented by Mr. Barry, it does not appear to me that they can claim the official assistance of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Singed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 97.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 25, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying drafts of further communications which your Lordship proposes to address to Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, and to Messrs. Conder and Barry, and which are founded upon the opinion expressed in my Report of the 13th instant in regard to the further interference of Her Majesty's Government in the matter of the Apulian Railway; and to request that I would take these drafts into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I concur therein.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the letter which it is proposed to send to Messrs. Conder and Barry is fit and proper to be sent.

That in the letter to Her Majesty's Minister at Turin the concluding words "before an ordinary Italian Tribunal" should be omitted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 98.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 11, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 24th ultimo, inclosing a draft of a letter which your Lordship proposed to address to Mr. Conder and to Mr. Barry with reference to the present aspect of their claim in the matter of the Apulian Railway, and explaining the extent to which Her Majesty's Government are prepared to support their interests through Her Majesty's Minister at Turin, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter which your Lordship has received from Mr. Conder in reply, and from which I should perceive that he is dissatisfied with the view taken of this case by Her Majesty's Government, and with the instruction which he was informed would be sent to Mr. Elliot; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this letter into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what course it may be desirable for your Lordship to take thereupon. The letter to Mr. Conder and the instruction to Mr. Elliot were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I think the proper answer to Mr. Conder would be to the following effect: that Mr. Conder is entirely in error as to the main proposition of international law upon which he founds his objection to your Lordship's letter. It is by no means correct to say that a British subject who purchases an estate in a foreign country can call upon his own Government to enter into a consideration of the foreign law applicable to that estate. The contrary proposition is, generally speaking, true; but a British subject who engages to execute a work in a foreign country, and who enters into, and derives his title from, a contract which contains express stipulations that the parties to it shall be, with respect to its interpretation and other incidents, governed by the law of the country, is certainly not entitled to any interposition on the part of Her Majesty's Government. Her Majesty's Government would, from the first, have been perfectly justified in refusing to interfere, at all, in this matter. They were only induced to do so because it appeared that the interpretation of the contract was not submitted to the tribunal or arbitration to which, according to the terms of the instrument, it ought to have been submitted; but to an arbitrary and unfair tribunal not contemplated by the contract. During the discussion which arose upon the subject of this grievance, namely, the submitting the question to an unfair and unjust tribunal, propositions were made or suggested from time to time for a compromise or adjustment of the matter; among them, that referred to of Signor Jacini, and Her Majesty's Minister at Turin was instructed to aid as far as he could the settlement of the question.

In the meanwhile the Italian Government abolish the tribunal which is complained of, and the existence of which alone, in the circumstances of this contract, warranted the interposition of Her Majesty's Government. In this state of things Her Majesty's Government cannot maintain that the claim of Mr. Conder, any more than that of his principal M. Melisurgo, shall be withdrawn from the operation of the law of the place of the contract, to which it is, both by the general law and the particular provisions of the instrument, subject and amenable.

Mr. Elliot will probably still be willing unofficially to assist any attempt of Mr. Conder to obtain any compromise of his claim, but Her Majesty's Government can interfere no further in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 99.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 13.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 12, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Rome, requesting to be furnished with instructions bearing on the question whether Her Majesty's Consuls can properly afford asylum within their Consular residence to British subjects expelled by order of the local authorities. A draft of a reply which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Severn was also inclosed, and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would inform your Lordship whether in my opinion that draft is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Severn is right and proper for the object which your Lordship has in view. That object, as the marginal note of your Lordship apprises me, is one of political discretion, on which of course my opinion is not desired. I ought, however, to state that upon general principles of international law and in ordinary cases the house of the Consul has not the privilege of inviolability which belongs to the house of the Ambassador; probably, however, by usage, the house of Her Majesty's Consul at Rome, at which Court Her Majesty has no diplomatic Representative, has acquired the privilege usually incident to the house of an Ambassador.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 100.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 22, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that your Lordship has had under your consideration my Report of the 28th ultimo on the question of the nationality of certain persons born in the Italian dominions of British fathers, and their claim to exemption from military conscription in Italy; and Mr. Hammond was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a draft of a letter to the Italian Chargé d'Affaires at this Court, which was founded upon my Report referred to, and which your Lordship proposes to address to Count Maffei, but that, before doing so, your Lordship would be glad to be informed whether it correctly embodies my views on this question; and Mr. Hammond, at the same time, was to observe that your Lordship is of opinion that the doctrine which it is desired that the Italian Government should adopt should be stated as clearly and explicitly as the circumstances of the case and the state of the British and Italian laws bearing upon it will admit of.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I have ventured to suggest certain alterations in the draft letter laid before me, with the view of carrying into effect the wish of your Lordship that the statement of the request of Her Majesty's Government to the Italian Government should be as distinct as possible.

And, with these alterations, the letter does embody the views which I have had the honour to express on this subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 101.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 1, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from the War Office, dated the 23rd ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Gibraltar, in which the question is raised as to the right of domicile at Gibraltar which may be claimed by Italian subjects under the Treaty of Commerce between this country and Italy of the 6th of August, 1863, and to request that I would take this case into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion upon the question raised by the Governor of Gibraltar.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not think that the law of Gibraltar is abrogated by the Treaty of the 6th April, 1863; and though it is much to be regretted that the general terms used in Articles XIV and XVI were not accompanied by some distinct reference to restrictions necessarily arising from the municipal laws of some of Her Majesty's foreign Possessions, yet I think that the subsisting restrictions, both as to holding lands by foreigners and as to the power of the Governor to remove foreigners, may, in so peculiar a case as that of the military fortress of Gibraltar, be maintained by Her Majesty's Government as not inconsistent with the general obligations imposed by this Treaty as to the privileges of foreigners in these matters in other parts of Her Majesty's dominions.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 102.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 4, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence received from Messrs. Woodhouse and Co. in regard to what they consider the unjustifiable course pursued by the communal authorities of Marsala and by the Italian Government in imposing certain duties on articles consumed within their wine establishment at that place, from which until recently they had been exempt.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that we should perceive that Messrs. Woodhouse request the intervention of Her Majesty's Government with that of Italy on their behalf, and he was therefore directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our early convenience, with our opinion as to what steps, if any, it would be advisable for Her Majesty's Government to take in regard to this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proper construction of the Italian Ordinances and laws relative to the imposition of the tax complained of, and to the power of defining or enlarging the municipal boundaries within which it is levied, must be left to the determination of the Italian authorities.

The opinion expressed by the Minister of the Interior, the translation of which is marked 10, does not seem to us inequitable.

It also appears that the question of the power of the Municipality of Marsala to extend the line of the communal district, whereby these wine establishments are brought within the reach of the tax, is still undecided; and that if the Municipality be found to possess such power, an appeal lies from the exercise of it to various judicial or executive authorities.

Upon the whole we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Representative at Florence might be properly instructed to give any assistance in his power towards obtaining an equitable adjustment of the dispute, but that no case is made out for any direct and official remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government. R. Palmer

We have, &c. R. Collier

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 103.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 14, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers* relative to the case of a Maltese named Felice Attardi, now imprisoned in Cattania, on suspicion of being concerned in a political conspiracy, and who complains of the delay which has taken place in bringing him to trial; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there are any grounds for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in the case, and if so, what steps it may be desirable for them to take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that there are no grounds for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in this case. It is impossible to read the letters of Mr. Vice-Consul Jeans to Mr. Herries, and especially that of August 24, 1865 (Inclosure 5 in Mr. Herries No. 48 of September 9, 1865), without perceiving that a most incorrect and exaggerated statement of facts has been made by the brother of Attardi, and indeed by Attardi himself.

The only plausible ground of complaint arises from the rather long detention of Attardi without trial; but this seems to be not unreasonably accounted for, and it is expected that the trial will take place in the present month, in circumstances which will secure to the accused person ample opportunity of making his defence, and the verdict of a respectable jury.

I have, &c.

(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Herries, Nos. 48 and 99.

Japan.

No. 104.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 10, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th of April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan, to which is attached a Memorandum by Sir Rutherford Alcock, relative to a complaint of the Japanese Government that an illicit and clandestine trade in arms was being carried on by foreigners with Mori Daizen, the Prince of Choshiu; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether existing powers are sufficient to enable Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan to repress this traffic so far as British subjects are concerned, or whether a special Order in Council is required.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that copies of the existing Orders in Council relative to Japan were annexed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by Article 85 of the proposed new Order in Council for China and Japan, the Minister in Japan will possess the power to issue regulations for the peace, order, and good government of British subjects, which is now possessed by the Consuls; and that we think it will be competent to the Minister to issue a Regulation to obviate, if he shall think fit, the evil complained of, namely, the sending of munitions of war by British subjects to the enemies of the Japanese Government.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 105.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 23, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 17th of November last he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 13, February 4), on the subject of a Regulation for the proper ordering of butcheries in Yokohama; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

A volume containing Mr. Winchester's despatch No. 20 of the 29th April, 1862, to which he refers in the present despatch, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to refer us, with regard to it, to our Report of the 27th September, 1862.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1865

That the Regulation dated 21st April, 1862, the 8th Article of which prohibits the establishment of a butcher's shop, or slaughtering-house, without the sanction of the Consul, and without such conditions as he may require, was not particularly brought to our attention when the further proposed Regulation upon this subject, dated the 10th of August, 1864, was submitted to us for our opinion upon it.

In our Report upon that Regulation we did not advise that it should be then either finally allowed or disallowed by Her Majesty, because it was possible that Regulations of a more positive and definite character referring thereto might have been made, which, when read with it, would come under the category of regulations for the peace, order, and good government of Her Majesty's subjects being within the dominions of the Tycoon of Japan."

We still adhere to that view, which is not affected in any manner by the Regulation of the 21st April, 1862. To the prohibition of unlicensed slaughter-houses, &c., contained in that Regulation (which was competently made and properly approved of) the Regulation of the 10th August, 1864, added nothing positive or definite; it merely announced the intention to make future regulations and provisions on the same subject, which it would of course be necessary to see in order to judge of their propriety and probable effect, and no such subsequent regulations or provisions have even yet been submitted to us.

In his despatch of the 4th of February, 1865, Consul Winchester does indeed say that he now forwards "a copy of the bye-laws, as intimated to the one English butchery established at Yokohama." But the only document sent as an inclosure in that despatch is the "Municipal Organization Draft proposed by Her Britannic Majesty's Consul," which seems to relate to a quite different and more important subject, mentioned at the conclusion of the despatch, which was partly discussed in a recent Conference between ourselves and Sir E. Hornby, and Sir R. Alcock, when the new Order in Council for China and Japan was in course of preparation, and which it was then thought expedient to reserve for future consideration, after experience should have shown what voluntary arrangements for common action, in matters concerning their mutual interests, the members of the foreign communities in Japan and China might be able and willing to make among themselves, and how far any such arrangements when made might require and admit of support, from legislation within the competency of Her Majesty.

We do not think it possible that this document can be the "copy of bye-laws" mentioned by Consul Winchester; it does not, in fact, purport to enact or to propose any bye-laws, nor does it relate particularly to slaughter-houses or butchers' shops. It is a general project of municipal government for general purposes of police, contemplating (no doubt) the suggestion of proper bye-laws against obstructions and nuisances from time to time by the proposed "Municipal Committee," and the enactment of such bye-laws from time to time by the several Consular authorities, but it does not indicate the nature of any particular intended bye-laws connected with the subject of the Regulation of the 10th August, 1864.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No 106.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan, and its inclosures (No. 58, April 10), respecting a question which has been raised by the Japanese Government, with regard to the exercise of jurisdiction over the subjects of Powers not having Treaties with Japan; and to request that we would take the same into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Consul Winchester has taken a correct view of the law applicable to cases of this kind. It is clear that the subjects of States having no Treaty engagements with Japan are subject to Japanese jurisdiction.

It seems to be most expedient, however, that the administration of this jurisdiction should be tempered (if possible) by the advice and moral control of Christian assessors. The scheme proposed by Mr. Winchester of Consular assessors, under the limitations suggested, appears to us free from all objection, and expedient.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 107.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 4, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Mr. Winchester (No. 80), reporting that he had received information of certain European and American adventurers having proceeded to join the Daimio Choshiu, with the probable intention of rendering him assistance in his operations against the Tycoon's Government. That it appears to your Lordship that the punishment of such a proceeding, as far as British subjects are concerned, is provided for by the 6th section of the Order in Council of the 9th of March last; but Mr. Layard was, nevertheless, to request that we would take this matter into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report —

That it appears to us that the case of these adventurers, so far as they are British subjects, is clearly and sufficiently provided for by the 81st Article of the Order in Council of the 9th March, 1865.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 108.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell. —(Received August 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, August 4, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th of March last, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Winchester, together with a despatch and a Memorandum from Sir Rutherford Alcock,* setting forth the reasons on account of which it was deemed necessary that Her Majesty's Consul at Kanagawa should be invested with authority to make and carry into effect certain municipal and sanitary regulations therein specified.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that these papers also show the steps which have been already taken in this matter; and Mr. Consul Winchester had drawn up the draft of a proposed Order in Council, which forms the inclosure in his despatch, to confer power on Her Majesty's Consuls in Japan for the above mentioned purposes.

Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take this matter into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the regulations in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it right to observe that these papers were submitted to us during the time when the Chinese and Japanese Orders in Council were being prepared by Mr. Reilly; and it was necessary, therefore, that they should be considered in connection with these Orders, and they were accordingly referred by us to Mr. Reilly for that purpose, and we have only recently received them back from that gentleman, accompanied with some observations with which we agree, and which are embodied in this Report.

---

* Mr. Winchester, No. 3; Sir R. Alcock, No. 111, 1864, and Memorandum.

1865

The questions connected with the effective organization and authority of Municipal Councils in China and Japan are too important to be dealt with in the indirect manner proposed in Mr. Consul Winchester's draft Order in Council. It appears that a Municipal Council, representing various nationalities, has long been in existence at Shanghae. Its working seems not altogether unsatisfactory to the British community there. The difficulties connected with the constitution and operation of such a body are difficulties of law, partly international, and partly English.

The recent establishment of the Supreme Court for China and Japan affords to Her Majesty's Government an opportunity to obtain competent advice respecting the best course to be taken, in order to establish at the several ports Municipal Councils on a legal basis, as regards British subjects.

In these circumstances it does not seem to us expedient that any steps should be taken in the matter in this country until Sir E. Hornby has reported on the present position of affairs, and on the arrangements that may be desirable for the future.

After such a Report, Her Majesty's Government will be in a position to judge of the nature and extent of any new legislation which will be requisite to carry into execution any such arrangements as those which appear to be contemplated by Mr. Winchester.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 109.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 30th of August ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 106, June 23), respecting the formation of a Municipal Body at Yokohama; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, as far as we are able to form an opinion, the formation of this voluntary Municipal Body at Yokohama is likely to be attended with beneficial results to the European community. It is possible, and indeed not improbable, that difficulties may arise with respect to the enforcement of particular Municipal Ordinances, even as against parties who may have concurred in the general arrangement; but in such a matter, all that can be attempted is to proceed by degrees, and to endeavour to meet practical difficulties as they occur.

In the meantime, it would appear to us to be expedient that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan should be cautioned to be on his guard against taking any steps which may involve any question of the assumption or exercise of British jurisdiction over foreign subjects, or of foreign jurisdiction over the subjects of Her Majesty.

It is not possible for us to suggest any regulation which could properly be made under Sections 85 to 90 of the Order of the 9th of March, 1865, for the purpose of carrying into effect the rules which may be promulgated by this Municipal Body.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 110.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 11th of September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches and their inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Japan (No. 98, June 10, and No. 107, June 23), stating the measures adopted by the Representatives of the Treaty Powers in view of the impending hostilities between the Tycoon and the Daimio Choshiu; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon with reference to the provision made in the late Order in Council of March 9 in respect to such matters.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the provisions contained under Sections 7, 8, and 9 of the last Order in Council, March 9, 1865, will, when the Order arrives, give ample power to the British authorities in Japan to prevent British subjects from interfering in the apprehended civil war in Japan, as "any strait or other water in Japan" (Section 95), may be closed by Order of Her Majesty's Minister, or the passage through it made subject to any restrictions which may be deemed expedient. So with regard to the prevention of illicit trading, the provisions of the new Order are quite adequate, as, indeed, are the provisions of the Order of the 23rd of January, 1860, under which Her Majesty's Minister in Japan is now acting.

It seems to us that Her Majesty's Minister has taken every proper step in his power at present, until the arrival of the new Order, to prevent British subjects from interfering in these hostilities.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 111.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received November 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Sir Harry Parkes (No. 25, August 11), inclosing two notifications which have been issued by the Acting British Consul at Kanagawa (Yokohama); and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether these notifications should be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Regulations referred to are, in substance, proper, and ought to receive the approval of your Lordship.

At so great a distance from Japan we do not feel disposed to recommend the disallowance of Regulations which are substantially convenient and proper, on any mere grounds of form; but, considering that the "Municipal Council," referred to in these Regulations, has no recognized legal character, and the "Municipal Police" being constituted (so far as we are at present aware) without any general legal authority, we think it will be for the future safer and better to avoid expressly referring to these organizations upon the face of any Regulation intended to have the force of law against British subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 112.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 4.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 3, 1865.

WE are honoured with the commands of Earl Russell signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Reports of the 17th of November and 23rd of May last, respecting proposed Regulations for the proper ordering of butcheries in Yokohama, he was directed by his Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Japan (No. 26, August 11), inclosing copies of a Regulation which he had caused to be issued interdicting the slaughter of animals for food by British subjects within the settlement of Yokohama; and to request that we would take this Regulation into our consideration, and favour Earl Russell with our opinion whether it should receive the Secretary of State's approval.

1865

In obedience to the commands of Earl Russell we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that this Regulation may receive the approval of Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Madagascar.

No. 113.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 10.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 27th May last on the draft of a Treaty intended to be proposed to the Government of Madagascar, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 21st ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Mauritius, and copy of a Report from the Procureur-Général of that Colony on the subject of the Treaty. Mr. Hammond was also to remark that the Procureur-General had not before him the draft of Treaty prepared by Her Majesty's Government, but only a draft prepared by the French Government, with which the English draft was to be in general harmony, and that therefore some of his observations do not apply to the latter draft.

That there were, however, two points mentioned by the Procureur-Général with regard to which your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion, namely, whether the Article about Extradition should be amended so as to include persons other than British subjects, and to apply to warrants of arrest issued by Colonial Courts, and whether a power should not be reserved to the Queen of Madagascar to prohibit the exportation of contraband of war.

A Memorandum relative to the points raised by the Procureur-Général was also inclosed for convenience of reference; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the subject into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That we think there is sufficient weight in the observations of the Procureur-Général of the Mauritius upon the Article numbered XVI in the English (and VIII in the French) draft to make the amendment of that Article expedient, and we recommend that it should stand as follows:—

"Her Majesty the Queen of Madagascar engages to deliver up to the British Consul, on requisition, all persons, of whatever nation, who may be under prosecution before any Courts of Justice in Great Britain, or in any British Colony or possession, for any criminal offence committed within British jurisdiction, and who may take refuge within Her Majesty's dominions: Provided always that, if any such person shall be a subject of any European nation over whose subjects Her Majesty the Queen of Madagascar shall be precluded by Treaty from exercising jurisdiction, such person shall not be delivered up without the consent of the Consul or other proper authority of his own nation."

2. With respect to the Article numbered V in the English (and IV in the French) draft, which is criticised by the Procureur-Général, although the verb in the English draft is may, not must, we still think the interpretation so far open to doubt as to make the amendment of that Article also expedient, and we would suggest the substitution for the sentence beginning "leases, contracts of sale or purchase," of the following words:—

"Leases, contracts of sale, or purchase, of houses or lands in Madagascar, and engagements of labourers, may be executed by deeds signed before the British Consuls and local authorities" (omitting the words "and other engagements," and restricting the preceding words to contracts concerning houses and lands in Madagascar).

We do not think that it would be necessary, or even expedient, to propose that in such cases the authentication of a contract by the British Consul only, without the concurrence of any local authority, should be conclusive.

3. With respect to Article VI of the English (XIV of the French) draft, we presume that Her Majesty's Government had some reason, unknown to us, for thinking it proper to make a difference between the importation into Madagascar, and the exportation from Madagascar, of munitions of war. Subject to the weight which may be due to that motive (whatever it may be) we should have been disposed to think that the same reasons which made it proper to allow the local authority in Madagascar to prohibit the importation, might also have made it proper to allow the same authority to prohibit (if it should think fit) the exportation, of munitions of war; and the remarks of the Procureur-Général of the Mauritius on this subject (which certainly apply as much to the exportation as to the importation of contraband) seem to us to be deserving of attention. If this view were adopted, the VIth (English) Article might begin thus:—"No article whatever, save munitions of war, shall be prohibited from being imported into, or from being exported from, the territories of Her Majesty the Queen of Madagascar."

4. Upon all the other points embraced in the observations of the Procureur-Général, we concur entirely in the views expressed in the Foreign Office Memorandum of the 23rd January, 1865.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 114.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 20th of February ultimo, stating that your Lordship was about to prepare instructions for Her Majesty's Consul in Madagascar on the subject of the draft Treaty with the Queen of that island, in conformity with the recommendations contained in our note of the 10th of February, when your Lordship received from the Consul a despatch reporting the result of his negotiation with the Malagasy authorities, and inclosing a copy of the draft Treaty with the modifications desired by the Malagasy Plenipotentiaries.

Mr. Layard was further pleased to state that your Lordship desired him to transmit to us that despatch and its inclosures, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration and report to you our opinion thereupon, more especially as to Article XI, with reference to the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, and Article XVI, relating to extradition.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the Articles in the Treaty which restrain the powers of Europeans to purchase and acquire land in perpetuity, and which vest in the Queen of Madagascar the property of places of worship, but which provide that these places shall not be diverted from the objects to which they have been dedicated, we see no reason to object to the alterations proposed by the Malagasy Government.

With respect to Article VI, on the subject of import and export duties, there is probably no reason why Her Majesty's Government should insist upon a Tariff of duties being now fixed, or upon a maximum rate of duty lower than 10 per cent., if those terms are objected to by the Queen of Madagascar.

With respect to Article XI, we think the words in ink should be altered as follows:—

1865

"but any British subject whom the British Consul or other officer shall find to have been guilty of having openly offended, shall be liable to be banished from the country."

With respect to Article XVI, we think that the modifications now proposed by the Malagasy Government may properly be made in the Article on the subject of extradition prepared by us, and contained in our last Report, and that the Article so prepared by us should, with these modifications, be substituted for the printed Article. In all other respects we think the proposals of the Malagasy Government may properly be agreed to.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Mexico.

No. 115.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 18.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 17, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th January, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 12th September last relative to the caveat which had been entered against the marriage by Her Majesty's Consul in Mexico of Francis Rule with Mary Hosking, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with the former papers,[*] the reply which Mr. Walsham has returned to the instruction which was thereupon addressed to him;[†] and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would communicate to your Lordship our opinion as to the nature of any further instructions which should be sent to Mr. Walsham on the matter in question.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it right to state, in the first instance, that these questions of marriages at the Consulate are placed by the statute which authorizes them within the duty and competency of the Consul alone, and that the Ambassador or Minister of Her Majesty has no legal power or control whatever over or respecting them.

Mr. Walsham is entirely mistaken in supposing that our Report led to the conclusion that a caveat must be examined before it is entered: we said "that the grounds of it ought to have been examined immediately;" to that opinion we adhere.

He has not less completely misunderstood our reference to the law of Mexico. A legal marriage, solemnized according to the lex loci in Mexico, though between English subjects, would of course be a bar, by the law of England as well as of Mexico, to any subsequent marriage of either party in the lifetime of the other, no divorce having taken place. What we said was, in substance, that if marriage could be constituted in Mexico (as in Scotland, &c.) by a mere promise, subsequente copulâ, the facts alleged in the caveat might, perhaps, have been a legal bar to the marriage between Francis Rule and Mary Hosking, but not otherwise. To that opinion also we entirely adhere.

The ordinary practice with respect to caveats is, that the person against whose proceedings they are entered should, as it is technically termed, "warn" the caveat; that is, call upon the person entering it to set out and maintain the grounds of it. This should be done without delay in these cases, either by the Consul or by the party against whom the caveat is directed. It might be expedient that the Consul should make a rule, that if within a reasonable time (to be fixed according to circumstances) the caveat was not properly maintained, it should be disregarded and treated as abandoned.

But this is a matter of practice, which may properly be left to each Consul to settle. The grounds upon which a caveat can be sustained must, as we have already stated, be such as would, in the case where the parties are of age, invalidate the marriage if performed, or, in cases where one of the parties is a minor, the absence of consent of the parent or guardian is also a good ground for not allowing the marriage to take place. It does not appear to us to be necessary to offer any further observations upon this subject, as it is for your Lordship, and not for us, to judge whether the tone and tenour of Mr. Walsham's letter to Mr. Glennie is such as, under the circumstances, your Lordship can approve.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Mr. Walsham, No. 28; Law Officers, September 12; to Mr. Walsham, No. 17, 1864.

[†] Mr. Walsham, No. 41, November 27, 1864.

No. 116.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that Her Majesty's Minister at Mexico has suggested, in a despatch which was inclosed for my perusal, that a Mixed Commission should be established at Mexico to investigate and decide upon all claims on the part of British subjects upon the Mexican Government which have not already been recognized as valid by that Government. That your Lordship thinks favourably of this suggestion, and has caused a draft of Convention to be prepared for the purpose of carrying it into effect. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit such draft; and to request that I would take it into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the draft of the Convention which has been prepared appears to me fit and proper to carry into effect the object which it has in view.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 117.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 15, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter and its inclosure from Messrs. Suzdaltseff and Sullivan, stating the difficulty which they experience in the Courts of Law of Mexico in obtaining a sentence in the prosecution of certain persons whom they accuse of having swindled them at the Havana, and who afterwards took refuge in Mexico: and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship of my opinion whether this is a case in which Her Majesty's Government are called upon to interfere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the gentlemen whose letter is submitted to me complain that the Mexican Court, in which their suit is being prosecuted, delays to adjudicate upon the question raised by their suit, on the ground that it entertains doubts as to its competence; and the Court refers, I presume, according to the law of the land, to a superior Tribunal, in order that the doubt as to its competence may be resolved. I am of opinion that no ground is laid for the intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 118.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 22, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 37), in which he requests to be instructed as to the liability of British subjects to serve in a force which, it appears, is being organized for the protection of property in Mexico from the depredation of guerilla bands; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this question into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be sent to Mr. Scarlett thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Mr. Scarlett should be instructed that the line of distinction is properly drawn by him between the case of foreigners resident in a State called upon to aid in the defence of property attacked by robbers for the sake of plunder, and the case of foreigners required to defend a town or village assailed by a regular military force for a political object. In the former case the foreigner cannot justly complain if he be compelled to serve; in the latter case, his services ought not, as a general rule, and apart from any exceptional circumstances, to be demanded by the State in which he happens to be sojourning.

The suggestion of Mr. Scarlett that foreigners declining to serve should submit to the payment of a reasonable tax, levied for the general purposes of defence, appears to me reasonable.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 119.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 1, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 22nd of May ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 21st of June of last year, relative to the case of the British vessel "Nancy Dawson," which was seized by the Custom-house authorities at Matamoros for an alleged breach of Custom laws, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Tampico (No. 13), in answer to an instruction which, on the receipt of our Report, was addressed to him from the Foreign Office upon this case.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that Mr. Jonson inclosed a copy of a despatch from the British Vice-Consul at Matamoros, together with a transcript of the proceedings taken by the Custom-house authorities at that port in the matter of the above-mentioned vessel and her cargo, and the decision of the Supreme Government, declaring the ship and her cargo to be lawfully confiscated; and to request that we would take the inclosed (which include the former papers) into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to what course Her Majesty's Government should take in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, having regard to the materials before us, which consist (in addition to those upon which we have already reported) simply of a transcript and translation of the proceedings taken by the Custom-house authorities at Matamoros, we cannot advise Her Majesty's Government to take any further steps whatever in this matter.

It appears that the captain deliberately refused to make any defence against the charge brought against him, of having been guilty of a violation of the Customs Laws of Mexico, involving (by those laws) the liability of the ship and cargo to confiscation. It does not appear that Her Majesty's Consul takes any objection to the legality of these proceedings; and we are bound to assume, for the present at least, that the vessel and her cargo were lawfully condemned, by competent authority, for a violation of the municipal law which, at the date of the seizure, was in force at Matamoros.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 120.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 8, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 40), respecting the claim of Mr. Oldenburg against the Mexican Government for the seizure of his property under the circumstances detailed in his letter to Mr. Scarlett; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Scarlett seems to be of opinion that the claim of Mr. Oldenburg is valid, because the "Schwan" sailed from Hamburgh to the port of Manzanillo, with a cargo principally consisting of arms, before any notice of the blockade of that port had reached Hamburgh; and if the vessel had been condemned on the ground of her having attempted to violate the blockade which was established when she reached the vicinity of that port, I should be disposed to agree with Mr. Scarlett, if not generally, at least in his application of the law to this particular case: because according to the construction put upon the law of blockade by the highest authorities in France (the country of the captor), no neutral vessel which has sailed in ignorance of the blockade can be lawfully seized by the belligerent without its having first received a notification and warning from one of the ships of the blockading squadron. (See "Traité des Prises Maritimes" of De Pistoye et Duverdy, vol. i, p. 373.)

But the "Schwan" was seized by the French vessel "La Cordelière," not for attempting a breach of the blockade, but for carrying unquestionable contraband of war, namely, arms ready for use; and the true question appears to me to be whether the "Schwan" was aware of the existence of a war in Mexico, and with that knowledge was carrying arms to the port of Manzanillo. If this was the case the seizure of the contraband was not an unlawful act on the part of the belligerent.

Upon this important point I cannot find any satisfactory evidence. The conduct of the consignees in giving notice to the French cruizers of the expected arrival of these arms seems to indicate good faith and innocence in the whole transaction, and it would certainly be satisfactory if Mr. Scarlett's request should prove successful; although, for the reason which I have stated, I am of opinion that it was incorrectly founded upon an application of the law of blockade to a seizure of these goods on board the "Schwan."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 121.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 10.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 9, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (Nos. 38 and 43), relative to two Decrees which have been recently published by the Mexican Government by which the illegitimate children born of foreigners and Mexican women, as well as those foreigners who may acquire landed property in Mexico, are to be considered as Mexican subjects; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Decree with respect to the illegitimate children of Mexican women seems to me to furnish no ground for any remonstrance of any kind from the Governments of foreign States, except, perhaps, so far as it extends to the illegitimate children born of Mexican women in foreign States ("dentro ó fuera del territorio del Impero"), a matter, however, of little practical importance.

That the Decree imposing the character of a Mexican subject upon the foreigner who is possessed of landed property, furnishes good ground for remonstrance from foreign States so far as it is immediately retrospective in its operation.

Some reasonable time ought, as a matter of justice, to be allowed to foreigners who have embarked their capital in the purchase of landed property at a time when no such restriction or condition was, by the Law of the State, attached to such purchase, to determine whether they will continue landed proprietors, and to enable them to dispose of their property without any injury or loss accruing from this ex post facto Law. With regard to its prospective operation, though it will be severe upon foreigners, especially if the words "propiedad territoria" extend to shares in mines, and leases of land and houses, yet it is certainly within the abstract competence of the Mexican Government to make such a law, however expedient it may be that diplomatic measures should be employed to procure an alteration of it.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 122.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 12, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers* relative to the claim of Mr. Richard Friend to receive compensation from the Government of Mexico for having been pressed into the service of that country; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion in regard to this claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the great lapse of time since the alleged pressing of Mr. Friend on board the Mexican ship, which appears from his affidavit to have been in July 1854, to the fact that the circumstances of the case were investigated at the time by Mr. Hale (see letter of Mr. Allsopp, December 22, 1863), and the result was that no action was taken thereupon, and to the opinion adverse to Mr. Friend's claim expressed by Mr. Consul Allsopp, I do not advise your Lordship to take any steps in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 123.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 20, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 22nd ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 55), relative to the question of the exemption of foreigners to serve in the National Guard in Mexico; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon. The previous papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Friend, March 13; to Consul Glennie, No. 2; Consul Glennie, No. 11, 1863; to Mr. Friend, May 24, 1865.

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's subjects ought not to be compelled to serve, and ought not to serve, in the national guard of Mexico, in the circumstances mentioned in the last despatch of Mr. Scarlett (9th May, 1865). It is clear that by so doing they would render themselves liable to serve in the national army of Mexico, and that their service would not be confined to the protection of property against robbers. I must repeat that it seems reasonable that those of Her Majesty's subjects who determine to continue their residence at Mexico should pay the moderate sum required in order to procure for them an exemption from service in the national guard.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 124.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July , 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me two letters dated 29th April and 5th July from Mr. Bourdillon respecting the claims of Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh against the Mexican Government. A memorandum upon these claims which has been drawn up in the Foreign Office, together with a draft of Convention for the settlement of British claims which Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico has been instructed to submit to the Mexican Government, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether there are any grounds for dealing with the claims of Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh differently from other British claims, and if not whether they would come under the examination prescribed by Article II of the proposed Convention. The previous correspondence in this case was inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that there are not sufficient grounds for dealing with the claims of Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh differently from other British claims, and that they would come under the examination prescribed by the IInd Article of the proposed Convention.

It is very probable that Messrs. Manning and Mackintosh may be able to avail themselves of the investigations already entered into and the Reports already made by the Mexican Commissioner, Señor Piquero, before the Commissioners appointed under the Convention; but however this may be, I think their claims should be submitted to that Tribunal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

5/306

No. 125.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received October 31.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, October 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch, with its inclosure, from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 113), relative to a claim for protection as a British subject which has been made to the British Consular Agent at San Luis Potosi by Mr. Benjamin Crowther, who appears to have been in the service of the so-called Confederate States of America during the late civil war; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the view taken by Mr. Scarlett in this particular case, and the general rule he has laid down for the guidance of British Consular Agents in Mexico in similar cases, should be approved.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1865

That we are of opinion that the general rule which Mr. Scarlett has laid down for the guidance of British Consular Agents in these cases ought in the main to be approved by Her Majesty's Government, though at the same time the Consular Agents should be informed by Mr. Scarlett that if there should be any case in which the requisite documentary evidence is not forthcoming, but which presents circumstances which leave no practical doubt that the applicant for protection is a British subject, such cases should be specially referred to Mr. Scarlett, in order that he may exercise his discretion thereupon.

It would appear to us that the case of Mr. B. Crowther falls under this latter category; and we do not think that a British subject who has neither been enrolled as a citizen, nor naturalized in America, ought, on the ground of his having served on either side during the late civil war, to be deprived in a third country like Mexico of all British protection. If, indeed, he should seek such protection for any particular purpose, with respect to which the circumstance of his having taken part in the late civil war might be at all material, it would, probably, be a sound exercise of discretion to refuse interference on his behalf; but we do not think that he ought on that account to be treated generally as if he were not a British subject.

It seems to us that if Mr. Scarlett should be bonâ fide satisfied that Mr. Crowther is a British subject, then, although he might require Mr. Crowther to produce documentary evidence of the fact within a reasonable period, he may fairly during the interim extend to Mr. Crowther the protection ordinarily given to British subjects, subject to the qualification above explained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 126.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 2, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 8th June last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch, with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 126), relative to the claim of Mr. Oldenburg for the losses incurred by him in consequence of the seizure of his vessel the "Schwan" off the port of Manzanillo by a French vessel of war; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon. The former papers connected with this case were also transmitted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. Scarlett that the doctrine of the Mexican Government that they are not responsible to a neutral State for the act of a French ship forming part of the Mexican squadron, and acting on behalf of the Mexican Government, is untenable.

The other objection of Señor Ramirez that Mr. Oldenburg should seek redress in the Prize Court is more plausible; but it does not per se constitute a sufficient answer to the demand of Mr. Oldenburg. For it appears from Mr. Oldenburg's letter (12th March, 1865) that the "Schwan" was taken into port, and there searched and examined, and that her contraband goods were there taken out. This was an irregular proceeding on the part of the captor, as, according to the law of nations, to which Señor Ramirez refers, it was the duty of the captor to obtain a sentence of condemnation in the Prize Court; and had he taken this regular course the owner might have been able to show cause why the goods should not be condemned. It is a case, therefore, which primâ facie justifies diplomatic interference. I have not before me the answer (if any has been sent) of Mr. Oldenburg to Mr. Scarlett's letter of the 2nd September, 1865 (Inclosure 4 in No. 126), in which Mr. Oldenburg is requested to offer proofs that his European agents "were ignorant of the fact that they were shipping contraband of war on board the 'Schwan' when she sailed from Hamburgh in September 1863." Mr. Scarlett means, I infer from his letter to Señor Ramirez, that proof should be produced that the shippers were ignorant at the time of the shipment that the war still existed in the country to which the arms were sent, because there can be no doubt that they were plain contraband of war, if the shippers admit that they were, or if they must have been, aware of the continuance of the war.

If it should turn out that the shippers were aware of the continuance of the war, but not of the existence of the blockade, and erroneously supposed that contraband of war could not be seized unless a blockade existed, there will be no ground for further application in this matter to the Mexican Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 127.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 30th May last respecting the amount of support to be given by Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico to persons holding certificates as British naturalized subjects, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Mr. Scarlett (No. 143), with its inclosures, relative to the claim to protection put forward by Mr. Saviñon, a Mexican by birth, but a naturalized British subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I consider that Mr. Saviñon can, even though there were no question as to the effect of his British naturalization, be entitled in Mexico to be protected as a British subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in this case a Mexican-born subject, apparently never, so to speak, denaturalized by the country of his birth, asks, on the ground that he is a naturalized British subject, for the diplomatic intervention of Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico relatively to a litigation before the legal tribunal about an estate in that country. I am clearly of opinion that Mr. Scarlett was perfectly right in the refusal which he gave to this request.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 128.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 146) relative to the case of Mr. Carmichael, a British subject, who claims compensation from the Government for losses sustained by him through a robbery on the high road; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship of my opinion as to the nature of any instruction to be addressed to Mr. Scarlett in reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the Mexican Government cannot, as the circumstances are now stated to me, be called upon to reimburse Mr. Carmichael for the loss which he has sustained by a highway robbery.

If there be any such law as that to which Mr. Carmichael refers, he must put in force that law by recourse to the proper tribunal.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 129.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 30, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 29th of April last on the draft of a Convention between Great Britain and Mexico for the investigation and settlement of British claims upon the Mexican Government by means of a Mixed Commission, he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint me that the Mexican Government have suggested various amendments to that draft, the nature of which I should perceive from the accompanying correspondence, and which for the most part appear to your Lordship to be inexpedient, and that your Lordship has therefore caused the inclosed draft to be prepared; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take it and the other papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the draft to Mr. Scarlett.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that the despatch which your Lordship proposes to send to Mr. Scarlett is, with a very slight alteration which I have ventured to suggest, and subject to the following remarks, fit and proper to be sent:—

With respect to Article I, I think that in the event of a claim coming before the Commission in which a British Commissioner is directly interested, there ought to be a positive provision preventing him from adjudicating in that matter, and for the appointment of a substitute: this may entail some difficulty, but which I should think might be overcome by Mr. Scarlett.

As to the IInd Article, I have suggested a verbal alteration at the bottom of the page.

With respect to the new Article proposed by Señor Ramirez, excluding all claims but those of strictly British origin, I entertain considerable doubt; and I think it would be far better, as suggested, that the decision upon this subject should be left to the determination of the Commissioners and the Umpire.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 130.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 5, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 8th June and the 2nd ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister in Mexico (No. 160), in regard to the claim of Mr. Oldenburg against the Government of that Empire for the losses he incurred in consequence of the seizure, by a French vessel of war, of some goods consigned to him from Hamburgh on board the "Schwan;" and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, together with the former papers, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I beg to refer to my two former Reports on this case. That I understand it to be now directly admitted by Mr. Oldenburg that the goods seized were contraband of war. This is indeed, in point of fact and law, equally incontrovertible; and I conceive it to be virtually admitted by that gentleman that he was aware at the time when the goods were shipped on board the "Schwan" that war had broken out in Mexico. What he says is, "when the 'Schwan' left Hamburgh in September 1863, neither had France declared war against Mexico."

I am of opinion that the letters of Mr. Scarlett of the 3rd and 17th October to Mr. Oldenburg state the facts and the law correctly; and I think that there is no occasion for any further instructions from Her Majesty's Government to him.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Monte Video.

No. 131.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that with reference to my Reports of the 26th and 13th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the correspondence which had been previously submitted to me, two further despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (Nos. 106 and 107), respecting the course pursued by the Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces in the blockade of the ports of Paisandú and Salto; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship at my earliest convenience my opinion as to any further instructions which should be given to Mr. Lettsom on this subject.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 4th instant, transmitting a letter from the Admiralty, inclosing copies of despatches from Rear-Admiral the Honourable Charles Elliot, relative to this blockade; and Mr. Hammond was further to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether any further notice of this blockade is required than is contained in the "Gazette" of the 16th ultimo, and also whether instructions should be sent to Admiral Elliot to see that a proper time should be allowed to British vessels after the notification of the blockade.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the blockade of Paisandú and Salto must be respected so long as the naval force employed in maintaining the blockade is fairly adequate for the purpose. The absence of the military forces with which, Mr. Lettsom says, it is intended that the naval forces should co-operate, cannot invalidate the blockade.

It is, of course, competent to Her Majesty's Government to require the Brazilian Government to say how long this interruption of the legitimate commerce of neutrals with the ports of Monte Video is likely to be continued, and within what limits the war will probably be circumscribed; but I see no necessity for sending any further instructions at present with respect to the recognition of the blockade.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 132.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 19, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state that since the publication in the "London Gazette" of the notice to claimants on the Government of Monte Video, dated December 23, 1864, of which we approved in our Report of the 20th ultimo, several parties, as we should see by the letters inclosed, made applications to the Foreign Office claiming to have interest in the sums payable severally to Chalmers, Cosgrove, O'Brien, and Yates; and to suggest, for our consideration, whether it would not be advisable that these and other applicants should be told that it will be requisite for them to make out, to the satisfaction of the Solicitor to the Treasury, their rights of representation, and that having done so, they should acquaint him with their wishes as to the disposal of their respective amounts, and that thereupon instructions would be sent to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1865

That we are of opinion that the course which is suggested in the letter of Mr. Hammond with respect to these various claimants is one which it would be proper and expedient to adopt.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 133.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 16.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 15, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (Nos. 97, 100, 110, and 111), containing copies of correspondence which has passed between the Uruguayan Government and the Diplomatic Body, with regard to some small vessels fitted out at Buenos Ayres in aid of the revolutionary party in Uruguay, but sailing, according to circumstances, either under the Argentine or the Uruguayan flag; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to any instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Lettsom.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that the course pursued by Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video in conjunction with the European Diplomatic Body at Monte Video has hitherto been proper, and, as far as I am able to judge, the opinion which he has formed with respect to these vessels is correct.

On the one hand the visitation and search which the Uruguayan Government suggests should be exercised by foreign ships-of-war over Uruguayan vessels, has been, at present, with great propriety refused by Mr. Lettsom and his colleague.

On the other hand, the interests of neutral commerce afloat and the safety of neutral subjects, and their property, in places accessible by ships, require that the vessels employed by a belligerent shall sail under the flag of that belligerent, and shall not, by the occasional assumption of the flag of the other belligerent, harass the property and endanger the safety of neutrals.

It does not seem to me necessary to send more specific instructions than these to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video. It is, of course, very important that he should continue to act in concert, so far as he is able, with his European colleagues in all measures taken on behalf of neutral interests.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 134.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 11, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, inclosing copies of correspondence with the Brazilian Admiral respecting the imposition and the raising of the blockade of Monte Video; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take the accompanying papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether any notification under the circumstances is necessary, and if so, that I would prepare a form of notice for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it has seemed to me desirable that the raising of the blockade of Monte Video should be duly notified in the "Gazette;" and that I have prepared a notification accordingly, which I have the honour to append to this Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 134.

RIVER PLATE.—BRAZIL AND MONTE VIDEO.

Notification of the Raising of the Blockade of Monte Video.

Foreign Office, April 11, 1865.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video, inclosing a letter addressed by his Excellency Baron de Tamandaré, Commander-in-chief of the Brazilian naval forces in the River Plate, to Rear-Admiral the Honourable C. B. Elliot, C.B., Commanding-in-chief Her Majesty's naval forces on that station, announcing that the blockade of the port of Monte Video, established by the Brazilian naval forces, by order of the Government of that country, was raised on the 21st of February last.

The following is a copy and translation of the letter of his Excellency Baron de Tamandaré to Rear-Admiral the Honourable C. B. Elliot, above referred to:—

Here print a copy of the letter (and of the translation) from Baron de Tamandaré dated 21st February, 1865.

R. P.

Morocco.

No. 135.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 25, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Morocco (No. 4), recommending to the favourable consideration of Her Majesty's Government the claim of the interpreter of the British Vice-Consulate at Tetuan, for the loss of property deposited in the Vice-Consulate at the time of the occupation of Tetuan by the Spanish forces; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would appear to me that the proposition of Mr. Drummond Hay, that the small sum of 50*l.* should be presented by Her Majesty's Government to Mr. Nahon as a compensation for the losses which he has sustained, is, in the particular circumstances, reasonable and proper to be carried into effect.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 136.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 22.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 21, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Sir J. D. Hay (No. 4), and the previous correspondence, relative to a claim put forward by Mr. Joseph Samuel to obtain compensation from the Moorish Government on account of the destruction by fire of certain stores outside the town of Mogador; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take Mr. Samuel's claim into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would not be proper that Her Majesty's Government should press upon the Moorish Government the claim of Mr. Samuel; that Government is not, upon the evidence before me, responsible for the loss which he has sustained.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Muscat.

No. 137.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 9.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 8, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th of May ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence with the India Office, together with the despatch from Her Majesty's Consul and Political Agent at Zanzibar referred to therein,* upon the subject of certain changes suggested by Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair, in the administration of justice at Zanzibar, as regards British subjects; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether the IInd and Vth Articles of the Treaty between this country and Muscat of May 31, 1839 (see Hertslet's Treaties, vol. v, p. 611), are sufficient to enable Her Majesty to issue an Order in Council under the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, enabling the Consul to exercise jurisdiction, civil and criminal, over British subjects, whether natives of India or other parts of Her Majesty's dominions, and to appoint Bombay as the place of trial for serious crimes.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the provisions of the Foreign Jurisdiction Act are applicable to the case of Zanzibar and Muscat, by reason of the Treaty of 1839, and of the usage which (as we understand) has followed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* To India Office, March 28; India Office, May 11; Lieutenant-Colonel Playfair, No. 2, January 2, 1865.

Netherlands.

No. 138.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 13.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that the Board of Trade have recommended that having regard to the position of the existing Treaty relations between Great Britain and the Netherlands, and to the exceptional treatment which is accorded to the subjects of various foreign States by the Netherlands Government, the Treaty engagements between Great Britain and the Netherlands should be rendered more in accordance with the provisions of modern Treaties of Commerce between Great Britain and other foreign Powers; and that the Board have prepared the accompanying draft of Treaty with that view. That it is, however, very desirable that any new Treaty of this kind should not interfere with the Treaty of the 17th of March, 1824, between Great Britain and the Netherlands respecting territory and commerce in the East Indies, and that your Lordship would therefore be glad if I would examine the inclosed draft Treaty specially with a view to that point, as well as generally as to its fitness to be substituted for the existing Treaties of Commerce.

The despatch from Mr. Ward (No. 6), to which reference is made by the Board of Trade, was also inclosed for convenience and reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the draft of Treaty prepared by the Board of Trade appears to me generally fit and proper for effecting the object which your Lordship has in view.

There does not, however, occur to me any reason why the provisions relating to commercial travellers, referred to by Mr. Ward as forming the XXIInd and XXIIIrd Articles of the French Convention, should not be imported into this Treaty; there may, however, be some reason against this, of which I am not aware. If it should be thought expedient to introduce such Articles, they might come in after the XIIth Article.

Having regard to the anxiety expressed by your Lordship with respect to maintaining the provisions of the Treaty of the 17th of March, 1824, as to the territory and commerce in the East Indies, I think it might be well to add to the XXIst Article of the proposed Treaty a clause to this effect:—

"It is agreed that none of the provisions of this Treaty are intended to interfere with, or shall have the effect of interfering with, the provisions contained in the Treaty concluded between the High Contracting Parties on the 17th of March, 1824, respecting territory and commerce in the East Indies."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

New Granada.

No. 139.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 25th of November, 1862, on the subject of Messrs. Langton and Longrigg's claim on the New Granadian Government, on account of the seizure in 1861 of a cargo of divi divi by the revolutionary authorities of Rio Hacha, he was directed by your Lordship to refer to me the correspondence which has taken place with regard to that case.

1865

That I should perceive from the last despatch of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Bogota, that after nearly three years' delay the New Granadian Government have put forward the new view that it will be necessary that Messrs. Langton and Longrigg should prove their claim in the Law Courts of the country before they can be entitled to any indemnity. That under these circumstances Mr. O'Leary has applied for instructions; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue.

In obedience to Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I agree with the opinion expressed by Mr. O'Leary in his despatch No. 46, of the 30th July, 1865.

I am of opinion that in the circumstances which he states it would be a gross injustice to subject the claim of Messrs. Langton and Longrigg to a judicial investigation. That claim was founded upon a wrongful act of spoliation by the Executive Government, or the authorities which represented it in 1861.

The justice of Messrs. Langton and Longrigg's claim has been substantially admitted by the New Granadian Government; and whatever laws that Government may think fit to make for its own subjects, it has no right, in its relations to foreign States, to make an ex post facto law which is to have the effect of evading or delaying the payment of a compensation, which, long before the passing of that law, had been due to the subjects of a foreign State on account of an act of violence on the part of the Executive Government, nor of a private individual, which had deprived that subject of his lawful property.

I think that Mr. O'Leary should be instructed that Her Majesty's Government must require prompt payment of the claim of Messrs. Langton and Longrigg, and that they decline to admit the authority of any municipal law which would further delay the already tardy execution of this act of international justice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Nicaragua.

No. 140.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 29, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter from Messrs. Vaughan, dated the 18th instant, inclosing copies of two grants from the Nicaraguan Government, giving them certain privileges in the production and exportation of mahogany in the districts therein mentioned, and requesting to be informed, with reference to the latter of those two grants, whether the Mosquito Indians have any right to interfere with them in their operations, or make any exactions beyond those that are specified in the contract.

A copy of the Treaty with Nicaragua, respecting the Mosquito Indians, of the 28th January, 1860, together with Bailey's map of Central America, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the inclosed papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Messrs. Vaughan's letter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That by Article III of the Treaty of Managua, January 28, 1860, it is provided that within the district, which I understand comprises portions of the Rivers Rio Grande and

Prince Apulca, "the Mosquito Indians shall enjoy the right of governing, according to their own customs, and according to any regulations which may from time to time be adopted by them not inconsistent with the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua, themselves and all persons residing within such district. Subject to the above-mentioned reserve, the Republic of Nicaragua agrees to respect and not interfere with such customs and regulations so established, or to be established, within the said district."

The effect of this Article would be to place foreigners while resident or commorant within the district, to a certain extent under the authority of the Government of the Mosquito Indians; whether that authority would extend to a right of interference with the privilege granted by the Nicaraguan Government to Messrs. Jones and Vaughan of cutting timber, &c., must depend upon whether the grant to cut the timber is incident to "the sovereign rights of the Republic of Nicaragua."

This is, in great measure, a question of fact of which I have no evidence before me, but I should incline to the opinion that such a grant was incident to the rights of sovereignty especially reserved by the Treaty as belonging to the Republic of Nicaragua.

It seems to me that Messrs. Jones and Vaughan, who are now, I presume, in the territories of the Republic, should make inquiries for themselves as to whether the Government of the Mosquito Indians puts forward any claim, and if so, upon what grounds, in this matter.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 141.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 23.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 23, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Consul at Greytown (No. 12), stating that the Governor Intendent at that port imposes, whenever an opportunity occurs, the Decree of Managua of the 4th of October, 1864, upon the residents and traders within the Mosquito Reserve, in contravention of the IIIrd Article of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the Republic of Nicaragua of January 28, 1860, a copy of which was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to Mr. Paton.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That a consideration of the whole Treaty, more especially of Articles III and VII (though the question is not wholly free from doubt), leads me to the conclusion that the Mosquito Indians are entitled to impose duties on merchandise imported into their territory, and the exercise of this right "is not inconsistent with the sovereign right of the Republic of Nicaragua" (Article III). If this be so, of course the Government of the Republic is not entitled to compel the repayment of such duties at Greytown, or the payment of duties on goods not imported into, but transhipped from, that port.

I am not aware, however, whether Her Majesty's Government have hitherto expressed any opinion on this claim to the Nicaraguan Government, but the subject appears to have been already brought under its notice.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

Paraguay.

No. 142.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 10.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 9, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith the translation of a letter dated the 26th ultimo from M. Candido Bareiro, the Paraguayan Chargé d'Affaires accredited to this Court, calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the conduct of the Argentine Government in allowing a Brazilian squadron to pass up the Paraná, with reference to the existing Treaties relating to the navigation of the affluents of the River Plate; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would, with reference to my Report of the 8th March last, report to your Lordship my opinion of the nature of the reply which should be returned to M. Candido Bareiro's observations. For my consideration the accompanying despatches,* bearing upon the above subject, which have been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres, were also transmitted.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that a reply should be returned to M. Candido Bareiro to the following purport and effect: that Her Majesty's Government does not consider that the provisions of the Treaties to which his Excellency refers would justify the interposition of Her Majesty's Government relatively to the subject which is now in dispute between the Argentine and Paraguayan Governments.

Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that by the Treaty between Her Majesty and the Argentine Confederation (July 10, 1853), they are entitled to insist upon the free navigation of the Rivers Paraná and Uruguay by merchants of all nations, even in time of war, "excepting in what may relate to munitions of war, such as arms of all kinds, gunpowder, lead, and cannon balls; but they are not of opinion that they are empowered, either by the express provisions of any Treaty or by the general principles of international law, to prevent the sailing of a Brazilian fleet up the River Paraná for the purpose of carrying on hostilities, in a war in which Her Majesty is strictly neutral, against Paraguay, and that it must be for the Argentine Government to consider whether she ought or ought not to allow that fleet to pass through the waters of her territory.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Persia.

No. 143.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, February 24, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 29th November last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, for any observations I may have to make thereupon, the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran (No. 122), respecting Mr. Ralli's claim on the Persian Government for compensation for losses sustained on account of the interference with his trade by the

---

* Mr. Thornton, Nos. 10, 18, and 20, 1865.

Persian authorities at Tabreez. The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That if Mr. Glen be correct in stating in his Memorandum (Inclosure 3 in No. 122) that "an explicit contract was voluntarily concluded or submitted to by Mr. Michoglou," acting as the Agent of Messrs. Ralli, I should agree with Mr. Glen that Her Majesty's Government would not be bound to support a claim for losses which were the consequences of such an agreement; but it appears to me that this contract was involuntarily concluded under the pressure of an illegal violence, which upon the principles of all jurisprudence and the plainest rules of right vacated the contract and rendered it null.

The important question therefore is, was the contract, as it is called, made under constraint, and in consequence of unlawful pressure upon Mr. Michoglou?

I presume that Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, and the Acting British Consul at Tabreez, were satisfied on this point when they refused to recognize the validity of the agreement.

Moreover, however timid and reprehensible the conduct of Mr. Michoglou may have been, it seems to me very inexpedient, for the general interests of British commerce, that the Persian authorities should be allowed to commit with impunity a very gross violation of the stipulations of positive Treaties and of the general principles of international law.

I think an absolute discretion should be vested in Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran as to the amount of compensation which he urges upon the Persian Government, and I think that Her Majesty's Minister may properly consider the conduct of Mr. Michoglou, after the warning given to him by the Consul, as affecting the amount which, in the circumstances, Her Majesty's Minister may think it prudent and expedient to support.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 144.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 8, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers, as marked in the margin,* respecting the course pursued by Her Majesty's Consul at Bagdad in the case of a native Indian subject, accused of having murdered a Persian subject; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 16th February, respecting the case of a native Indian subject charged with causing the death of a Persian at Bagdad, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further despatch, which has just been received from Mr. Logie (No. 10), reporting the proposal which had been made for the settlement of this case; and to request that we would furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with a report as to the course which should be taken in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are clearly of opinion that the jurisdiction of the Consul was well founded by the Capitulations; and there appears to us no foundation for the idea that the Persian Consul, either by Treaty with the Porte or by the assent of Her Majesty (and both would be necessary), has acquired any authority to try this case in the Ottoman dominions. We think, however, that it was incumbent upon the Consul to take proper measures for appointing a day for the trial of the accused person, and for securing his being forthcoming on that day; but if no charge was then preferred against him, or no charge sustained by the evidence, it would be the duty of the Consul to dismiss the case, and let the accused person go free. We are glad to see from the despatch of Mr. Logie (No. 10, Constantinople, February 17, 1865) that this is the course which the Consul intended to adopt; although we cannot but observe that the course previously taken in

---

* Mohamed Ali, January 9; to Mr. Logie, No. 1; Mr. Logie, No. 3; Mr. Stuart, No. 48, 1865.

1865 allowing the accused person to return to his master's service, and to be practically at large, before the case was finally disposed of, was calculated (to say the least) to give occasion for misunderstanding on the part of the Persian authorities.

We are clearly of opinion that the Consul ought not to sanction any such private compromise by payment of blood-money, as the Persian authorities appear to suggest.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 145.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, April 5, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying draft of an instruction which was addressed to Her Majesty's Minister in Persia, founded upon my Report of the 24th of February, on the subject of Mr. Ralli's claim against the Persian Government; but that he was, however, to acquaint me that, in consequence of the receipt of the accompanying despatch, Mr. Alison has been directed by telegraph not to act on your Lordship's despatch No. 8 of the 2nd ultimo until he receives further instructions on the subject. A despatch and its inclosure from Her Majesty's Consul at Tabreez, containing a report upon this claim, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these despatches into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should now be given to Mr. Alison in regard to Mr. Ralli's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the reprehensible and foolish conduct of Mr. Michoglou does certainly much embarrass the principal consideration in this case, namely, what amount of compensation should be claimed on behalf of the house of Ralli against the Persian Government; nevertheless, I am of opinion that some compensation ought to be claimed on behalf of that house, though the conduct of their agent, Mr. Michoglou, must have its effect in regulating the amount of the demand.

I am of opinion, also, that the compact between Mr. Michoglou and the Persian merchants ought not to be recognized by Her Majesty's Government. A perusal of this document satisfies me that it is not in any proper sense a covenant at all. It is simply a statement of the conditions under which six Persian merchants undertake not to resort to violent measures of outrage and plunder upon the property of the house of Ralli; and these conditions containing, in substance, an undertaking on the part of Mr. Michoglou that he will abstain from making a lawful profit on the commercial transactions of the firm of which he is agent. That the whole compact is the result of intimidation on the one side, and fear on the other, appears pretty clearly from the last clause of it;—"Mr. Michoglou must not depart from these conditions. If he does infract one of these conditions, in the smallest degree, his affairs will again assume an unfavourable turn.

"(Follow the signatures of six Persian Merchants.)
(Signed) "Michoglou."

The existence of such a compact, in truth, affords clearest evidence of the weakness or guilt of those who ought to have administered the law, by which alone it could have been rendered necessary. Mr. Alison, indeed, states that the Persian Government is prepared to show that Mr. Michoglou inflicted severe loss on the Persian merchants, and that this view is supported by the opinion of European merchants at Tabreez; but it is not suggested that Mr. Michoglou did any act which was unlawful or not warranted by the Treaty, though probably he acted with extreme and culpable indiscretion in all the circumstances of his position.

On the other hand, I agree with the statement in the second part of the very able and clear Reports of Mr. Consul Abbott, that the Persian Government has incurred responsibility, whatever the amount of it may be, "first, in permitting for about the space of four months a state of things so contrary to the spirit and letter of the Treaties and the universally acknowledged rules of justice and fairness and of commercial rights; so contrary also to the tenour of the instructions issued to the Tabreez authorities on the representations of Her Majesty's Minister at Tehran, and in defiance of the representations and warnings made on the spot by the Acting Consul; and secondly, for the compact made under the auspices of the Naib el Vizuuh, in which a total disregard of the rights and privileges of a merchant under the English flag was shown, although that merchant was a consenting party."

Upon the whole, I am of opinion that the most expedient course to pursue would be to adopt substantially the Report No. 3 of Mr. Consul Abbott, as the basis of the compensation to be demanded, but nevertheless with certain limitations:—

1st. That the compact be not recognized at all in principle in any application made to the Persian Government. It seems to me important for the general interests of the British mercantile community, as well as on the grounds which I have already mentioned, that no such recognition should be made.

2ndly. I think that the misconduct and indiscretion of Mr. Michoglou throughout the whole of this transaction may be considered as a reason for claiming a less sum than might otherwise have been demanded, even as to the items which are approved of by Mr. Abbott. This consideration may fairly operate to reduce the amount demanded under the heads of interest on delay caused in the recovery of bazaar claims and the calculation of contingent speculative profit, which, it is alleged, would have accrued to the firm of Ralli if their commerce had not been interfered with by these lawless proceedings.

Lastly. I still think that a certain discretion should be left to Mr. Alison as to the amount which he may deem it expedient to claim in the very peculiar circumstances of this case, though the principles on which the demand is founded ought to be clearly stated to the Persian Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 146.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 22.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, April 21, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch which has been received from Mr. Abbott, containing an amended Report on Mr. Ralli's claim against the Persian Government; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether any new facts recorded therein would cause me to alter the opinion contained in my letter of the 5th instant. The previous papers were inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the amended Reports received from Mr. Abbott do not induce me to alter the opinion expressed in my former Report. Their effect is to show, more strongly perhaps than ever, that there is really but one question of principle which can interfere with the right of Firm, so feebly represented by Mr. Michoglou, to compensation, namely, the contract of that person with the Persian merchant.

But I adhere to my opinion that this contract must be considered not only as to the language and expressed condition which itself reveals the pressure under which it was made, but also with reference to the facts which preceded and accompanied it, facts which show that the Persian Government had abetted, and was abetting, indirectly, the measures of violence and injustice adopted by the Persian merchants against Mr. Michoglou, and that this person, however wretched and reprehensible his conduct, was at the time of making the alleged contract, in truth, scarcely more a free agent than a person whose house was surrounded by incendiaries who exacted the payment of a sum of money from him as the condition of sparing the rest of his property.

To recognize the validity of this contract would be not only to leave the firm represented by Mr. Michoglou to suffer the consequences of his folly and timidity, but to encourage the Persian Government in the belief that by directly or indirectly abetting the violence of their subjects they may at any time terrify a weak and timid man into an abandonment of the protection which on public grounds Her Majesty's Government have obtained by Treaty for Her Majesty's subjects in Persia.

1865

But I also adhere to my opinion that the conduct of Mr. Michoglou may properly operate in guiding the large discretion which I think should be left to Her Majesty's Representative in Persia, as to the amount of indemnity which in the circumstances he should require at the hands of the Persian Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Peru.

No. 147.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 3, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st of December, 1864, stating that your Lordship having been informed that an iron-clad vessel (stated to have been originally destined for the service of the Confederate States), constructed in France, had been purchased by the Peruvian Government, and is at present in course of equipment at Greenhithe, he was directed to transmit to us a letter from the Home Office, dated December 30, 1864, containing a Report of the result of the inquiry which had been instituted at your Lordship's request respecting the vessel in question; and to request that we would take the inclosed papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion at our early convenience as to the steps, if any, which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as we understand that the Peruvian Government are not at present engaged in war with any State at amity with Her Majesty, we do not recommend any steps to be taken in consequence of the police report on the screw-steamer now lying at Greenhithe. Perhaps, however (in order to remove the possibility of any doubt, whether this vessel is really being fitted out on account of the Peruvian Government), it might be expedient for your Lordship to ascertain by communication with the Representative of Peru in this this country, that the steamer in question is acknowledged by him as belonging to Peru.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 148.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 12.)

Doctors' Commons, May 11, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 25, March 13), inclosing a copy and translation of a Decree, declaring that all duties collected by the insurgents, who are now in possession of the Custom-house at Isla, will be considered as not paid, and that the Government will require such duties to be paid again to their own officers as soon as their authority is re-established in that port.

The accompanying despatches from Mr. Jerningham* respecting the revolutionary movement which has taken place in Peru was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Mr. Jerningham with regard to the Decree above referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima should be instructed to the following effect:—

That he should apprize the Government of Peru that Her Majesty's Government have learnt with surprise and regret the tenour of this Decree, and as far as Her Majesty's subjects are concerned they at once protest against its operation and effect.

That according to the universal usage of nations dues paid by foreigners, who take no part whatever in a civil war which breaks out in the country where they are peaceably resident and carrying on trade under the faith of Treaties and general international law, to a de facto Government which demands and has the power of compelling this payment, must be considered to be paid to the Government of the country.

At the same time Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires should be instructed not to offer any encouragement to British subjects to pay these dues to the Insurrectionary Government, nor to give any pledge or promise to them that they will be protected from the repayment of such dues, but to warn them of the necessity of being very careful not to do any act which may be fairly treated as voluntarily aiding and abetting the Insurrectionary Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 149.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 7.)

Doctors' Commons, July 7, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Lima (No. 53), reporting that the port of Islay and the Cove of Quilca have been closed to all merchant-vessels, in pursuance of a Decree which has been issued by the President of Peru.

A despatch which has been received from Her Majesty's Consul at Islay (No. 14) respecting the closing of that port was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the Decree in question must be at present considered as one which the public safety of the Kingdom of Peru requires in the particular emergency which has arisen; and as, moreover, it affects equally national and foreign vessels, I am of opinion it does not now warrant any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 150.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

Doctors' Commons, October 19, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Acting Charge d'Affaires at Lima (No. 7), inclosing copies of his correspondence with the Peruvian Minister for Foreign Affairs in regard to some English subjects who had been enlisted in this country to serve on board the Peruvian ship of war "Union," which vessel was subsequently made over by her commander to the Revolutionary party in Peru; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to me that Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires at Lima has, in the circumstances stated to me, properly refused the request of the Peruvian Govern-

---

* Mr. Jerningham, Nos. 23 and 24, March 10; No. 26, March 13; No. 28, March 25; No. 31, March 27, 1865.

No. 147*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

Doctors' Commons, May 4, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Islay (No. 5), reporting the arrest on board a mail-steamer, by a party of Peruvian Government officers, of an officer belonging to the Revolutionary party in Peru, and his subsequent release by the captain of the vessel; that I should perceive that Mr. Consul Withew requests to be furnished with instructions relative to the course he should pursue in cases of the nature of that above adverted to; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would inform your Lordship what reply should in my opinion be returned to Mr. Withew on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report:—

That I am of opinion that the proper answer to send to Her Majesty's Consul at Islay would be to this effect: that he must exercise a careful discretion in all cases of this description; that he must not claim, upon principle, for all British merchant-ships in a Peruvian port a right of entire exemption from the jurisdiction of the local authorities, but may properly remonstrate against the exercise of any such authority as a breach of usage and comity, except in very extreme cases. That with respect to mail-steamers, he may still more strongly remonstrate against any exercise of local jurisdiction on board them; but he must not claim even for them, as a matter of strict right, while they are on their present footing, that total exemption from jurisdiction which is the privilege of a ship of war in a foreign port.

That he appears to have exercised his discretion wisely and in accordance with these suggestions in the present case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

ment to interfere with respect to the Englishmen who formed part of the crew of the "Union."

I think, however, it would be right that he should avail himself of any opportunity to apprise these persons that, as they have chosen to embark in the service of a foreign State and to take part in the civil war waged therein, they must not count upon the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to extricate them from any difficulties in which such conduct may place them.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Portugal.

No. 151.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 28.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 28, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence* respecting the claims put forward by the executors of Mr. Richard Thornton, late geologist to the Zambesi Expedition, for payment of salary during the time that his services were dispensed with by Dr. Livingstone, for payment of the money stated to have been expended by him during that period for hire of servants, food, and other necessaries, and for instruments purchased, as alleged, for the use of the expedition, but without authority.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us four volumes of the "Correspondence respecting the Zambesi Expedition," in which the principal papers are marked that refer to the above-mentioned claims; and to request that we would take the correspondence inclosed into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion upon the questions raised by the late Mr. Thornton's executors.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That a perusal of the papers submitted to us lead us to the conclusion that it would be a harsh measure, and one not called for by the exigencies of justice, to refuse the claim of Mr. Thornton's executors to payment of arrears of salary, including the interval during which this gentleman's services were dispensed with by Dr. Livingstone. It appears from a letter of Dr. Livingstone, of 7th December, 1859, that, in his opinion, this gentleman had suffered "a complete collapse, consequent on the climate;" that he had made "a praiseworthy chart of the river;" but that his inability or disinclination to work ought to cause his salary to cease from the 3rd of May, 1859. On the 30th of March, 1860, the Hydrographer of the Admiralty, reports that "this boy of 18 had been prostrated by the climate;" and that he thinks "he may do good service if he survives the trying climate, of which I have great fears." He thought Dr. Livingstone certainly should be supported, but that if Lord John Russell took a favourable view of his case the salary might be restored. Your Lordship did take this view. On the 29th of December, 1862, in a letter dated from the River Zambesi, Dr. Livingstone announces that he has told Thornton that Lord Russell had decided in favour of his receiving the salary, and adds, "he (Thornton) is working at different points on the Zambesi river under my direction, with greatly improved health and energy, and it is likely he will give a good account of the geology of this region." On the 28th April, 1863, Dr. Livingstone announces the death of Mr. Thornton, the consequence of over fatigue, induced by a journey from Murchison's Cataracts to Tette: "of his own accord," he writes, "he (Thornton) performed a most fatiguing journey from this to Tette and back again on foot. His object was to get bearings from the hills at Tette to the mountains here, and I became aware of his intention only after he had left: the exertion used up all his strength, and soon after his return he was seized with diarrhœa, which went into dysentery and fever, under which he sank."

---

* Admiralty, January 13; to Admiralty, February 3; Admiralty, February 7; Memorandum, January 25, 1865.

It seems rather difficult to reconcile these Reports to the Foreign Office from Dr. Livingstone upon Mr. Thornton's case with those which he afterwards addressed to the Admiralty on the same subject (10th January and 6th February, 1865); but we think that the interests of Thornton, now transmitted to his executors, ought not to suffer from this contradiction, and that the more favourable view taken by Dr. Livingstone in his letters to the Foreign Office should be adopted by Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to the sums claimed for the expenses of servants, food, necessaries, and instruments, we think that my Lords of the Admiralty should decide upon these items; but if we are to express our opinion it would lean against the recognition of these expenses by Her Majesty's Government, as no other officer of the expedition appears to have been allowed extra pay for servants, food, or necessaries, and the instruments were not ordered by the authority of the head of the expedition, and have not been returned to the Admiralty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 152.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Reeeived April 3.)

Doctors' Commons, March 31, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches which have been received from Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon,* inclosing his correspondence with the Count d'Avila, who has been appointed Portuguese Plenipotentiary to treat with him on the question of the right of sovereignty over the Island of Bulama, now in dispute between this country and Portugal. The correspondence which has taken place thereupon between the Foreign Office and the Colonial Office, together with a copy of the last despatch to Sir A. Magenis, were also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Her Majesty's Minister thereon, especially on the question whether the British title having been derived by purchase would, or would not, lapse from non-occupation, as a title from discovery would; and further respecting the period of non-occupation after which a right by discovery or previous occupation lapses. The previous correspondence which has taken place on this subject was also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that instructions should be sent to Her Majesty's Minister at Lisbon firmly to maintain the right of Her Majesty to the Island of Bulama. It seems to me unnecessary to me to state in detail the historical facts carefully collected and ably narrated in the Memorandum from the Colonial Office. The conclusion to which a perusal of all the documents has led me is as follows:—

I think that there is sufficient evidence that a title such as in the circumstances would be recognized by international law was acquired to that territory in the year 1792. The evidence is affirmative of the British right, and negative of the right of any other State. In that year possession was obtained by purchase from the owners or Governors of the territory; the title so acquired was further strengthened by immediate occupation, which was continued for eighteen months. I know no authority for saying that territory so acquired is lost by the single fact that after the occupation, consequent on the purchase, has lasted between one and two years, a considerable interval has occurred during which no subject of the State which has acquired it has occupied the territory.

---

* Sir A. Magenis, No. 121, November 25; No. 129, December 27, 1864; No. 6, January 27; No. 21, February 28, 1865.

1865

On the assumption, which the history of the case appears fully to warrant, that the original sale of the Bejouga Chiefs to Captain Beaver and the English Company in 1792 was in the circumstances a valid sale and cession of territory duly purchased and duly granted, Bulama accrued at that time to the British Crown (which must be treated as the principal for whom Captain Beaver acted as agent) in the same way as any other territory acquired by purchase or cession. The power of a State so to acquire property is incontrovertible. All international jurists admit the propositions that the dominium over territory may be transferred from one State to another. Vattel may serve as a sample: "Quand une nation," he says, "a cédé quelque parti de ses biens à une autre, la cession doit être tenue pour valide et irrévocable, comme elle l'est en effet, en vertu de la notion de propriété." (Vattel, l. i., fol. 262.) Cessions of territory, though generally consequent on war, are not without precedents in time of peace. In 1777, I think, Portugal ceded to Spain the Islands of Annobon and Fernando del Po, in order to facilitate the Slave Trade of Spain with the coast of Africa. In 1850, I believe, Denmark ceded to Great Britain, in consideration of the sum of 10,000*l.*, all the possessions of the Danish Crown on the Gold Coast or Coast of Guinea. I am opinion that territory acquired by sale or by cession becomes the property of the State which acquires it, of which it cannot be divested, as it may be in certain cases of mere transitory occupation, by a mere non-user of the territory for a considerable interval of time. The title was then originally de jure and de facto valid, according to the usage and law of nations applicable to cases of this description. Her Majesty has never abandoned that title, either by any direct act of the State, or by an indirect permission of the exercise of the rights of sovereignty of another State.

On the contrary, directly the knowledge of any such attempt on the part of Portugal was made,—and it was made by no other State,—Her Majesty's Government distinctly and positively resisted it, ratifying the acts of force used by the officers of the Crown to remove the Portuguese authorities and subjects from the island. The British inhabitants of the island in 1814 or 1816 (the date seems uncertain) were driven out by an attack from natives of an adjoining island. Neither on that occasion nor in 1792 did Portugal or any other European Power put forward any title to the island. Indeed, on the latter occasion the Portuguese Government of Bissagos appear to have aided the British Government of Sierra Leone.

Since that period circumstances have made Her Majesty's Government think it expedient that this possession of the Crown should be more carefully guarded by naval and military force. Some measures for the accomplishment of this object have accordingly been taken; and, moreover, in the exercise of her right of sovereignty, Bulama has been formally attached to Her Majesty's possession of Sierra Leone by an Order in Council and solemn Proclamation in the year 1860.

It is to be observed that if the title of Her Majesty can be impeached at all, or by any counter-claimant, Portugal is certainly not, in my opinion, entitled to be the impugner or to prefer the adverse claim. That State has, to use the language of civilians, no persona standi in the matter.

The claim of title, founded on an averment of discovery in 1752 and subsequent grant originally put forward by that Crown, was destitute of all foundation in fact and law. The alleged discovery was not followed by any occupation; the erection of a wooden pillar alone, or any emblem of the kind not followed by occupation, constitutes, according to the opinion of every jurist of repute, no legal possession. The alleged grant to Portugal was never produced; the letters said to illustrate the transaction did not refer to any grant; and the alleged grantor, the Governor of Sierra Leone, had no power to make the grant.

Probably a sense of the utter insufficiency of these grounds to found any title induced the Portuguese Government tacitly to abandon them, and no proof of title is now produced anterior to the year 1828, and the first real attempt to occupy the island was made in 1830 In September 1831 this forcible occupation was practically resisted by one of Her Majesty's subjects, Captain Goddard, commanding a merchant-ship, who was fired upon for not saluting a Portuguese flag on the island. As soon as Her Majesty's Government received this information measures were taken in various ways, and at various times, for reinstating Her Majesty's authority in the island, and from that period to the present Her Majesty's Government have never ceased to maintain the right of the British Crown to this territory. Considerations of policy or expediency are, of course, without the province of my duty, but in my opinion international law furnishes no reason why these steps should be retraced or this possession abandoned.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Prussia.

No. 153.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 12.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, January 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a note which your Lordship proposes to address to the Prussian Ambassador at this Court, in conformity with our Report of the 29th of August last, on the subject of the Convention between Great Britain and Prussia of the 5th March last, for the mutual surrender of criminals; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship whether we see any objection thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no objection to the proposed note, which is in strict conformity with our former Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 154.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 9.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, February 9, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the inclosed papers* respecting the circumstances attending the loss of the British brig "Queen" on Fehmern Island in the month of April last; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue with regard to the request of persons interested that compensation may be claimed from the Prussian Government for the loss of the vessel, and the personal losses of the captain and crew.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the protest of the captain of the "Queen" states a strong primâ facie case for reasonable compensation from the Prussian Government, and I think that Her Majesty's Government may very properly assist the owners of this vessel in obtaining such compensation.

It may be of course that the Prussian authorities have a different story to tell, but it appears to me that there is ample ground for requiring them to controvert the averments contained in the protest, which, uncontroverted, found a just claim for indemnification.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 155.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 28.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, February 28, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a note

---

* Messrs. Walker, Hunter, and Grey, January 16, 1865.

1865

from the Austrian Ambassador, and a translation of a note from the Prussian Ambassador in London, dated the 21st instant, stating that the Governments which they represent have determined to grant a provisional national flag to the ships of the Duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg, pending the final decision as to the constitution of those Duchies. That the Ambassadors express a hope on the part of their Governments that Her Majesty's Government will grant to ships bearing the provisional flag the same rights which belonged to the ships of the Duchies previously to their separation from Denmark; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take this subject into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the course which should be taken by Her Majesty's Government with regard to this proposition.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is of course competent to Her Majesty's Government to accede to the request of the Austrian and Prussian Governments.

To do so, however, is to recognize distinctly the absolute right of Austria and Prussia, as joint conquerors of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg, to dispose of these Duchies as they please.

If these Duchies are free and independent States separately, or collectively a federation of States, the application to recognize their national flag ought to proceed from themselves in one capacity or the other.

It is to be observed, also, that to accede to this recognition is to set aside altogether any rights in this matter which may or may not be incident to the Germanic Confederation, a body recognized by the States who subscribed the Treaty of Vienna as having a distinct international status, and to which a British Minister is accredited.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 156.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 28.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, February 28, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 22nd instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 29th August and 11th January last, on the subject of the proposed modification in the Treaty of Extradition concluded between Great Britain and Prussia on the 5th March, 1864, he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us, that on the 13th ultimo your Lordship addressed to the Prussian Ambassador at this Court the note of which the draft had been submitted to our perusal; and that your Lordship has received from Count Bernstorff the inclosed answer thereto.

That seeing that the Prussian Government absolutely refuses to accede to the condition which would require the production of oral evidence in support of any demand for extradition, and considering moreover the general tone of Count Bernstorff's communication, your Lordship is of opinion that the negotiation may be allowed to drop for the present, and that your Lordship would be glad to know whether we concur in this opinion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have considered this case, and have the honour to express our agreement with the opinion of your Lordship that the letter of Count Bernstorff renders it inexpedient to continue for the present the negotiation in this matter with the Prussian Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 157.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, March 7, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acquaint us that your Lordship has received from the Prussian Government a counter-draft of a new Treaty of Commerce between Great Britain and the Zollverein. That that draft has been submitted to the Board of Trade, and that the Board of Trade has sent to your Lordship a revised draft, a copy of which, as well as a copy of the Prussian draft, was also inclosed. That by the Vth Article of the draft Treaty, as amended at the Board of Trade, Canada and Australia could not impose greater duties on Rhine wine than on French wines, nor on German flax than on United States' flax; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion at our earliest convenience whether such a stipulation would be in conformity with the Act of 1846 (8 and 9 Vict., cap. 93) which gave the British colonies power to reduce or repeal certain duties of Customs, and with the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States of the 5th of June, 1854 (Hertslet, vol. ix, page 998). In connection with these questions Mr. Hammond was to call our attention to the Treaty with Belgium of July 1862, which it is presumed is in entire accordance with the laws of the country.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think there will be nothing at variance with the Act of 1846 (8 and 9 Vict., cap. 93), or with the Treaty with the United States of the 5th of June, 1854, in such a stipulation as that referred to.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 158.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 1.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, May 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from the British Vice-Consul at Memel, dated the 22nd instant, requesting to be furnished, for the use of the Crown Prosecutor of that city, with information as to whether the criminal laws of England and Prussia agree in certain specified points; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon at our earliest convenience.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the criminal law of England agrees substantially with that of Prussia upon the points referred to, except that the penalties affixed in this country to the offences in question differ in some respects from those under the Prussian law.

1. By statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 97, sec. 3, the offence of "setting fire to any building with intent thereby to injure or defraud any person" is a felony, punishable by penal servitude for life (or with less punishments within certain limits according to the discretion of the Court).

2. By section 7 of the same statute the offence of unlawfully and maliciously "setting fire to any matter or thing being in, against, or under any building, under such circumstances that if the building were thereby set on fire, the offence would amount to a felony," is also a felony, punishable with penal servitude for any term not exceeding fourteen years (or with certain minor punishments).

3. By section 43 of the same Act, "Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to, or cast away, or in anywise destroy any ship or vessel with intent thereby to prejudice any owner or part owner of such ship or vessel, or of any goods on board the same, or any person that has underwritten or shall underwrite any policy of insurance upon such ship or vessel, or on the freight thereof, or upon any goods on board the same," is also guilty of felony, and punishable with penal servitude for life (or with less punishments within certain limits, according to the discretion of the Court).

4. By the statute 24 and 25 Vict., cap. 100, sec. 13, "Whosoever shall set fire to any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, or any part of the tackle, apparel, or furniture thereof, or any goods or chattels being therein, or shall cast away or destroy any ship or vessel, with intent in any of such cases to commit murder," is guilty of felony, punishable with penal servitude for life (or with certain less punishments, according to the discretion of the Court).

1865

If the intent of taking life by any such act is actually accomplished, or if (without such intent) life is actually taken in the course of the commission of a felony, the offence is murder, and punishable with death.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 159.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 14, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a note dated the 27th ultimo, which has been received from the Prussian Ambassador at this Court relative to the detention of the merchant-vessel "Falk" or "Bacchante" by order of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Hong Kong. That it would appear that this vessel, while sailing under Danish colours, was captured by a Prussian ship of war in the Gulf of Pecheli, and brought into the harbour of Tien-tsin, where she was sold to Messrs. Alisch and Co., and provided with Prussian papers. That on her arrival in Hong Kong an embargo was laid on her by the British Vice-Admiralty Court there at the suit of the Danish Consul and of the former owner, Mr. Charles Karberg, of Sonderberg; and notwithstanding the protest of the Prussian Consular Agent, was adjudicated by the same Court to the original owner, while the purchasers were condemned in costs. That Count Bernstorff protests against the legality of these proceedings, and denies the competency of the Vice-Admiralty Court to act in the matter, and demands that Messrs. Alisch and Co. may be indemnified for any loss they have suffered in consequence.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit, for our further information, a letter dated the 26th August from the Colonial Office, inclosing the report of the Governor on the correspondence which he had had on the subject; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship what course should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question appears to be, whether the British Court of Admiralty at Hong Kong had, or had not, jurisdiction in this matter; and not whether it exercised that jurisdiction properly, or, in other words, whether it rightly applied the laws to the facts placed in evidence before it. I am of opinion that the Court has jurisdiction; and I have no doubt that the High Court of Admiralty in England would have entertained such a suit in similar circumstances, though it is very true that there are judgments to be found in which the Court has expressed a reluctance to entertain such suits, and in the exercise of its discretion has required the consent of the Consuls of both nations before it adjudicated on a suit between foreigners. But even in these cases the Court has never denied its jurisdiction, but, inasmuch as what are called "causes of possession" between foreigners sometimes depend upon Foreign Statute Law, has been unwilling to decide upon them. It is to be remarked that this was not a case of that kind. The Court of Admiralty exercises its jurisdiction in rem, and administers the jus gentium, as well as the particular law of its own country. The cases of salvage and wages between foreigners are familiar instances. It is to be observed, that if the "Falk" had been an English vessel, there could, of course, be no doubt whatever that the Court would have heard the case, whether the Prussian defendant submitted or not to the jurisdiction. In this case the Danish claimant, both personally and by his Consul, claimed the possession of a ship which was in British waters, and of which he said he had been wrongfully dispossessed. The Court of Admiralty had certainly jurisdiction over the res, and was bound, I think, to exercise it on the application of the Dane who invoked it, just as much as it would have been if the claimant had happened to be an Englishman. It is, of course, competent to the Prussian Government to refuse to recognize within their own territorial limits, however inconsistent with usual comity, the authority of the sentence of the British Court, but within the dominions of Her Majesty that sentence must take effect.

I think, therefore, that the course that Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue, is to represent to the Prussian Ambassador that the British Courts of Admiralty do take cognizance of suits between foreigners when the res over which they exercise their authority is within British territory.

That in such case they administer the jus gentium, and that the consent of the foreign Consul is not necessary to found their jurisdiction.

That Her Majesty's Government have, therefore, no more power to interfere with the authority of the Judge in this case than they would have if the suit had been between one of Her Majesty's subjects and a foreigner, or between two of Her Majesty's subjects.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 160.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 4.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 3, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (No. 238), forwarding a despatch from the Consul at Königsberg, in which the latter raises the question whether he is entitled or bound to celebrate a marriage between a Christian British subject and a Jewish lady, a subject of the King of Prussia. That Lord Napier also draws attention to two other questions connected with this subject; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to the Consul with regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that, under the provisions of the first section of the 12 and 13 Vict., cap. 68, the Consul is required to marry two persons, whatever their religious faith may be, one of whom is a British subject, if there be no lawful impediment, according to the law of England and the statute aforesaid, to such marriage.

That I do not think the Consul is "bound," though he is "entitled," to celebrate such marriage if, by so doing, he not having the privileges of a Diplomatic Minister or Agent, subjects himself to penalties or punishment in the foreign State in which he is Consul, and of which one of the parties to be married is a subject. I am of opinion that a marriage so solemnized would be valid throughout the dominions of Her Majesty, but would not necessarily be valid in the State in which it was celebrated or in any third country.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 161.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 4, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at Berlin (No. 274), requesting an opinion as to the claim to be considered as a British subject, and as such to receive a British passport, of a M. Renkewitz, an individual who was born in the British Colony of Tobago, of a Saxon father and a Danish mother, and has not resided in British territory since he was seven years of age; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Ambassador on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the facts that M. Renkewitz is, strictly speaking, in the eye of the law, a subject of Great Britain, and that no other State at this moment lays claim to his allegiance, I think his petition to receive a British passport may properly be granted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

River Plate.

No. 162.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 8, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to state to me that in consequence of hostilities now directed against the Republic of Uruguay by a party in insurrection against the Government of the Republic, aided by the Brazilian land and sea forces, the Government of Brazil having also commenced hostilities against Uruguay, which act on their part has produced a declaration of war against Brazil on the part of the Government of Paraguay, there may be reason to apprehend that the rights of navigation secured to Great Britain in the River Plate and adjoining rivers by the Treaties of which copies were inclosed, [sic] Mr. Hammond was to request that I would acquaint your Lordship whether Her Majesty's Government would be justified in instructing the British Admiral in the Plate to see that the privileges granted by those Treaties to Great Britain are not infringed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Treaty to which I am referred, between Her Majesty and the Argentine Confederation, provides by its VIth Article that if a "war should break out between any of the States, Republics, or Provinces of the River Plate or its confluents, the navigation of the Rivers Parana and Uruguay shall remain free to the merchant flag of all nations excepting in what may relate to munitions of war, such as arms of all kinds, gunpowder, lead, and cannon-balls."

The Treaty between Her Majesty and the Republic of Paruguay, to which I am also referred (which I therefore conclude to be in force, though by Article XVI it would have expired after the lapse of seven years, that is, in 1860), contains no provision similar to that which is to be found in the Treaty with the Argentine Confederation.

The States now at war I understand to be the State of Uruguay and the State of Paraguay, and the Empire of Brazil. It does not appear that the States of the Argentine Confederation are at present engaged in this war.

On the whole, I am of opinion that in the present state of things Sir C. Hotham should be instructed generally to see that the free navigation of the River Plate by British merchants be not interfered with, at the same time to cause strict injunctions to be given to the masters of British vessels not to carry any munitions of war of any description to any belligerent, accompanied by a warning that if they do so they may render themselves liable to the exercise of belligerent rights, and the penalties incident to an infringement of neutrality.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 163.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 13.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 8th instant respecting the course to be taken by the British Admiral for securing the observance of the rights of navigation in the River Plate and adjoining rivers, granted by Treaty to Great Britain, he was directed by your Lordship to state that your Lordship concurs in the suggestion in the inclosed letter from the Admiralty, that a notice should be inserted in the "Gazette" warning British merchants trading in the River Plate of the liabilities they incur in the present state of affairs by carrying munitions of war to any of the belligerent Powers; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would prepare a notification accordingly for insertion in the "Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have prepared, and herewith submit, a draft of a notification which I think proper and sufficient for insertion in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 164.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 3.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that the claims of British subjects on account of losses arising out of the non-admittance into the port of Buenos Ayres of the "Cestus," and other British vessels, in 1845, in consequence of General Rosas' Decree of the 13th of February of that year, formed the subject of my predecessor's Report of the 5th November, 1861, and of previous correspondence with the Foreign Office. That on the 22nd of February, 1858, all the documents connected with these claims were sent, together with the papers respecting other British claims on Buenos Ayres, to Mr. Christie, then Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at that place, in order to assist him in bringing about an arrangement for their settlement. That from the accompanying correspondence I should perceive that it has been agreed between Mr. Thornton, Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres, and the Argentine Government, to refer to the arbitration of a friendly Power the question involved in the claims arising out of General Rosas' Decree above referred to. Mr. Hammond was also directed by your Lordship further to transmit a despatch from Mr. Thornton (No. 4, January 24), stating that it has been agreed that the President of Chile should be invited to arbitrate, and inclosing a case for submission to the arbiter; and was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether the case drawn up by Mr. Thornton is fit and proper to be laid before the arbiter on behalf of Her Majesty's Government. The Conventions of November 24, 1849, and of August 21, 1858, alluded to in the inclosed correspondence, were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the case drawn up by Mr. Thornton is fit and proper to be laid before the arbiter on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 165.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 20, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 29th ultimo, from M. Balcarce, the Argentine Minister at the Court of St. James, claiming compensation for M. Pedro Justo, an Argentine citizen, for the loss of goods on board the British ship "Caledonia," in the year 1845, in consequence of that vessel having been burnt by the orders of the British Admiral. A letter from the Admiralty, dated the 11th instant, inclosing a copy of a Report on this subject by the Registrar of the High Court of Admiralty, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship of my opinion as to the reply which should be returned to M. Balcarce's application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that an answer should be sent to the Argentine Minister to the following effect. That your Lordship is advised that M. Pedro Justo has no claim for compensation, according to the recognized principles of international law, for the burning of his goods on board the British ship "Caledonia" in 1845, inasmuch as at that time Her Majesty was waging war with the Argentine Republic, and the destruction of the British ship "Caledonia" was an act rendered necessary by the operations of that war; moreover, the goods for which compensation is claimed belonged to the belligerent with whom Her Majesty was then at war: and on these grounds, irrespective of the delay of twenty years (though that is a circumstance not entirely to be put out of the question), it is clear that the claim of M. Pedro Justo cannot be admitted by Her Majesty's Government.

1865

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 166.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 15, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 9th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a draft of the reply which it is proposed to return to M. Candido Bareiro's observations on the conduct of the Argentine Government in allowing a Brazilian squadron to pass up the Paraná; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would inform your Lordship whether I consider the proposed note to M. Bareiro to be right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the reply which it is proposed to return to the observations of M. Candido Bareiro is right and proper to be sent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 167.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 25, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 20th ultimo on the claim of Don Pedro Justo to compensation for the loss of his property destroyed on board the British vessel "Caledonia" in the River Plate in the year 1846, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a further representation on the subject dated the 15th instant, which has been received from the Argentine Minister at this Court; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether the present statement of M. Balcarce leads me to alter the opinion already expressed by me on this matter. The former papers in this case were transmitted for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That the present statement of M. Balcarce does not suggest any grounds which induce me to alter the opinion which I had the honour to express in my former Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 168.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 8, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith despatches from Her Majesty's Chargés d'Affaires at Buenos Ayres and Monte Video, together with a letter from the Admiralty,* relative to notifications which have been issued of a blockade of the ports of Paraguay by the naval forces of Brazil and the Argentine Republic; and Mr. Hammond was to request that if, after taking these papers

---

* Mr. Lettsom, No. 36; Mr. Thornton, No. 29; Admiralty, June 5, 1865.

No. 168*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received October 20.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, October 19, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Minister in the River Plate (Nos. 60 and 66) relative to the expedition of Her Majesty's ship "Doterel" up the Rivers Paraná and Paraguay, and inclosing copies of a correspondence between himself and Senhor Octaviano, who is on a special mission from Brazil to the Republic of Buenos Ayres, as to the alleged infringement of Brazilian belligerent rights by the commander of Her Majesty's ship "Doterel;" that in transmitting to me further papers, as marked in the margin,* in connection with this case Mr. Hammond was to state to me that the despatch No. 61 from Mr. Thornton, and referred to in his despatch No. 66 of the 24th of July, has been mislaid, and could not therefore be transmitted to me.

Mr. Hammond was also to inclose a note verbale, dated 29th September, which has been communicated to Earl Russell, by the French Secretary of Embassy at this Court, relative to the pretensions of Brazil and her allies to prevent foreign ships of war from passing up the River Paraná during the hostilities with Paraguay; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take all these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the belligerent right of bockade claimed by Brazil is, in the circumstances of the case, subject to very peculiar considerations.

In the first place, the free navigation of the River Plata and of its confluents, especially the Paraná, by European merchant-vessels, has been the subject of frequent negotiations between the States of South America and Europe.

In the next place, the Argentine Republic is the ally of Brazil in the present war against Paraguay; and it is clear, I think, that the Treaty obligations, whatever they may be, of that Republic with neutral States, are binding upon her, notwithstanding that alliance, and it is difficult to see how her ally can escape from these obligations while the war is carried on jointly by both States.

Now, by the VIth Article of the Treaty between the Argentine Confederation and Great Britain (10th July, 1853) it was provided that, "if a war should break out between any of the States, Republics, or Provinces of the River Plate, or its confluents, the navigation of the Rivers Paraná and Uruguay shall remain free to the merchant flag of all nations, excepting in what may relate to munitions of war, such as arms of all kinds, gunpowder, lead, and cannon balls."

I do not agree with Senhor Octaviano (Inclosure 5 in Mr. Thornton's No. 66 of the 24th July) that because Paraguay has declared war against Brazil and the Argentine Republic, the casus fœderis has not arisen, or that there is any absurdity incident to such a construction; and I am by no means certain that an innocent merchant-vessel, passing up these waters, could have been lawfully seized even by a Brazilian ship of war.

In making these observations I have not forgotten the cases decided by Lord Stowell relatively to the blockade of the Elbe and the Weser, which Senhor Octaviano, the Brazilian Minister, appears to have had present to his mind (the "Spes" and the "Irene," 5 Rob., p. 78; the "Maria," 6 Rob., p. 201). Even in these cases Lord Stowell lamented and softened as much as possible the severity of the rule which he was applying; but the circumstances with respect to the blockade of these rivers materially differ from those which relate to the waters of the La Plata.

I do not think it a certain inference from the before-mentioned Article of the Treaty that neutral ships of war were also allowed in time of war to pass up the river, though such is the inference unhesitatingly drawn by the French Minister (Baron Baude, in his note verbale, 29th September, 1865).

But, having regard to the exceptional circumstances stated in these papers and to the very peculiar considerations applicable to the exercise of belligerent rights in the waters of the La Plata, I am of opinion that the commander of the "Doterel" was not guilty of any violation of international law in passing up these waters for the purpose of saving the lives of neutral British subjects which were in great peril, and who had taken up their abodes and established their commerce under the faith of Treaties, in towns situate in these

---

* Admiralty, August 4; to Admiralty, August 8; Admiralty, September 2; to Mr. Thornton, No. 7; Mr. Thornton, No. 80, 1865.

1865

waters, it not being denied that he carefully abstained from taking any part whatever in the war which was being carried on, and it not being alleged on the part of Brazil that he rendered any service whatever to her enemy.

Upon the whole question I will observe that it may, in my opinion, be fairly stated, as a proposition consistent with international law, that the right of the neutral subject to protection is as strong as the right of the belligerent to blockade; and this belligerent right is not violated by the passage of a ship of war belonging to a neutral State up a river, for the sole purpose and with the sole consequence of saving the lives of the subjects of that State, in those exceptional circumstances which render it very probable, from the condition of the belligerents, that those lives would otherwise be sacrificed; though, as a matter of comity, convenience, and respect for the belligerent flag, it would be proper that this should be done, if possible, with the consent of the blockading Power, as I venture to hope it will be on the present occasion.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

into consideration, I should be of opinion that any notice to this effect should be inserted in the "Gazette," I would prepare and transmit a draft of the same to your Lordship.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion it would be proper to notify in the "Gazette" the alleged intended blockade; but from the peculiar wording of the despatches I have thought it best not to set out at length, as is usually done, the letter or the decree announcing such blockade, but merely to notify the purport and effect of them. I have also thought it more proper to confine such notification to a blockade by the naval forces of Brazil, without including the blockade asserted by the Argentine Confederation, as to the effective character of which there appears to be reason to doubt.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 168.

RIVER PLATE.

Notification of intended Blockade of the Ports and Coast of Paraguay.

Foreign Office, June 7, 1865.

IT is hereby notified that Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received intelligence from Her Majesty's Minister at Buenos Ayres and from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video to the purport and effect that the ports and coast of the Republic of Paraguay were about to be blockaded by a Brazilian naval force which, on the 24th of April last, was on its way up the Paraná; and further that the ports in the Province of Matto Grosso are closed to all vessels.

R. P.

No. 169.

The Queen's Advocate to Mr. Hammond.—(Received November 10.)

(Private.)
My dear Sir, 5, Arlington Street, London, November 10, 1865.

THE notification of March 14 did, in effect and substance, give notice of a blockade, regard being had to the Treaty.

The notification of June 9 mentioned the blockade in express terms.

I am much obliged by your note, and return the inclosure.

Yours very truly,
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 170.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 2.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 2, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosure from Her Majesty's Acting Chargé d'Affaires (No. 5), forwarding a copy and translation of a law recently sanctioned by the Argentine Congress in regard to the administration of intestate estates in that Republic.

For my convenience Mr. Hammond also inclosed all the previous correspondence, as marked in the accompanying volumes, which has passed on this subject; and was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with any observations I may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I have perused all the papers relating to this subject in the thirteen volumes which accompany the letter of Mr. Hammond. The result of the whole correspondence and negotiations on the subject is shortly as follows:—

1865

The Treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and the Argentine Confederation provided, by the 13th clause, that British Consuls might appoint curators to the effects of British subjects dying intestate, "sin intervencion alcuna" of the local authorities.

Upon the strength of these words, British Consuls for a long time—about thirty years—appear to have been allowed, upon various occasions, to treat British property of this kind as exempt altogether from the jurisdiction of the local authorities; but at last the Argentine Confederation demurred to this construction, and contended that an undue latitude was given to these words, which only meant that the State should not arbitrarily interfere to appropriate in any way such property.

The British Consul, however, maintained the contrary opinion, and appealed also to long usage as confirming it.

The matter was carefully considered by the Foreign Office, and the opinion of the Queen's Advocate several times taken upon it.

As to the usage, it appeared, in the language of Mr. Christie's despatch of the 31st March, 1858, that "neither the claim of Buenos Ayrean Courts to exercise jurisdiction in cases of succession to British subjects, nor the exercise of the jurisdiction, is new."

As to the language of the clause of the Treaty, the opinion of Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires accredited to the Confederation coincided with the opinions of my predecessor in office and of myself, namely, that the "intervencion" excluded was not the operation of the ordinary legal authorities, but the let or hindrance of extraordinary action by the State; and Her Majesty's Government adopted and acted upon this opinion.

From time to time, however, a new law upon the subject of intestate foreigners' effects was proposed or suggested by the various Governments of the Republic, and it was intended that further privileges should be conferred on foreigners, but with the condition of reciprocity on the part of the State to which they belonged.

As this condition was impracticable in England, we endeavoured to obtain, in lieu of the reciprocity clause, either the "most favoured nation clause" or a reciprocity clause qualified "so far as English laws and institutions would permit;" and at one time there appeared to be a reasonable hope of obtaining the adoption of the former of these alterations by the Government of the Confederation. But in the political vicissitudes of this Confederation, Ministers unfavourable to any condition less stringent than absolute reciprocity have obtained the ascendancy, and the result is the present law.

There is no doubt that the effect of it is to place British subjects on a less favourable footing than other foreigners,—but this is because British law places all foreigners (including Buenos Ayreans) on a less favourable footing than they are placed by the terms of this law, and does not admit, by her common law, as other foreign States do, the principle of reciprocity.

I am of opinion that no ground of complaint for any violation of international law is laid by the enactment of this statute.

Probably the administration of justice in this Republic deserves the censure which I perceive is cast upon it in the course of the correspondence on this subject; but British subjects who make and leave fortunes in the territories of this Republic are aware of this fact, and cannot claim, upon any general principles of international law, an entire exemption from the law of the place in which they reside and in which their effects are situated.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 171.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 8.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, December 8, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith, with its several inclosures, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Monte Video (No. 83), giving an account of the state of affairs now existing between the Government of Monte Video and a company of householders who in 1845 advanced to that Government a sum of money to be repaid in 1848; that I should see by the concluding paragraph of Mr. Lettsom's despatch the difficulty in which he finds himself placed as to his own conduct in the matter on the date at which he wrote; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the nature of the instruction which should be addressed to Mr. Lettsom in reply.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the decree of a Court of Justice founded upon the proposition that a subject is not bound by the law of his country because he protested against it is not to be received by any foreign State whose subject is injured thereby.

I agree with Mr. Lettsom that the sentence is plainly in opposition to the letter and spirit of Article VII of the Convention of 7th September, 1858.

The Government of Monte Video must in the circumstances of this case be constrained to redeem their solemn pledge embodied in a formal Convention, and confirmed by their Legislature, of protecting the British shareholders from the consequences of Signor Antonini's action.

It appears to me that the duty of Mr. Lettsom is confined to obtaining from the Government the redemption of this pledge, without regard to the motives which may induce the Government to do so.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Russia.

No. 172.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 24.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, January 23, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a correspondence between the Foreign Office and Her Majesty's Consul-General at Odessa and others regarding the alleged murder at that port of Captain Middleton; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether, in view of the circumstances detailed in the inclosed correspondence, Her Majesty's Government can properly interfere in the matter, and if so, what steps they should take.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am afraid there can be little doubt that this unfortunate person was murdered on the night on which he was on shore at Odessa. There are many circumstances in the evidence which point to this conclusion. The bad character of Gills' house, the proof that other persons had been robbed there, the fact that Captain Nelson took him there, the language and conduct of that person, the discrepancy between the statement of Gill and his wife as to the sobriety of Captain Middleton on that occasion, the fact that there was a quarrel of a serious character on that occasion, the broken window unsatisfactorily explained, the large sum of money which Captain Middleton was known to have about him not found upon him, the place in which he was found away from the natural place of embarkation, the nature of the wounds on his person, the general good character of the deceased,—all conspire to render it almost certain that he died by violence.

Against this inference, the facts that he had been in low spirits, and had written a dejected though very religious letter to his wife, suggesting, if any, a very remote possibility of suicide, are of very little avail.

There is much also which points to Captain Nelson as having been concerned in the robbery, if not in the murder; but I have the honour to express my agreement with the Secretary of State for the Home Department, that Her Majesty's Government have no legal power or authority to send Captain Nelson to be tried at Odessa according to the request, unfortunately tardy, of the Russian Acting Police-master Vicoff. It is true, as Mr. Waddington remarks, that there is nothing said in the depositions about the beating of Captain Middleton by Nelson in conjunction with the Gills; but probably subsequent evidence of this very important fact has been discovered, and I think that Her Majesty's Consul at Odessa should be instructed to forward to Her Majesty's Government any further evidence that may have been obtained since the Report of Mr. Zohrab; for, though at present there is certainly not evidence enough to warrant Her Majesty's Government in trying Captain Nelson in this country, further evidence might lead to different advice.

1865

I have, &c
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 173.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 31, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh (No. 21), respecting the wish of the British Factory to induce the Council of the Empire to revise the 6th section of the law for the naturalization of foreigners in Russia, which relates to children born after their parents had adopted Russian allegiance. Mr. Hammond was pleased to transmit the accompanying papers, as noted in the margin,* on the question of the nationality of foreigners; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course it would be right and proper for Her Majesty's Ambassador to pursue.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the wish of the British Factory to induce the Council of the Empire to revise the 6th section of the new Russian law for the naturalization of foreigners in Russia appears to me very reasonable, and one which Sir A. Buchanan should be instructed to further as much as possible. At the same time it is impossible to press upon the Russian Government the law of England as a complete reason for the concession which is desired.

It is true, indeed, that the present law of England would allow the Russian merchant to carry on his business in Great Britain without being naturalized, and so far the doctrine of reciprocity may be made available; but, on the other hand (and this brings me to the consideration of the second subject submitted to me), the law of England considers that allegiance, whether acquired by birth or by naturalization, is indelible, except, perhaps, in the case of a conflict of duty between the obligations of the naturalized foreigner to the State to which he originally belonged and Great Britain.

The questions propounded by Lord Napier in his despatch No. 319 must be answered as follows:—that the Russian may exercise wholesale and retail trade in England on the same footing as a British subject, with the exception that he cannot lease land or houses for a longer term than twenty-one years unless he be naturalized. That a Russian cannot, according to the theory of the law, put off the allegiance acquired by naturalization, though practically he would do so if he returned to his own country, except, perhaps, in a case of war between Russia and England.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—It might be added that no pecuniary fine would be demanded from the Russian, on his returning to his own country, by the English law.

R. P.

No. 174.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 21, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that, with reference to my Report of the 23rd January last, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Odessa (No. 16, March 4), furnishing further evidence bearing upon the alleged murder of Captain Middleton; and to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether any and what steps can be taken thereon. The former papers were also annexed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence now submitted to me may be considered as establishing the fact that there was a violent quarrel at Gill's house on the night of the murder, and that Captain Middleton was beaten. If this fact be established, the Gill's have sworn falsely as to this part of the case. There is, however, no evidence at present that any person accompanied Captain Middleton when he left, whether by compulsion or by his own free will, the house. The evidence tends to show that the Gills did not leave the house that night after Captain Middleton was gone; and there is no proof at present that either Captain Nelson or Sherwood did leave the house. Sherwood has been most improperly allowed by the Russian police to leave Odessa. He is said to be now at Constantinople. I have again read over his evidence, laid before me on a former occasion, and I feel satisfied that he knows much more than he has stated.

Though these depositions increase the probability that Captain Middleton was murdered, there is not in them, or in the papers now before me, evidence upon which Captain Nelson or any other person could be found guilty of the murder.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Napier, Nos. 186, 207, 319; Baron Brunnow, July 15; Home Office, August 13, 1864.

No. 175.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 7, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 26th of October, 1863, on the subject of the claim of Messrs. Douglas and Condiff for compensation on account of the outrage committed on their persons and property by certain persons in the district of Kieff, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Ambassador at St. Petersburgh (No. 216), together with the previous correspondence therein referred to, and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Sir A. Buchanan in regard to Messrs. Douglas and Condiff's claim.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Representative at St. Petersburgh should be instructed that Her Majesty's Government agree with him in the view which he has taken of the inadequacy of the compensation for outrages now proved and admitted of a very gross character, under the sanction of public authority, against peaceable and unoffending British subjects. That the case seems to have been very properly laid, both as to the letter and the spirit, before Prince Gortchakoff. The precise amount to be demanded should, I think, be left to the discretion of Her Majesty's Representative; but the difference between 5 roubles (the sum awarded) and 1,000 and 2,000 roubles, the sum which appeared fitting to Lord Napier, is very wide, and I should think that 500 roubles for Mr. Condiff and 1,000 for Mr. Douglas might be not improperly demanded by Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 176.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 27th of June last, stating that with reference to the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 21st of March last respecting the case of Captain Middleton, who is supposed to have been murdered at Odessa, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us all the correspondence which has ensued on this subject, together with a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General in that city (No. 35, June 6), suggesting that as Captains Nelson and Sherwood, who are suspected to have been concerned in the murder, cannot be sent to Odessa for trial, their evidence should be taken, and copies thereof sent to Odessa for communication to the Russian police; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps which may properly be taken in this matter.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion the suggestion of Her Majesty's Consul-General at Odessa may be properly acted upon, viz., that the evidence of Messrs. Nelson and Sherwood (if they choose to give it) should be taken, and communicated to the Russian police at Odessa; but that there is no power to compel them to give evidence.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
Also for the Attorney and Solicitor-General.

No. 177.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, November 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE were honoured with the commands of Earl Russell, signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 28th of October ultimo, stating that he was directed by his Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying memorandum, which was delivered to his Lordship by the Russian Ambassador at this Court, respecting the course pursued by the Courts of law in this country in a suit between the heirs at law of the late Sir James Wylie and the executors appointed in a will made by him in Russia in 1852; and to request that we would take this memorandum into consideration and favour Lord Russell with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto, and also with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to the commands of Earl Russell, we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand the Russian Government to complain, first, that the will of the late Sir James Wylie has been practically set aside by what they consider the false construction placed upon it by the English tribunals; and, secondly, that in taking upon themselves to construe that will at all, and to decide upon the beneficial title to the English moveable property of the testator, these Courts exceeded their jurisdiction, and violated the rules of international comity.

It would, we think, be a sufficient answer to this complaint to say, that the suit of Enohin v. Wylie was one which came before our civil tribunals at the instance of private parties in the ordinary course of law; that the executors of Sir James Wylie, who defended it in the usual way, must (like all other suitors in the Courts of every country) abide by the result of the litigation in which they have been engaged; and that our Courts did not proceed upon the principle of refusing to give effect to the will of Sir James Wylie, either because he was domiciled in Russia, or for any other reason: but admitting that full effect was to be given to that will, according to its true construction, and that, in this as in all other respects, the law of the domicil was to be regarded, they came to the conclusion (after hearing and carefully considering evidence as to that law) that the will contained no dispositive words applicable to the English property, which, therefore, they adjudged to the testator's next of kin. Against such a decision (even if the Russian Government could show good grounds for their opinion that the words ought to have received a different construction), the Government of this country has no power, and is clearly under no obligation, to grant relief.

But, inasmuch as the main ground assumed by the Russian memorandum is, that by international comity it was incompetent for the Courts of this country to take cognizance of this case at all, even as to the moveable property in Great Britain (unless for the sole purpose of handing it over to the Russian executors, to be administered by them in Russia), and that the next of kin ought to have been remitted to the Russian Court, there to litigate all questions as to the proper construction of the will and the proper distribution of the English property, we think it necessary to state that this proposition appears to us to be entirely opposed to the settled law and usage of this country; nor can it, we believe, be shown that there is any well-established and universally received rule of international comity at variance with our own law and usage in this respect.

It is undoubtedly true that the late Lord Chancellor, when delivering his opinion in the House of Lords in this case of Enohin v. Wylie, did make use of the expressions quoted in the memorandum. But the Lord Chancellor has no greater authority in the House of Lords than any other Lord who takes part in a judgment of that House; and on this particular point the two other Lords who concurred in that judgment distinctly dissented from Lord Westbury's remarks, which were, indeed, opposed to a former express decision of the House of Lords itself, in a case of Preston v. Melville (reported in Clarke and Finnelly's Reports, vol. viii, p. 1).

In that case of Preston v. Melville an order had been made by the Court of Session in Scotland directing an English administrator, who had in his hands funds belonging to the English personal estate of a testator domiciled in Scotland, to pay over those funds to the Scotch testamentary trustees for the purpose of being administered by the Scotch Courts, being the Courts of the domicil. The House of Lords upon appeal reversed this Order, and Lord Cottenham (delivering their unanimous judgment) said,*—

"By the law of England the person to whom administration is granted by the Ecclesiastical Court is by statute bound to administer the estate, and to pay the debts of the deceased. The letters of administration under which he acts direct him so to do, and he takes an oath that he will well and truly administer all and every the goods of the deceased, and pay his debts so far as the goods will extend, and exhibit a full and true account of his administration. That such are the duties of an executor or administrator acting under a probate or letters of administration in this country is certain, although the testator or intestate may have been domiciled elsewhere. The domicile regulates the right of succession, but the administration must be in the country in which possession is taken and held under lawful authority of the property of the deceased."

Lord Cranworth in the case of Enohin v. Wylie declared his adherence to the principles of that judgment, saying,†—

"The rules of law applicable to such a case are, as I conceive, well established; personal property in this country belonging to a foreigner or to a British subject domiciled abroad can only be obtained in the event of his death through the medium of a representative in this country. The duty of administration is to be discharged by the Courts of this country, though in the performance of that duty they will be guided by the law of the domicile. This was the mode in which the law was laid down by Lord Cottenham in this House in the case of Preston v. Lord Melville."

Lord Chelmsford in the same case said,‡—

"The Appellants farther insisted that the porbate having given the executors the right to receive the stock of the English funds, the Court of Chancery ought to have ordered it to be transferred to them, to be disposed of according to the directions of the Russian tribunals. But the fund is within the jurisdiction of the Court, the rights of the parties, according to the law of the domicile (assuming an intestacy), have been ascertained, the next of kin are, for the most part, in this country, and why under these circumstances the property should be remitted to the forum of the domicile, in order that it should be sent back again to be distributed, and why the Court should be incompetent to act effectively, and finally, in the suit which has been instituted by decreeing a distribution amongst the several persons entitled, and transmitting to Russia the shares of the next of kin resident there, I am unable to comprehend."

With all due deference to the (generally) high authority of Lord Westbury, we must say that in this case we find it opposed to higher authority, as well as the general practice of our Courts, and we are not aware of any British authority which can be cited in support of it. His Lordship (followed in this respect by the Russian Memorandum) seems to have regarded it as a necessary consequence of the admitted principle that the succession to moveable property is regulated by the law of the domicil, that all such property must therefore be handed over to the executors designated by that law, in order to be brought together in the country of the domicil, and adjudicated upon in case of contention by the Courts of that country only. But such a consequence has not heretofore been regarded by the Courts of this country as following from that principle, and, as was pointed out by Lord Chelmsford, its universal adoption might lead in many cases to very unjust and inconvenient results. The difficulty of receiving evidence of the law of the domicil, and of applying and acting upon that law is, in such cases no greater than in others of still more frequent occurrence, in which contracts which have been made or rights which have been acquired under the law of one country (and which are therefore governed by that law) afterwards become the subject of litigation before the Courts of another country in which a different law prevails. The comity of nations in all such cases requires that the Court in which the contest arises should ascertain the foreign law to the best of its power, and should adjudicate to the best of its power according thereto; but not that it should refuse cognizance of the cause, and remit the parties to litigate it before any foreign Court.

---

* Preston v. Viscount Melville, 8 Cl. and Fin., 12.

† Enohin and others v. Wylie and others, 10 House of Lords Reports, pp. 18 and 19.

‡ Ibid., pp. 23 and 24.

We think, therefore, that nothing has been done in the case of Sir James Wylie's succession to justify the remonstrance of the Russian Government, or to render necessary any new Convention in order to prevent the recurrence of similar cases.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 178.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 30.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, December 29, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying note from the Russian Minister at this Court containing further observations respecting the case of the will of the late Sir James Wylie in reply to a Memorandum which was transmitted to his Excellency on the 2nd instant, founded on our Report of the 29th ultimo, and to request that we would furnish your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer on Baron Brunnow's note.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further observations of Baron Brunnow do not appear to us to require any reply from your Lordship.

Upon the abstract question whether it would be convenient for the tribunals of the country in which any question depending upon foreign law (whether by reason of domicil, in cases of succession, or otherwise) is litigated, to decline jurisdiction, opinions may possibly differ.

If, on the one hand, there is (as Baron Brunnow suggests) some serious risk of an erroneous interpretation of the foreign law by those tribunals, it is (on the other hand) very difficult to see how complete justice could in many cases be administered and fraud prevented, if the courts of the country in which the property is actually situate, and in which the persons bound to administer it according to foreign law also reside, were to decline jurisdiction: for those Courts could not practically compel such persons to transfer themselves, or to remove the property, to the foreign country, in order to litigate all questions of title there; and the Courts of the foreign country would generally be unable adequately to protect the rights of those interested, while the property itself and the persons having control over it were beyond their own jurisdiction. But without entering into the question how far a system of jurisprudence might be established which might overcome these difficulties consistently with the principle on which the Russian Minister relies, it is sufficient to repeat our former statement that no such general rule has yet been established so as to be binding upon all nations, and that a different rule, in fact, prevails in the Courts of this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Salvador.

No. 179.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, July 28, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 20th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Sonsonate, inclosing a correspondence which has passed between him and the Minister for Foreign Affairs of the Republic of Salvador relative to a Decree issued by the Government of that country relative to the mode of paying certain Government duties, by which Decree Mr. Joseph Kerferd, a British subject, will be a heavy loser; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the view taken by Her Majesty's Consul at Sonsonate of this proceeding by the Government of Salvador is, upon general principles of international and public law, substantially correct.

Your Lordship would probably, in any instruction which you may think proper to send to Her Majesty's Consul, direct him to insist principally upon the point that the Government of Salvador can have no right to violate what I understand to be the express provisions of the existing law of the 18th February, 1841 (and on the faith of which the subjects of a foreign State have lent money to the Government of Salvador), to the great detriment of these subjects, without notice to them or their Governments and without their consent.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Saxony.

Vol 5

No. 180.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 24.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, April 20, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Dresden (No. 12), requesting to be informed as to the nationality of a child of foreign parents born on board a British vessel, and of a child born without the British dominions, of foreigners naturalized as British subjects; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion upon the two points raised.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

1. That I am of opinion that a child of foreign parents born on board one of Her Majesty's ships of war would be a British subject wherever the ship might be; and that a child born on board a British merchant or private unprivileged vessel on the high seas would also be entitled to be considered a British subject. I think it is more doubtful whether such a child born on board such a vessel in the port or waters of a foreign State would be entitled to be considered as a British subject.

1865

2. I am of opinion that a child born without the British dominions of foreign parents, naturalized as British subjects, would be entitled to be considered as a British subject with reference to all other States but that to which his parents owed an original allegiance, unless indeed that State has, by its own law, allowed its subject to divest himself of his allegiance.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Siam.

No. 181.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 27, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch (No. 25) from Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok, inclosing copies of a correspondence with the French Consul at that port, respecting the course of proceeding to be adopted in the British Consular Court, in a case where a French subject has a complaint to prefer against a British subject; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok is quite right in his position, that the foreign subject who is the plaintiff in an action or suit in a British Consular Court must submit himself to the laws and the procedure which prevail in that Court; and we think that his conduct, on this particular occasion, has been in every respect proper. If he was called upon to exercise jurisdiction over an English subject, he would only do so according to English law; and he could not accept the statement of the French Consul as a substitute for the sworn accusation of the aggrieved person, in any case in which an information upon oath is required by English law, as generally administered in his Court.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 182.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received August 26.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, August 25, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers, a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Consul at Bangkok (No. 30, June 27), giving explanations respecting the case of Mong Shuay Gan v. the Chief of Chiengmai, which formed the subject of my Report of the 2nd December last; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take the same into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration and have the honour to report—

That I must, in the first place, observe that I do not find in these papers any answer from Captain Burn as to the charge of having bribed or abetted the bribing of the Chief Judge of the Court, though I perceive that your Lordship (see letter of January 13) directed that Sir C. Wood should be moved to request Captain Burn to answer this serious charge; and it is remarkable that Mr. Consul Knox (p. 70) who, in some degree (but in my opinion most inadequately), defends the conduct of Captain Burn in this respect, is, nevertheless, obliged to add that the documents which distinctly prove that the bribes were given "are not creditable to Captain Burn."

In the next place, after a most careful perusal of Mr. Knox's Report, and a reperusal of the former documents, I am unable to arrive at any other conclusion upon the main point, namely, the exercise of the influence of the Consul to obtain what was practically a reversal of a sentence given in favour of Mong Shuay Gan, than that such influence was exercised, and that such a result was obtained. I think the distinction which Mr. Knox attempts to establish between a judicial arrangement and a judicial sentence, practically, and with reference to the circumstances of this case, nugatory. It may be, as I had the honour to observe before, that in no other way than by such interference as is complained of in this case can justice be obtained from the Courts of Justice in Siam; but the expedient is obviously, as the present case itself shows, most objectionable. As Mr. Knox concludes his despatch by a statement that a compromise has been effected between Captain Burn and Mr. Johnstone, it seems unnecessary to add any further observations on the subject of this and my former Report.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Spain.

No. 183.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 4.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 4, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence, of which a list was inclosed, regarding the case of the British vessel "Mermaid," injured by shots from the Spanish fort at Ceuta; and Mr. Layard was to request that I would take these papers into my consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government are called upon to take in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not of opinion that any advantage would accrue from another examination (according to the suggestion of Sir J. Crampton, No. 279, December 21) of the English witnesses, the master and crew of the "Mermaid." They have already been examined several times, and some discrepancies in the different statements of the captain have already been seized upon by the Spanish authorities to discredit his story altogether. Such discrepancies frequently occur in the examination of seamen, and it would be extremely unjust on that account to draw a conclusion of the general incredibility of their statement.

There are two principal questions in this case: the first, as to whether the shot of the fortress hit the "Mermaid," and caused her to sink; the second, as to when and where the British ensign was hoisted.

With respect to the first question, I think it right (after a perusal of these papers, including, according to the best of my ability, the untranslated Spanish depositions) to express my decided opinion that there can be no reasonable doubt whatever that the question whether the "Mermaid" did or did not sink in consequence of the shot from the fort must be determined in the affirmative by any person of a judicial mind. If the "Mermaid" did not sink in consequence of this shot, which it is admitted was fired at her, she must have been wilfully destroyed by her crew.

This alternative appears to me to be of the very grossest improbability; the whole res gesta is opposed to it, and there is not a circumstance of a feather's weight in the balance of evidence to support such an incredible conclusion.

I may here observe that I see no material inconsistency in the different statements of the captain: nor can I agree with Señor Llorente that the statement of the captain of this small merchant-vessel, that he did not, when the vessel was hit, make for the shore because he was afraid of being fired at again, is at all improbable: he says in his deposition (page 15), as I understand it, that after he had been fired at the third time he was (not unnaturally, surely) afraid of being fired at again.

1865

It is to be remembered that, according to his own statement, the ensign had been hoisted before the third shot.

Then, as to his two statements, that the vessel went down at once after the shot, and that she went on a few miles before she sunk; the discrepancy is really immaterial.

As to the depositions of the men on shore, as to what they observed, or what a particular officer observed, or thought he observed, through a telescope, such evidence can have very little weight against the direct evidence of the master and crew on board the vessel at the time.

I must repeat that no credible motive has been, or I think can be assigned for the wilful destruction of the vessel, laden with cargo, in no distress, in the direct course of her legitimate voyage. It does not even appear whether or no she was insured, or to what extent; but if she were, it would be still, in the particular circumstances of this case, a monstrous inference that she had been scuttled by her master and crew.

If the determination, therefore, of this question ought to close the case, I have no hesitation in expressing my opinion that it is closed in favour of the "Mermaid," and against the Spanish Government.

But as to the other part of the case, namely, the time and place of hoisting the British ensign, there seems to be more legitimate room for doubt.

My conclusion from the evidence of the master alone would be, that the ensign was placed at three different times in three different parts of the ship: first, flying at the peak when off Europa Point; secondly, when the halyards were carried away on the weather or port main rigging (the vessel being then under a port helm), about 18 feet above the deck; thirdly,* after the vessel had come head to wind, and after she had been struck on her starboard bow, about the water-line, and after she had wore round, the ensign was shifted into the starboard main rigging, not before she wore round, as Governor Codrington states (Inclosure 1 in No. 248. See Declaration of Master, October 22, Inclosure 2 in No. 248 of Sir J. Crampton).

How soon after the vessel wore round I think doubtful. It is probable that the firing ceased as soon as the flag was seen at Ceuta. In all probability the regulations of the fort as to firing referred to by Mr. Dunlop Graham (October 25, 1864) were intended to be observed, and no shot was aimed to hit the hull of the vessel; but partly owing to the manœuvre of the vessel at the moment of firing, and partly, perhaps chiefly, to the want of skill in the cannoneer, the second shot, intended to go through the rigging, hit the vessel.

I think that, on the present evidence, the "Mermaid" ought to receive compensation from the Spanish Government; but while I think that Her Majesty's Government should urge this claim on the Spanish Government, I do not advise Her Majesty's Government to refuse to abide by the finding of a fairly composed Mixed Commission.

It is hardly necessary to say that the act of the authorities at Ceuta in exacting 600 reals from these unfortunate men for the cost of their maintenance at Ceuta will, of course, be repudiated by the Spanish Government.

As to the general question, there seems to be every reason why the practice of requiring the national ensign to be hoisted by vessels passing Gibraltar and by the Spanish ports should be discontinued, subject always, however, to the three limitations in Señor Llorente's letter (December 7, in Sir J. Crampton's No. 273) which seem to me very proper, namely, first, as to time of war; secondly, as to meeting in common waters a squadron with the Admiralty flag; and, thirdly, as to Harbour or Port Regulations.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* In the printed accounts in the newspaper (2 Admiralty letter, No. 4, 1864), the facts of which I presume the master supplied, it is stated as follows:—"He had hardly got his ship round, when a third gun was fired, the ball passing over the master's head, who was at the tiller, and striking the water sixteen or eighteen feet from the lee-quarter. As soon as the men had finished trimming sails, after the vessel was on the starboard tack, the master directed two sailors to remove the colours from the port to the starboard main rigging, which on the vessel's new course was to windward, and the side nearest the land. The two men displaying the colours in the main rigging appear to have been seen from the battery, as no other shots were fired."

No. 184.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 25.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 24, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith a letter dated the 17th instant, from Mr. J. S. Leigh, stating the circumstances connected with an alleged fraud in a shipment of cochineal on board the vessel "Candida," under which he requests to be furnished with a letter of introduction to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, with the view of stating his case to the Spanish Minister of Grace; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this letter, together with the former papers on the subject, into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion whether such a letter as Mr. Leigh desires can properly be given to him.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as Sir J. Crampton has been directed by your Lordship to introduce Captain Heathcote, the other party in this litigation, to the Spanish Minister, I think that he should be instructed to procure a simple audience for Mr. Leigh from the same Minister, through the medium of a letter as carefully guarded and as cautiously expressed as his discretion may suggest.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 185.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from the Bishop of Gibraltar, together with a copy of his Letters Patent, and other papers* bearing on the question as to whether Tangier and Cadiz are within his episcopal jurisdiction; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the subject.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th of January ultimo, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 18th January, inclosing, for our consideration, papers respecting the extent of the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Gibraltar in foreign countries, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the accompanying correspondence which passed in the year 1850, respecting a claim advanced by the predecessor of the present Prelate to exercise spiritual control over the British congregation in Rome; a point which we should observe was at that time reported on by the Law Officers of the Crown.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, if the words "episcopal jurisdiction" are to be understood in their strict and proper sense, we think that the Bishop of Gibraltar has no such jurisdiction, except in the City of Gibraltar and the Island of Malta, and their dependencies. The limits of his diocese or see are, by the operative part of the Letters-Patent creating it, expressly so defined. And, we think, the reason of this is plain, viz., because Her Majesty had no power to grant any jurisdiction in the territories of foreign Princes, except such as she derived from the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, or from the Jerusalem Bishopric Act (5 and 6 Vict., cap. 6); neither of which statutes would have enabled her to confer upon a Bishop of Malta or Gibraltar any legal authority beyond the limits of British territory. It is in this sense that we understand the Report of the Law Officers in 1850, with respect to the English chapel at Rome.

But if the question be whether it was intended by the Crown, when the See of Gibraltar was erected, that the Bishops of Gibraltar should exercise, at Cadiz and Tangier, that customary authority which had been previously exercised by the Bishops of London over British chapels, and the clergy ministering in them, upon the Continent of Europe, our answer is, that such appears to us to have been the wish and intention of the Crown.

---

* Bishop of Gibraltar, November 24; Foreign Office Memorandum, December 20; to Colonial Office, December 31, 1864; Colonial Office, January 10, 1865.

1865

The submission of English congregations abroad to that authority is, and has always been, purely voluntary. We think it is apparent, both from the general tenor of the proposal of the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishop of London, recited in the Letters-Patent by which the See of Gibraltar was erected, and of Lord Aberdeen's Circular (which was directed, among others, to the British Consuls at Cadiz and Tangier), that the words "the islands and countries situated in and around the Mediterranean Sea" ought not to be taken in so narrow a sense as to exclude therefrom the countries situate on either side of the Straits of Gibraltar.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 186.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 4.)

Doctors' Commons, April 3, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 28th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying note, dated the 10th ultimo, and its inclosure, from M. Comyn, the Spanish Minister at this Court, protesting against the condemnation by the British and Spanish Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone of the Spanish ship "America," on a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade, and claiming reparation from Her Majesty's Government for the owners of the "America" on account of the losses sustained by them in consequence of the condemnation of their vessel. A despatch and its inclosure from the Acting British Judge at Sierra Leone (No. 8, Spain, September 17, 1864), reporting the particulars of the trial and condemnation of the "America," was also inclosed; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the Spanish Minister's note.

With regard to the objection taken by the Spanish Minister to the jurisdiction of the Court, in consequence of judgment not having been pronounced within the period of two months as stipulated by the provisions of Article III of Annex B to the Treaty of 1835, between this country and Spain, for the suppression of the Slave Trade, Mr. Layard was pleased to transmit the volumes containing the cases referred to by the British Arbitrator, in his judgment, as bearing upon the objection taken by the Spanish Minister in this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That after a careful perusal of all the papers in this case I am of opinion that an answer should be returned to the Spanish Minister to the following effect:—That your Lordship agrees with that portion of the Spanish Minister's letter which states that, after a full trial of all the circumstances before a properly constituted tribunal, to call upon Her Majesty's Government to consider the force of arguments and proofs which had been unsuccessfully urged by the claimant before the Judge, "would be equivalent to instituting a new trial, or making an appeal, which the Treaty of 1835 does not admit."

That your Lordship, indeed, thinks that such a course of proceeding would rob the Treaty of much of its efficacy, and ought not, except in very extraordinary circumstances, to be resorted to; and that certainly no such circumstances exist in the present case. On the contrary, an attentive consideration of all the facts brought forward at the trial seems to lead to the judicial conclusion that, so far as the merits of the case are concerned, the vessel was rightly condemned.

It is to be remembered that Article X of the Treaty enumerates nine classes or categories of things relating to equipment, which, being found on board a vessel, shall raise the legal presumption that she is a slaver; and the Article provides that "any one or more of these several circumstances, if proved, shall be considered as primâ facie evidence of the actual employment of the vessel in the Slave Trade, and the vessel shall thereupon be condemned and declared lawful prize, unless satisfactory evidence upon the part of the master or owners shall establish that such vessel was, at the time of her detention or capture, employed in some legal pursuit."

Now, not to dwell on various other circumstances which also had their due weight with the Judges, there was found on board this vessel a large quantity of rough rice. The subject of the ninth category in the Treaty is, "an extraordinary quantity of rice, &c., such rice, &c., not being entered on the manifest as part of the cargo for trade." Of this rice no mention whatever was made in the manifest; for the presence of the rice and the absence of the manifest the excuses were equally unsatisfactory.

It was said that the rice was not fit for immediate use, and that the manifest was refused at the place where the rice was put on board; but neither the manifest nor any copy of it, which it was alleged had been tendered and refused, was ever produced before the Court, and it was clear both that the rice might have been made fit for use by the use of the rudest materials in the hands of the simplest native, and also that at the place where the slaves were to have been put on board, a more elaborate machinery might have existed for the purpose of rendering it immediately fit for consumption. Though this appears to have been a prominent feature in the case, there are many others to which reference is not now made, because it seems to be admitted that neither the Spanish nor the British Governments are Courts of Appeal from sentences upon the merits of the cases properly tried before the tribunals constituted by the Treaty. The words of the Treaty (Article III of Annex B) are express:—"These Courts shall adjudge definitively and without appeal all questions which shall arise out of the capture and detention of these vessels."

Passing therefore from the consideration of the merits of the case, the formal technical objections raised by his Excellency remain to be noticed.

His Excellency contends, first, that the capture of the "America" was unlawful, on the ground that cruizers are not allowed to make more than one examination of a vessel suspected to be a slaver; and this position is founded upon the language of the third rule in the IVth Article of the Treaty, which provides, among other things, that "if it appears from the search that the papers of the vessel are in regular order, and that it is employed on licit objects, the officer shall enter in the log-book of the vessel that the search has been made in pursuance of the aforesaid special orders, and the vessel shall be left at liberty to pursue its voyage."

His Excellency contends that by this provision the British officer having once searched the "America," and allowed her to pursue her voyage, was not at liberty in any circumstances to visit her again and detain her. Your Lordship is unable to see the force of this argument: it appears to be neither warranted by the language of the Treaty, nor founded in reason, nor supported by analogy. There are no words which directly prohibit the making of a second search; and while, on the one hand, it could not have been, upon any principle of reason, intended that if subsequent suspicion, from whatever circumstances, arose that the vessel was a slaver, she should be allowed to escape; on the other hand, such second search and consequent detention would be made at the risk of costs and damages to the Government of the captor (under Article VI), should he fail in establishing the guilt of the vessel. Indeed, the judgment in this very case, assuming it, as we are bound to do, to be correct upon the merits, shows that the narrow construction of the Treaty contended for might defeat its object.

To this construction analogy is equally adverse. The captor, in time of war, not unfrequently visits and detains upon a second occasion the vessel which, on a former and more imperfect examination, he had released. He does so, as the captor of the slaver does, at the risk of costs and damages. This argument was, indeed, not advanced at the hearing by the legal agent of the claimant, and it is one in which Her Majesty's Government cannot concur.

The other objection, also of a formal and technical character, urged by his Excellency, is founded upon the language of the IIIrd Article of Annex B of the Treaty, which provides that the final sentence shall not "in any case be delayed beyond the period of two months," and "that as far as may be practicable" it shall be decided within twenty days. The sentence which condemned the "America" was passed eleven days after the two months, therefore his Excellency says the Court had no jurisdiction. But this position rests, in the first place, on a confusion of two distinct principles of jurisprudence or rules of law: the rule of law which directs and that which prohibits the jurisdiction of a tribunal. The rule in question is a directory, not a prohibitory, law. The matter itself, namely, the question whether the vessel be a slaver or not, is always subject to the jurisdiction, properly speaking, of the Court. Though the delay which exceeds the prescribed term may (unless accounted for by unavoidable necessity, which must be considered in all human laws) be such as to give just ground for remonstrance from either the Spanish or British Government, leading, if the circumstances require it, to the removal of the offending Judge.

This would be the true remedy for the evil complained of, which is distinct, in kind, from that of the Court exercising jurisdiction over a matter like that of murder, for instance, never subject to its jurisdiction.

1865

An irregularity of procedure and a nullity of jurisdiction are very different things. Moreover, and independently of this principle of jurisprudence, the Treaty must be construed, according to well-known principles, liberally and as a contract of good faith between the Contracting Parties, so as to further, not defeat, the end in view, namely, the suppression of the Slave Trade; and the words, "the proceedings of these Courts shall take place as summarily as possible," which precede the limitations of twenty days and two months, indicate the true intention of the parties to the contract, which never could have been, that if a Judge, or a necessary witness became ill, or a proctor, either, on the one hand, deserted his client, or, on the other, wilfully delayed the proceedings of the cause till two months and one second had elapsed, that the Court, from which there is no appeal, should be obliged either to do an injustice or should cease to have jurisdiction, and let the slaver go free.

In accordance with the view which is here taken was that of Her Majesty's Government in the case of the "Fabiana" in 1824 (following the advice of my predecessor in office); the "Conchita," 1835 (in December), a few months after the conclusion of the present Treaty (28th June, 1835); and in the "Rosarita," February 1836, where the point was directly raised and overruled. But in the other cases, especially the "Fabiana," the difference between an irregular act and one which deprives the Court of power to adjudicate is established. The delay in this case appears to have arisen from wholly unavoidable causes—a doubt about the authority of the Spanish Judge, the illness of one of the Surveyors, the necessity of unpacking the rice in bad weather, and of measuring every gallon of water.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 187.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 5, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 10th February respecting the Bishop of Gibraltar's episcopal jurisdiction, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Bishop, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to make thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think some confusion may have arisen from a misunderstanding of the term "jurisdiction." That term carries with it in its legal sense a power of carrying into effect the decree or order of the Judge, by coercive measures if necessary ("cui jurisdictio data est, ei quoque concessa esse videntur sine quibus jurisdictio explicari non potest." Dig. 1, 2, t. 1, 2). Such jurisdiction the Crown has no power to give in foreign States without their permission.

It would be a mistake to suppose that the Bishop of London possesses any such jurisdiction, even "by custom," in places out of Her Majesty's dominions. The words "customary jurisdiction" can only import that the Crown had desired the Bishop of London to perform the functions of his episcopal office over such British subjects professing the religion of the Church of England as might be in certain foreign places, and had desired those subjects to recognize his episcopal authority and character. The word "jurisdiction" must of necessity be understood, therefore, in a popular sense, of the performance of episcopal functions in relation to those who voluntarily (though out of a sense of duty to their Church and their Sovereign) submit themselves to such authority. The language of the Bishop of Gibraltar's Patent in its narrative part refers to Her Majesty's subjects resident in Gibraltar, Malta, and "in divers places within the island and countries situated in and around the Mediterranean Sea;" and we think that it does result, both from this preamble and from a consideration of the Circular of Lord Aberdeen of October 20, 1840, and of all the circumstances connected with the history of the foundation of the see, that it was the intention of the Crown that the moral support of Her Majesty's Government should be given to the exercise of spiritual functions by the Bishop of Gibraltar over those of Her Majesty's subjects in the countries washed by the Mediterranean and on both sides of the Straits of Gibraltar, who, previously to the institution of this see, were by custom and by the desire of the Crown subject to the spiritual superintendence of the Bishop of London. This arrangement was made with the full and express consent of the then Bishop of London; and we have no reason to doubt that it is continued with the approbation of the present Prelate of that see.

We see no reason why the Bishop of Gibraltar should not be apprised (if your Lordship should so think fit) that it has not been, and is not, the intention of Her Majesty's Government (as his Lordship appears somewhat too hastily to have supposed) to "discourage" or "put difficulties in the way" of his discharging his episcopal functions over the particular congregations to whom his letter refers; but that Her Majesty's Government desire to inform his Lordship that they cannot do more than afford to him (having due regard to the circumstances of any particular case as to which any question may arise) such moral support as was contemplated by the Circular of Lord Aberdeen. It must be for the Bishop of Gibraltar to consider whether his object might in any respect be furthered by a communication with the Bishop of London, and by a joint action with his Lordship in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 188.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, April 20, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 12th instant, from the Colonial Office, relative to the claim put forward by the owner of the British schooner "I O U" against the Spanish Government, in consequence of the seizure of that vessel by the Spanish naval forces at San Domingo for an alleged violation of blockade. A copy of the notice relative to the blockade of San Domingo issued by the Governor of Turks Islands, and referred to in the letter from the Colonial Office, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether this is a case which calls for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I do not think that this is a case which necessarily calls for interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government. The Spanish blockade was recognized by Her Majesty, and the question of its sufficiency is one which properly should be tried in the Prize Court of the belligerent. If, indeed, from any circumstances this investigation has become now impossible, it would, I think, be proper that the claim of the owner of the "I O U" should be submitted to the consideration of the Spanish Government through the intervention of Her Majesty's Government.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 189.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 5, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 17th of August last, respecting the claim of Mrs. Good for compensation for the death of her son, who was killed by a shot from the Spanish soldiery in August 1863, whilst taking refuge in the house of the British Vice-Consul at Puerto Plata, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 40, March 28), inclosing the reply to his representation which he has received from the Spanish Government, declining to award any compensation, on the ground that it is impossible to ascertain whether the shot which struck George Good was fired by the Spanish troops or by the Dominican insurgents.

No. 188*.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 4, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated 17th March ultimo, from Lord Howden, formerly Her Majesty's Minister in Spain, calling attention to an alleged intended alteration of a Spanish judicial procedure entitled the "Fuero de Estrangeria," under which British subjects have had the right to seek justice in Spain. A despatch from Sir J. Crampton, the present Minister at Madrid, to whom Lord Howden's statement was referred, explaining how the matter stands, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would report to your Lordship my opinion whether there is any call for action on the part of Her Majesty's Government in this matter in its present stage. For my information two volumes of correspondence relating to the "Fuero de Estrangeria" was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report:—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Government are not called upon in the present state of things to take any action in this matter. And here, perhaps, my Report should end, but as the question is one of importance, and which has been treated as such in the two volumes of despatches submitted to me, I have thought it right to make the following additional observations:—

The practical importance of this question really depends upon the consideration whether Spanish justice be best administered in the case of British subjects by the Military or the Civil Judges. At first sight, indeed, it would appear that the question must almost necessarily be answered, for obvious reasons, in favour of the civil jurisdiction; but the great experience and authority of Lord Howden is opposed to this opinion, and I collect from the despatch of Her Majesty's present Representative at Madrid that he agrees with Lord Howden. At the same time it is to be observed that the statement of Señor Arguelles, in whose counsel he places, no doubt justly, great confidence, leads to the opposite conclusion.

I gather from the opinion of that learned and eminent person that with respect to various matters this privilege of the "Fuero de Estrangeria" has already been withdrawn from British subjects; and that with respect to those matters which are still subject to it, it is proposed not to suppress but to administer the "Fuero" by a particular Civil Judge, to be selected, as I understand, by the Crown of Spain from the ordinary Judges of Common Law, and from that Judge there is to be an appeal, whereas the sentence of the present Tribunal is final.

Two questions seem to arise: first, whether it is expedient that Her Majesty's Government should remonstrate against any alterations; and secondly, to what extent that remonstrance can be carried.

With respect to the first question I must repeat that it is one to be decided by practical knowledge of the administration of Spanish law in the ordinary Civil Tribunals. The language of Lord Howden upon this point is certainly most remarkable:—"A vehement desire," his Lordship says, "to be tried by Military Tribunals, instead of ordinary Civil ones, seems strange to English ears; but no general theory will hold good against the local experience of celerity, cheapness, publicity, and comparative uprightness, on one side, and every sort of delay, expense, mystery, and venality, on the other." Perhaps, however, the state of things may be remedied by the general reform of the law which appears now to be contemplated.

With respect to the second question I think that the interference of Her Majesty's Government would probably be limited to a remonstrance, and that it could not reasonably deny the right of the Government of Spain to include in a great measure for the reformation of the law, that part of it which relates to the administration of justice between British subjects resident in Spain, more especially if that peculiar Tribunal to which, by Treaty stipulations and long usage, they may be considered entitled, be preserved to them in substance, though under a different form and appellation. Lord Howden himself (in his last despatch, No. 53, Madrid, 19th February, 1858), observes, "To be fair and look practically at things as they are, it seems impossible to expect, or to ask, that Spain can allow a Tribunal to be retained merely for the convenience or preference of foreigners, while it is by law suppressed for their own subjects."

I must observe in conclusion that the whole subject of the privileges of foreigners in Spain concerns all foreign States; but that it appears from the papers in the volumes which accompany the case, that the battle of this particular question is now fought by England almost single-handed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit the three accompanying volumes in which the papers are marked that refer to this case, and to request that I would take the inclosed correspondence into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the course which should now be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That looking back to the history of the whole case, it is difficult to deny the possibility of the fact under cover of which the Spanish Government now refuse compensation in this case. It cannot, I think, be positively asserted that the shot which caused the death of Good was certainly fired by a Spanish soldier, though I have little doubt that such was the case. I am, therefore, afraid that no other course is now open to Her Majesty's Government than to express their regret that when it is admitted to be doubtful whether the death of a subject of a State in alliance and amity with Spain was not caused by the firing of Spanish soldiers upon the house of the Consul of that State, the Spanish Government should not have been anxious to award some compensation to the widowed mother of the person so killed.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 190.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 17.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 16, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 10th instant, and its inclosure, from the Colonial Office, respecting the claim of Mr. Andrew Barclay against the Spanish Government for the seizure of his vessels the "Dart" and "Scat" at San Domingo.

A despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires in Haiti (No. 1) relating to the capture of the "Dart" was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was to acquaint me that beyond the papers therewith transmitted no information has been received at the Foreign Office respecting the capture of these vessels; and he was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it would seem to be most probable, indeed almost admitted by their owner, that these vessels were engaged in running the blockade at San Domingo during the recent war between Spain and the Dominicans, and captured in the attempt by the Spanish forces; and if so I see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government, and I advise that an answer to this effect be returned to Mr. Barclay.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 191.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 18.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, May 17, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 19th December last upon the case of the "Eliza," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter dated the 9th instant, with its inclosure, from the Colonial Office, stating that Mr. Murray, the owner of the vessel in question, claims 490*l.* on account of her seizure by the Spanish authorities; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether application may be made to the Spanish Government for the payment of the amount claimed by Mr. Murray. The previous correspondence was inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I think an application should be made to the Spanish Government for demurrage compensation to the owner of the "Eliza." I see that this is estimated for 160 days at 160*l.* I do not know whether this amount be correct or not. It seems excessive for a vessel of six tons. The amount of demand for compensation to the three men appears to me very extravagant; but some small sum might be reasonably asked for on this account also. It is of course to be recollected that the Spanish Government may have a defence to offer for the detention of this vessel, for which at present there appears to be no justification.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 192.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 13.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 13, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, with reference to the Report of Her Majesty's Advocate-General of the 4th of January last, and to previous correspondence, regarding the injuries done to various British vessels by shots fired from the Spanish forts of Tarifa and Ceuta, a despatch, and its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid, together with three volumes, as well as further correspondence, of which a list was inclosed, upon this subject; and Mr. Layard was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the abolition, by the concurrence of Her Majesty's Government with that of Spain, of the custom which has too long prevailed of firing on merchant-vessels not showing their colours within a certain distance of forts in the Straits of Gibraltar is a subject of much satisfaction. That with respect to the case of the "Mermaid," we think Her Majesty's Government justified in acting upon the statement of her captain and crew (against whom the imputation of scuttling the vessel appears wholly unwarranted), to the effect that after the warning shot the British flag was hoisted, though probably not seen from the fort, whereupon a shot was wrongfully fired from the fort which sank the vessel. This affords a clear case for compensation, on which we think that Her Majesty's Government may properly insist, and the proposition to refer it to a Mixed Commission or the arbitration of a friendly Power appears to us a reasonable one. We are not sufficiently informed by the papers relating to the case of the "Mountaineer" of the precise circumstances under which that vessel was fired at to enable us to say more than that we concur in the suggestion that if a Mixed Commission were appointed to investigate the case of the "Mermaid," that of the "Mountaineer," and the question whether compensation should be paid to the persons who have suffered by the death of Hocken, might also be referred to it. It affords matter of regret and of some surprise (considering the reception which it is said to have before met with) that M. de Castro should, in his letter to Mr. West of the 12th August, 1865, peremptorily decline the proposition of a Mixed Commission.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

SPAIN.

No. 191*.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 24.)

My Lord,

Lincoln's Inn, July 22, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (Nos. 91 and 95), reporting upon the existing state of the law in Spain, called the "Fuere de Estrangeria," as regards the privileges of foreigners, as well as upon the alleged intention of the Spanish Government to alter that law.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that, for convenience of reference, he was also to transmit to us the previous papers upon this subject, as marked in the margin,* comprising a Report from Her Majesty's Advocate-General, to whom the matter was referred, together with two volumes, in which the papers referred to in Sir John Crampton's despatches have been marked, accompanied by a copy of the Consular Convention which was concluded between France and Spain in 1862.† And to request that we would take all these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, after a mature consideration of the papers submitted to us, we are led substantially to the same conclusions as those which are expressed in the despatch of Her Majesty's Representative at Madrid; namely, first, "that the interests of Her Majesty's subjects would not be seriously affected by the passage of the proposed law;" and, secondly, we do not think that it would be proper or expedient that Her Majesty's Government should offer a resistance to the improvement of the Spanish Municipal law on account of the peculiar privileges of Her Majesty's subjects in that country. Moreover, we are of opinion that the alteration proposed would not be a violation of the Treaty engagements upon this subject of Spain with this country, and that the resistance of Her Majesty's Government, if offered, could not in the end be effectively maintained.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Lord Howden, March 17; to Sir J. Crampton, No. 43, March 20; Sir J. Crampton, No. 48, April 5; Queen's Advocate, May 4, 1865. Two volumes.

† Earl Cowley, No. 457, April 4, 1862.

1865

No. 193.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received September 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, September 14, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Madrid (No. 44), respecting a demand which has been made by the Spanish authorities at Cadiz to the Acting British Consul at that place for the surrender of the mate of a British vessel, the "Evelyn," who is accused of having inflicted personal injury on one of the crew, a Spaniard, on the high seas; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. West in the matter. A further despatch and its inclosures from Mr. West upon the same subject was also inclosed (No. 54).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that this Spaniard was one of the crew of a British vessel and wounded by another of the crew while on board this vessel on the high seas. I am of opinion that this offence, in these circumstances, was not properly cognizable by the Spanish tribunal, and that the captain was justified in refusing to deliver up the person alleged to have been guilty of the offence. The offence was not committed, it is to be carefully observed, in a Spanish port, but within a place subject to the jurisdiction of Her Majesty. Of course, if the Spanish Government desired it, proper measures should be taken for causing the matter to be investigated before the British tribunal. I humbly think that instructions to this effect should be sent to Mr. West.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 194.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 24.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 24, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st instant, stating that the pressure of time under which your Lordship was obliged to request my opinion on the state of things arising out of the rupture between Chile and Spain, as reported in the despatches received on the 16th instant from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires and Consul-General in the former country, coupled with the fact that many of the papers were not accompanied with translations, had induced your Lordship to direct him (Mr. Hammond) to send back to me for more leisurely perusal the various despatches which were transmitted to me with his letter of the 16th (Nos. 31 to 42); and he was to request me to furnish your Lordship with any further observations which may occur to me on the matters treated in them.

Mr. Hammond was specifically to call my attention to the answer returned by Mr. Thomson, as reported in his despatch No. 37, in regard to the intention announced by the Chilean Government of issuing letters of marque; and to the Memorial of the Commercial body and the replies of the Diplomatic body, inclosed in his despatch No. 38.

Mr. Hammond at the same time inclosed a copy of the instruction sent to Mr. Thomson (No. 2) after the receipt of my Report of the 17th instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have again taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That my last Report was, owing to the pressure of time, principally concerned with the course which Her Majesty's Government ought to pursue with reference to the blockade proclaimed by the Spanish Admiral; and I have now the honour to offer some additional observations upon the general subject of these papers, and upon the points to which my attention is more particularly drawn.

The more the grounds alleged by Spain for this war upon Chile are considered, the more unjust, unusual, and frivolous they appear; charges which the particular circumstances in which this war has been declared tend greatly to aggravate.

Chile had recently made explanations which completely satisfied the Representative of Spain then accredited to her; and if it be true that this Representative exceeded the powers conferred on him, and was disobedient to his instructions, it is most justly said by Chile that she could not be aware of that fact, and certainly she was, on account of it, not the less but the more entitled to the observance, on the part of Spain, of the ordinary international usages which precede, except in cases of urgent necessity, the declaration of war between two Christian States.

The course pursued by the Spanish Admiral, whose commission it appears allowed him to negotiate, in peremptorily declaring that unless certain propositions (one of which was derogatory to the honour of an independent State) were complied with within a very limited period of time, he would enter upon immediate hostilities with Chile, is a course which could, even assuming the justice of the Spanish complaint, only be warranted by the previous refusal of Chile to entertain or satisfy remonstrances made through the usual channels of diplomacy; whereas the exact reverse had happened in this case: Chile had satisfied the Minister of Spain accredited to her, and, nevertheless, was treated as if she had refused all peaceable means of reconciliation and redress.

These remarks bring me to the consideration of despatch No. 38 (to which my attention is requested by your Lordship), containing the Memorial of the Commercial and the reply of the Diplomatic body at Santiago.

All members of the great community of independent States are of course interested in the observance of international justice and the maintenance of international right; but, in addition to this general interest, they are particularly entitled to expect that their subjects, peaceably and lawfully resident and carrying on legitimate commerce in a foreign State, shall not be subjected, except in cases of extreme urgency, to the severe distress which hostilities, enforced by a sudden blockade, inflict, without at least receiving the ordinary warning which is conveyed by the observance of international usages. This warning is the more due to the neutral resident when the belligerent imposing the blockade alleges reasons for hostilities so manifestly frivolous and unjust as those put forward on this occasion by the Spanish Admiral.

Having made these remarks upon the general character of the war and the peculiar injury which it inflicts upon the neutral States, I turn to the consideration of the manner in which the belligerent is about to exercise his rights, that is, to the consideration of the instructions issued by the Spanish Admiral.

In my former Report I observed that these were favourable to the neutral, and I retain that opinion. In truth, they are much more favourable to neutrals than those which this country and America are in the habit of issuing upon a like occasion. There is, however, one observation of great importance which a reconsideration of them induces me to make.

Directions are given to the Spanish cruizers how to visit and treat neutral vessels. These directions afford no ground for complaint if they are intended to be limited to the objects of visitation, search, and detention; but I perceive there is no mention of the duty of the belligerent to bring the captured property of the neutral into the Court of the Law of Nations, usually termed the Prize Court, in order that a sentence may be passed confirming in favour of the captors, or setting aside in favour of the captured, the act of seizure and detention.

It is the clear duty of the belligerent to furnish such a Court, as it is the clear right of the neutral to have recourse to it.

It may therefore be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should signify in the proper manner, through the proper channels, to the Spanish Government, their expectation that all captured property of the neutral will be submitted to proper adjudication by a properly constituted tribunal.

With respect to the despatch No. 37, and the intended use of privateers by Chile, to which your Lordship also desired my attention to be directed, so far as this question affects the belligerents in this war, I perceive that the Spanish Admiral's instructions contemplate the use of privateers by Chile (No. 9), and contain special orders as to the examination of their papers, directing that if a privateer be without the proper letters of marque ("patente de corso") she is to be treated as a pirate.

As Spain declined to sign the Ist Article of the Declaration of Paris, she has, of course, no right whatever to complain of the use of privateers by Chile, and I much doubt whether she is entitled to insist, as the Spanish Admiral has done in the Article referred to, that letters of marque shall specify the "time and places in which the privateer may make war with the enemy."

With respect to neutral States, assuming that in ordinary cases they would be entitled to object to the use of privateers by Chile, because she has signed the Ist Article of the Declaration of Paris, nevertheless the answer of Chile that she is now at war with a State which has not subscribed that Article appears to me sufficient.

THE OCEANA GROUP PUBLISHERS

1865

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 195.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 30, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch with its inclosures which have been received from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Chile (No. 49), reporting the circumstances connected with the capture of the British vessel "Mattias Cousino" by one of the Spanish vessels of war blockading the Chilean coast; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Mr. Thomson upon this subject, or to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That Mr. Taylour Thomson appears to have pursued upon the whole a judicious course of conduct.

The capture of the "Mattias Cousino" appears upon the statement before me to have been justifiable. She had very recently belonged to a subject of the enemy, not improbably after the declaration of war. The title of the owner was fairly questionable in a Prize Court. She had not her proper papers on board. She was on her way to a blockaded port, and was captured after several shots had been fired to make her bring to by a blockading ship. It certainly was a case which, according to the general principles of international law and the exposition of them given in British Prize Courts, warranted the captor in bringing in the vessel for proper adjudication.

I think it has been the usual practice of captors to hoist the flag of their country upon the captured ship; during the period which elapses between capture and release or adjudication, the vessel is under the jurisdiction of the captor or the captor's Court.

The attempt to set up a Prize Court on board the Admiral's ship is novel, inadmissible, and contrary to the principles of international law which regulate the reciprocal rights and duties of belligerents and neutrals in maritime war.

The neutral has a right to be tried before a properly constituted Court in the country of the captor, with all the forms as well as the substance of justice; he has a right to agents, Counsel, a proper forum, and a proper Appellate Tribunal; the deck of the Admiral's blockading ship contains none of these indispensable requisitions of international justice, upon the presumption of supplying which the belligerent's right to detain the neutral vessel upon the high seas is founded.

It would, of course, be most expedient that the captor should be induced by informal remonstrance and explanation to restore the vessel, but he has a strict right to send her for trial before a proper tribunal.

I would only further add that the question of blockade or no blockade is a matter of mixed fact and law to be tried before the Prize Court; but as I understand this case, the "Mattias Cousino" was seized rather on the suspicion that she was an enemy's vessel than that she was attempting to break the blockade.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 196.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 30.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, November 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 27th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter with its inclosures from the Board of Treasury respecting a vessel called the "Eagle," formerly a Prussian war steamer now lying in the Victoria Docks, and which appears to be adapted for privateering purposes; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether Her Majesty's Government have any right to call upon the owner of that vessel for information as to the purposes for which she is destined.

In obedience to the commands of your Lordship we have perused and considered these papers, and have the honour to report—

That Her Majesty's Government have no legal power or authority to call upon the owner of this vessel for information as to the purposes for which she is destined; but if it is thought desirable to inquire from him whether he is willing to give such information (as has been done in some other cases), we see no objection to that course.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
(In the absence of the Queen's Advocate.)

No. 197.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 1, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to call our special attention to the 9th Article respecting privateers of the instruction sent therewith for Spanish cruizers in the present war with Chile, and to the interpretation or extension stated to be given to that Article of the instruction* by a circular of the Spanish Minister of Marine, ordering the Commanders of Spanish ships to treat as pirates all vessels of which the captain, the officers, and the majority of the crew are not Chileans, or who may not have received their commission direct from the Chilean Government.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would acquaint your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, whether such instructions as are stated to have been issued by the Spanish Minister of Marine, as well as those issued by the Spanish Admiral, are consistent with the law of nations, and therefore to be acquiesced in by foreign Governments, any of whose subjects may render themselves liable to be proceeded against as pirates.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think both these instructions are inconsistent with the law of nations, which has never regarded the enlistment of the subjects of one nation in the war service of another as piracy, and which draws no distinction between commissions given direct by a belligerent Government, and commissions given by persons acting as its agents for that purpose, by its authority.

We think, therefore, that these instructions cannot properly be acquiesced in by foreign Governments, any of whose subjects may, under them, be proceeded against as pirates.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 198.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 1, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 27th instant, and to his letter of the 29th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two notes from the Spanish Minister at this Court, dated the 28th and 29th ultimo, containing particulars relative to certain vessels which are supposed to be fitting out in this country to act as privateers in the war between Chile and Spain.

---

* See the "Times" of November 29, page 12.

1865

And Mr. Hammond was to acquaint us that copies of these notes had been sent to the Home Office and to the Board of Treasury, calling their attention to the statements made by the Spanish Minister; and was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to whether, on the information now sent by M. de Molins, any further, and what, steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government, to prevent a violation of the laws of this country.

And Mr. Hammond was to add that, in accordance with the suggestion contained in our Report of the 27th instant, the Lord Advocate of Scotland had been communicated with in respect to the vessels said to be fitting out in the Clyde.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in order to enable Her Majesty's Government to take any measures of prevention in these cases, it is necessary that some evidence of an illegal purpose or destination of the ships in question should be obtained; and at present no such evidence has been obtained or offered.

We think the proper course will be to inform the Spanish Minister that such evidence is necessary, and that the mere suspicion or belief of the Agents of the Spanish Government (however probable it may appear to be) is insufficient to supply its want; that Her Majesty's Government will direct all the means in their power to be used, for the purpose of obtaining correct information as to these suspected vessels, and evidence of any contemplated violation of the law, if such there should be; and that they will also give prompt attention to any evidence which the Spanish Minister may cause to be laid before them, but that, without some evidence, they cannot prevent the owners of those ships from dealing with their own property in a way which (for aught that now appears) may be perfectly legal; nor have they, at present, any facts on which they can proceed as to the suggested illegal intention to enlist sailors for the war service of the Chilean Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 199.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 1.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 1, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 3rd April last upon a note from the Spanish Minister at this Court, protesting against the condemnation by the Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone of the Spanish ship "America," upon a charge of being equipped for the Slave Trade, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a translation of a further note from the Spanish Minister relating to this case; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the reply which it will be proper to return to the Spanish Minister's application.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, transmitting, together with the former papers, the volumes containing the decisions in the cases of the "Fabiana," the "Conchita," the "Rosarita," and the "Mosca," condemned in the Mixed Commission Court at Sierra Leone.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe the Spanish Government have now abandoned all the objections but one to the lawfulness of this sentence.

That having regard to the reply of the Spanish Government with respect to the objection which they still maintain, and to the present position of this case, it seems to me expedient to enter into a full consideration of the Treaties, of the peculiar character of the tribunals created by them, of the course, practice, and usage by which the provisions of these Treaties have hitherto been carried into effect, in order to arrive at the true construction of the language of the Covenant entered into by the two Contracting Parties—England and Spain.

The first Treaty was concluded at Madrid, the 23rd September, 1817 (2 Hertslet,

p. 272). The second and last Treaty was signed at Madrid, 23rd June, 1835 (4 Hertslet, p. 440). This Treaty recites that the King of England and the Queen of Spain "being desirous of rendering the means taken for abolishing the inhuman Traffic in Slaves more effective, have, in order to obtain this important object, resolved to conclude a new Convention in the spirit of the Treaty contracted between both Powers on the 23rd September, 1817;" and I observe that Lord Palmerston, in his despatch to the English Commissioners, dated 15th October, 1836 (Slave Trade, vol. ix, p. 38), after consulting with Her Majesty's Advocate-General, informs them that "the Treaty of the 28th June, 1835, neither annuls nor supersedes the Treaty of the 23rd September, 1817, but, on the contrary, it extends the power given by the latter instrument to suppress the Slave Trade."

Now the 3rd section of the Regulation for the Mixed Commissioners of the first Treaty is identical in substance with the 3rd section of Annex B, for the regulation of Mixed Courts of the Treaty of the 23rd June, 1835. The difference in the language is immaterial, both in the Spanish and in the English Treaty. The clause in both Treaties provides that the final sentence shall not be delayed beyond the period of two months.

In my former Report I stated my reasons for thinking that these words, however stringent in themselves, were directory; and that whatever punishment the neglect of the order contained in them might entail upon the Judge, such neglect would not necessarily render null and void a sentence passed after the expiration of the two months.

I think it right to restate and reinforce this opinion. And first, it is obvious that the construction which would render null and void all sentences passed, in whatever circumstances of overwhelming necessity, directly after that period had expired, would defeat "the spirit of the Treaty" referred to in the citation which I have already made from the preamble. And the answer of the Spanish Minister to my observation on this point is unsatisfactory, and the cases which he puts are really not founded upon any analogy to the present. The case of the minor and of the criminal, of whose acts the law takes no cognizance until they have arrived at a certain age, are cases in which their authority and power has not begun, or ever been vested in them, and are in principle unlike the case of the Judge in whom the authority is vested, and who is in the course of rightfully exercising it at the time when the particular hour arrives at which it is said that his authority ceases; not because, like the minor, he never possessed it, but because he had not exercised it in the particular instance with sufficient dispatch. It is manifest that the illness of a Judge, or other unavoidable cause, might render the delivery of the Judgment within the two months impossible. The Treaty is not to be construed upon the technical principles of a criminal statute, but upon the broadest principles of good faith, and with a view of carrying the object of it into effect.

There is no doubt that the object was to compel all proceedings "to take place as summarily as possible," according to the words in the earlier part of the section, and the period of two months was fixed upon as the period in which all causes should be concluded, and all sentences given.

But the question is, whether it was the intention of the Treaty that the delivery of the sentence after the expiration of two months should render the sentence, which would be fully warranted by the evidence, null, or that it should render the Judge liable to censure or removal as the case may be.

I think the latter is the true construction of the words, "shall not be delayed beyond the period of two months." While, on the one hand, there are no words (and this is to be carefully remarked) expressly providing that the sentence shall be null; on the other hand, in the original Treaty of 1817, which is still to be considered in force, it is provided, by clause 10 of the Regulation (2 Hertslet, page 305), "when the parties interested shall imagine they have cause to complain of any evident injustice on the part of the Mixed Commissioners they may represent it to their respective Governments, who reserve to themselves the right of mutual correspondence for the purpose of removing, when they think fit, the individuals who compose these Commissions." Such being the construction of the words, which the reason of the thing would suggest, it becomes very important to see whether previous authority has so construed them, and also whether both the Contracting Parties to the Treaty have by their practice and usage (which are the best interpreters of the Treaty) acquiesced in this construction. It appears to me that with respect to both these points the ground is very firm. I find that the question as to the directory character of the words of the Treaty was first raised in the case of the "Fabiana" in the year 1823.

I find that in the month of November in that year the Commissioners reported to the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs as follows:—

"Upon a consideration of the facts disclosed in Mr. Batt's affidavit that the 1865

'Fabiana' was sent hither for adjudication at the discretion of a subordinate officer of the 'Owen Glendower,' we are of opinion that such a sending in for adjudication was irregular, inasmuch as it appeared to be opposed to the letter and the spirit of the Treaty with Spain. We conceived that that Treaty solely vested in the Commander of a ship of the Royal navy, properly authorized to make seizures of vessels suspected to be engaged in the Traffic of Slaves, the discretion to send in for adjudication vessels detained by him, or under his authority, by boats of his ship.

"The limitations to the right of search are such under the Treaty that it appears to be the very foundation of that right that it should be exercised with the greatest precaution by the Commanders of ships of war to whom the instructions under the Treaty are issued: that consequently the more important right of sending in a vessel for adjudication should only be exercised by those Commanders in order that the Powers concerned in the Treaty may be fully assured that such right will not be exercised but upon a mature consideration of the reasons for her detention, and upon a proper reference to the Commissioners' instructions." (Slave Trade, vol. vii, page 66.)

But to this despatch Mr. Canning replied as follows:—

"The King's Advocate has reported that the detention having been made by a competent officer, and the declaration which was omitted, not being enjoined to be given in all cases, but only where held to be necessary, the circumstance that the captured vessel was sent in for adjudication by the subordinate officer, though an irregular act, was not so irregular but that you might have proceeded to adjudication.

"And the King's Advocate further points out, as what he holds out to be the sound construction of the Treaty, that although the Government may be answerable for losses occasioned by deviations from the Treaty, still every deviation does not necessarily invalidate a capture.

"Under these circumstances, and in this view of the case, it appears to me that you should have rather proceeded to adjudication, than have suspended your proceedings, and ordered the 'Fabiana' to be sold; and you will, therefore, act upon this opinion in this case, so far as the circumstances will allow of it, and on similar occasions." (Slave Trade, vol. iii, page 27.)

It is true that in this case the particular section of the Treaty now in dispute was not decided upon, but it is valuable as deciding the principle by which deviations from the Treaty are to be governed.

It appears to me that the "Conchita"* was captured on the 10th June, 1823; her papers brought into Registry of the Court on the 29th August (vol. ii, Class A, p. 61); and the case was brought before the Court on the 9th February, 1824, but no sentence was given till the 20th July, 1835, when the Court adjudicated upon the case in obedience to orders from the Foreign Office.

The following is the extract from Lord Palmerston's letter to the Commissioners:—

"The King's Advocate reports it to be his opinion that the irregularities which occurred in respect to the conduct of the captors of the 'Conchita' appear to have been in great measure explained by the Declaration transmitted to the Mixed Commission by Sir Robert Mends; that the Spanish character of the vessel, and the fact of her having been fitted out for the Traffic in Slaves, were satisfactorily established, and that the facts detailed leave no doubt that the captured vessel had been engaged in the Slave Trade, and that she actually had slaves on board of her immediately she was captured, and that as the 'Fabiana' was condemned after the expiration of the limited period, the same course may and ought to be pursued on the present occasion." "I have therefore to desire that you will now proceed to the final adjudication of the 'Conchita.'" (See pp. 32, 66, and 83, vol. viii, Class A.)

In the case of the "Rosarita" the vessel arrived on the 1st February, 1836, and was condemned on the 23rd July. In this case, I find in the account of the proceedings (p. 65, vol. ix, Class A), the following paragraph:—"Two months having elapsed since the filing of the claim, the claimant's Proctor, on the 25th April, deemed it right to petition the Court to be allowed to record a protest for his client against the fact of no judgment having been pronounced upon the detained vessel within two months, as stipulated in the IIIrd Article of Annex B.

"A formal protest, under notarial seal, accompanied the Petition. The Court, however, under the peculiar circumstances of the case, did not consider it right to permit a protest to be recorded against its proceedings, and upon this view rejected the Petition of the claimant's Proctors."

Moreover, I find upon the perusal of a list supplied to me by the Chief Justice of Sierra Leone (which I have appended to this Report), the following number of cases upon which sentences of condemnation were passed, after the lapse of two months, by the Court, namely, one in 1824, one in 1835, twenty-three in 1836, and one in 1840.

In all these cases the Commissioner of the Spanish Government must have consented to the sentence, and I presume, but I am not certain, that the Spanish Government received its share of the proceeds; and a question may arise whether both the Spanish and English Governments would not be bound, upon the Spanish construction of the Treaty, to make compensation to the owners of all these vessels.

With regard to the delay in this particular case, it appears not to have extended beyond eleven days (many of the cases in the list referred to show a delay of months and years).

It appears to have arisen from a claim of the Spanish Judge to act under an authority which, it is said, "had not been previously preferred," and from the illness of the Surveyor, which retarded the landing of the rice, a necessary preliminary to the examination of the vessel.

It is, of course, for Her Majesty's Government to say, having regard to this long list of precedents and to the observations which I have had the honour to make, whether it will now, and for the future, construe the words in the section of the Treaty as invalidating altogether all sentences passed after the lapse of the period of two months.

I think it right, however, to observe that I do not see how the English Judge and Arbitrator could have done otherwise than consider these precedents as binding upon him.

The character of the Court is very peculiar, as it appears, unlike any regular tribunal, to be bound by instructions given from time to time by Her Majesty's Government, as to the incidents of any particular case which may be brought before it.

I have only one more observation to make, that if, as contended by the Spanish Minister, the expiration of the period deprives the Court of authority, it will have no power to release or restore the vessel which has been duly arrested and placed under proper custody.

Perhaps, however, having regard to the peculiarity of the tribunals which I have mentioned, your Lordship might send an order for the release of the vessel which the Court would obey.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 200.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 6.)

My Lord,
Doctors' Commons, December 6, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 29), inclosing an extract from the Official Gazette stating that orders have been issued to the commanders of Spanish vessels to treat as pirates all vessels cruizing in Chilean waters whose captains, officers, and a majority of the crew are not Chilean subjects, and who have not received letters of marque directly from the Chilean Government; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to whether such vessels, if unprovided with letters of marque, would not come under the denomination of pirates. A copy of a despatch which has been addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid on the Report of the Law Officers of the 1st instant was also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am not sure whether I quite understand the expression in these orders, "directly from the Chilean Government."

It is competent to the Chilean Government either to issue letters of marque directly or to invest some agent with authority to issue in their name such letters of marque; but if these orders refer not to public vessels of war duly commissioned, whatever may be the composition of their crew, but to private vessels making war as privateers, and direct that if they have not letters of marque granted by the authorities of the Chilean Government they are to be treated as pirates, such orders are not in my opinion at variance with international law. "Qui autem nullius Principis auctoritate, sive mari, sive terrâ, piratarum prædonumque vocabulo intelliguntur." (Bynkershoek, Q. I. P., l. i, c. 17.)

---

* The Queen's Advocate's Report on this case appears in Slave Trade, 185 , page 141.

1865

As the question is put to me I understand that the order in relation to the manning of the vessel is not in the disjunctive, but applies only to cases where there are also no proper letters of marque.

But assuming it to be otherwise, viz., that the order means that the crew are to be treated as pirates either in the case of the vessel having no letters of marque, or in the case mentioned as to the manning of the vessel, then I think that Her Majesty's Government cannot admit the right of the Spanish Government to treat as pirates either duly commissioned public vessels of war or vessels with letters of marque from the Chilean Government, because the officers or the majority of the crew are not subjects of Chile.

Such a doctrine is indeed maintained with respect to privateers by certain French writers, and the recent work, Pistoye et Duverdy (t. i, p. 279), treats it as a recognized position of international law; but he refers only to Ortolan (l. i, c. 3), who is himself a modern writer of no high authority, and who cites no authority for the position. While, on the other hand, M. Masse ("Droit Commercial," t. i, No. 165), a very high authority on French law and general jurisprudence, distinctly lays down the doctrine that a neutral who takes a commission from a belligerent thereby denationalizes himself and becomes the subject of the State whose commission he bears. This must of course be understood only with reference to the other belligerent, who has a right to treat such person as a subject of his enemy. No such position as that now asserted in the Spanish Orders is maintained by Bynkershoek (Q. I. P.), or by Martens ("Essai sur les Armatures"). It may be well also to mention that no such doctrine is laid down by the last Spanish writer of international authority, Pando ("Elementos del Derecho Internacional," p. 424, sec. 173), who in his chapter on privateers does consider the question in what circumstances the privateer is to be treated as a pirate;* nor have I been able to find the position maintained in the older and well-known work of Abreu on the same subject. I believe no such restriction has been imposed by the orders with respect to privateers issued by England, or by the United States of America.

There are indeed many Treaties in which it has been agreed that if the subjects of either of the Contracting Parties take letters of marque from the enemy of the other they may be treated as pirates, but there is no authority for saying that the subjects of a foreign State which is not a party to any such Treaty can be so treated, if they are found on board a privateer regularly commissioned by the belligerent It is quite another consideration whether the State to which these subjects belong will prohibit its own subjects from taking part in a contest in which the State is neutral, and will by a municipal law enact that if they serve on board a belligerent privateer except under certain conditions relative to the number of the crew they shall be guilty of piracy. There have been various provisions both as to the general question and as to the proportion which foreign sailors may bear to the whole crew of the privateer in the laws of different States at different periods of history; the very fact of this variety showing that there is no fixed international rule on the subject. For instance, in the famous Ordonnance de la Marine, the subjects of Louis XIV who took letters of marque from a foreign State without the permission of their Sovereign were to be treated as pirates, and two-thirds of the crew were to be Frenchmen.

By a "règlement sur les armements en course" of May 1803 (c. 2, sec. 10), privateers were authorized to employ foreign sailors "jusqu'aux deux cinquièmes de la totalité de l'équipage." But these are only municipal regulations; and even if it be conceded for the sake of argument that these Ordinances gave a right to the belligerent to treat the subjects of the State who issued them as pirates, the right could not be extended to the subjects of other States which have no such law and issued no such provisions.

I have entered perhaps unnecessarily upon this topic, but it is one of grave importance, and which seemed to be raised in the former papers submitted to me on this subject.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* e.g., "El corsario que cruza con dos o mas patentes de diversos Potencias debe ser considerado como pirata."

No. 201.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 8.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 8, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to our previous Reports in regard to vessels said to be fitting out in this country to act as privateers in the war between Spain and Chile, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Board of Treasury,* inclosing a Report from the Custom-house Commissioners relative to three vessels which are being fitted out at Liverpool; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any steps can be taken by Her Majesty's Government in the matter. Mr. Hammond was also to add a letter (then) just received from the Treasury respecting an application which had been made for a British registry for one of these vessels (the "Minerva").

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letters of the 6th, 6th, 6th, 7th, and 7th instant, on the subject of these vessels,* and other like vessels said to be fitting out in the Clyde and the Victoria Docks,† and inclosing Reports of the Customs and other officers respecting them; and also as to the enlistment by one John Seymour, a lodging-house keeper in Wellclose-square, of sailors to be employed in the service of the Chilean Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these several papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there does not appear to us, at present, any legal evidence which would justify Her Majesty's Government in detaining any of the vessels referred to in the various sets of papers which have been sent to us, nor in instituting criminal proceedings against Seymour for enlisting seamen in contravention of the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 202.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 8.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 8, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that with reference to my letter of the 17th ultimo, transmitting for insertion in the "London Gazette" a form of notification of the blockade of the ports of Chile by the Spanish naval forces, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Sir John Crampton (No. 34), inclosing a copy of the official "Gazette" of Madrid announcing the state of affairs between Spain and Chile; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and inform your Lordship whether I consider that any further notice of the blockade should in consequence be inserted in the "London Gazette," and that if I should consider this necessary I would draw up and transmit to your Lordship a draft of the notification which I might consider it desirable to be made public.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion it is not expedient at present that any further notice of this blockade should be inserted in the "London Gazette."

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Dated December 2. As to two vessels in Messrs. Laird's yard at Liverpool (the "Minerva" and another). Also vessel in Mr. Miller's yard.

† As to two vessels fitting out in the Clyde (the "Tornado" and the "Cyclone"). As to the "Mary Augusta" and the "Helen Denny," in Victoria Docks. Vessels at Liverpool, &c.

1865

No. 203.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 9.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 9, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to acknowledge the receipt of my Report of the 6th instant with regard to the notification issued by the Spanish Government of their intention to treat Chilean privateers as pirates except under certain circumstances, and to state that your Lordship gathers therefrom that a vessel unprovided with letters of marque, and acting as a privateer, would be lawfully treated as a pirate, but that if such vessel carried letters of marque she would be protected by them whether the belligerent Government delivered them to the captain in its own country, or sent to its agents for delivery in a foreign country, which latter course your Lordship believes has constantly and without impeachment been resorted to.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to transmit to me, with reference to the above paragraph and to my Report of the 6th instant, a copy of an instruction which your Lordship addressed on the subject to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid, and to request that I would inform your Lordship whether I consider it advisable that any addition should be made to that instruction, in order to warn the Spanish Government against the commission of such breaches of international law as it would be the duty of Her Majesty's Government to resent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to me necessary to make any addition to the letter which your Lordship has already addressed to Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 204.

The Law Officers of the Crown to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, December 16, 1865.

WE are honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to his previous letter of the same date, he was directed by your Lordship to forward to us a letter, with its inclosure, which has been received from the Home Department, relative to the departure of the "Eagle" from the Victoria Docks.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That these further papers do not require any alteration to be made in the Report which we had the honour to submit to your Lordship this morning.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 205.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 18.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 18, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 30th ultimo, in regard to the Prize Court established by Admiral Pareja on board his flag-ship for the trial of prizes captured by his blockading squadron in Chilean waters, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 55), inclosing a translation of the reply which he has received to the note he addressed to the Spanish Government upon this subject.

And Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest convenience, with my opinion thereupon, and as to whether the captured prize should have the option of being tried on board the Admiral's flag-ship, or being taken to a Spanish port for trial.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I observe that Señor Bermudez de Castro does not pretend that there is any precedent for establishing a Prize Court on board the deck of a belligerent ship; while his attempt to palliate the evil and injustice necessarily incident to such a proceeding does not appear to me successful.

What the neutral has by international law a right to expect is, that a Civil Judge, of no mean legal experience and ability, and wholly disinterested in the issue, shall try the question whether his ship has been lawfully seized or not; whereas the Spanish Government propose that the captor himself, who is the other party in the suit, who, moreover, has no pretension to any legal qualification whatever, shall occupy the judgment seat. And, as I have before observed, the neutral is also thereby deprived of his right to obtain the best legal advice to defend his interests, and argue questions often requiring great legal knowledge and acumen, before the Court. It is a poor compensation for the absence of all these essential elements of justice, to be told that his captor will decide the question, of his own right to take the neutral ship, with great expedition.

The argument that a man-of-war is a part of the State to which it belongs is an undeniable premise of international law, but it does not warrant the conclusion that a Prize Court on board a man-of-war, presided over by the Admiral, is the same as a Prize Court on mainland, presided over by a Civil Judge.

Such an argument is, for the reasons I have alleged, wholly unsatisfactory; and I venture to assert that it is one which no publicist of authority (to borrow Señor de Castro's phrase) ever maintained. It may be that it is inconvenient to Spain to establish a Prize Court at Cuba or elsewhere, and that she has no ships to spare to conduct prizes there; but that is a reason why she should leave the ships of the neutral alone, and not why the neutral should suffer.

With respect to what Señor Bermudez de Castro says as to the right of the belligerent to destroy enemy's ships, and therefore as to his right, à fortiori, to try them in any way he pleases, it is to be observed that Her Majesty's Government do not dispute that right; but what they do dispute is, that a belligerent has a right to destroy a ship claimed by one of Her Majesty's subjects, because he (the belligerent) declares it to be the ship of an enemy, without trying the question at issue by law, which national justice and international usage alike prescribe to him.

I cannot advise your Lordship that it would be expedient, having regard to the extreme mischief of such a precedent, to suggest to the neutral owner that he has the option of having his case tried on board the Admiral's deck. It is a private arrangement which it would be competent to him to adopt if he thought proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 206.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 18.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 18, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me two letters, dated the 15th instant, which have been received from the Board of Admiralty, inclosing Reports from Commodore Harvey in regard to the blockade of the Chilean coast by the Spanish naval forces; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon, and as to whether it would not be advisable that the arrangement entered into by Commodore Harvey in respect to mail-packets should be made public in this country; and if so, he (Mr. Hammond) was to request that I would prepare a notice to that effect for insertion in the "London Gazette."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that it would be expedient both to notify the arrangements as to the mail-packets, and also the specification of the Chilean harbours under blockade, and the provisions as to the unlading and lading of cargo by neutral ships in blockaded ports,—mentioned by Admiral Harvey (paragraph 13 of his letter of the 25th October, 1865), and I have prepared a notice for the "Gazette" accordingly.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

Inclosure in No. 206.

Notification for the "London Gazette."

Foreign Office, December 19, 1865.

IT is hereby notified that the Earl of Clarendon, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, has received through the Secretary of the Admiralty the following intelligence, dated Valparaiso, the 25th October and the 1st of November, 1865, from Commodore Harvey, of Her Majesty's ship "Leander," relative to the blockade of the coast of Chile by the Spanish squadron:—

That the Commander of the Spanish naval forces has declared "that the harbours at present blockaded are Tonce, Talcahuano, Valparaiso, Herradura (Guayacan), Coquimbo, Caldera.

"Notice will be given of any other ports to be blockaded, and neutral vessels will be permitted a certain time to discharge cargo and leave in ballast; and also those loading to complete cargo.

"The following are the terms on which the Pacific Steam Navigation Company's packets are now permitted to resume running:—

"That the Company's packets can convey to and from Valparaiso, calling at Coquimbo and Caldera, both official and ordinary correspondence, and also passengers. That the correspondence of the Spanish squadron will be conveyed in the Company's steamers, either in charge of a person appointed by the Admiral or in sealed bags under the receipt of the commander or purser of the steamer, and that the same will be delivered at any or all of the ports touched at by the steamers to the person or persons to whom it may be directed.

"That the Company's steamers will admit as passengers persons belonging to the Spanish squadron. That, in view of the neutrality which the Company is bound to maintain, the conditions are applicable to both belligerents, it being understood that, for either of the same can be taken officers, soldiers, sailors, or public functionaries, in number not exceeding six at any one time. That the packets will be allowed to take sufficient coal at Caldera.

"These conditions, of course, can be withdrawn should Admiral Pareja find it necessary.

"The Vice-Admiral has further granted permission for the vessels consigned to the Company with coal for Caldera to discharge them, provided that the names of the expected vessels are sent by the Manager of the Company to the Captain of the blockading squadron, and also that these steamers may embark specie."

R. P.

No. 207.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 23.)

Doctors' Commons, December 23, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured by your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to transmit to me two despatches from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid,* together with previous correspondence† relating to the instructions issued to the commanders of Spanish ships of war for the treatment of Chilean privateers; and to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on this subject, more particularly with reference to the answer of the Spanish Government to the representations which Sir J. Crampton was instructed to make respecting the treatment as pirates of persons found on board privateers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I crave leave to refer very particularly to my Report of the 6th instant, the latter part of which contains, by anticipation, a detailed examination of the arguments now alleged by the Spanish Minister. I will venture to recapitulate the principal portions of that Report.

As to authority of Jurists: I referred to the very passages from De Pistoye et Duverdy and Ortolan, now cited by the Spanish Minister as the only authorities which would probably be put forward as maintaining the doctrine that international law, as

---

* Sir J. Crampton, Nos. 53 and 56.

† Sir J. Crampton, Nos. 29 and 42; to Sir J. Crampton, No. 38.

distinguished from municipal law, treated privateers duly commissioned, but manned in part by foreigners, as pirates. I expressed my opinion that these recent and not high authorities could not outweigh the opinion of other more numerous and more celebrated authorities, including in the number the Spanish writers the old Abreu and the modern Pando, among the German and Dutch, Martens and Bynkershoek. That the modern French writers relied upon were not supported, but contradicted, by the standard writers, ancient and modern, of the same country. That an examination of the authorities clearly showed that the municipal law of a State which treated as pirates the subjects of it who engaged in foreign service as the crew of privateers, could not and did not create an international law on the subject, although it might authorize a belligerent to treat as pirates the subject of a State which had enacted such a law.

As to Treaties: that those which referred to the subject, while they tended to establish that there did not exist a general international law with relation to it, could only bind the contracting parties to them.

The Treaty referred to between England and the United States of America in 1794, had for its object to prevent privateering altogether, and as long as it was in force (which was not long, I think) it was of course obligatory on these two countries, but on no other.

That as to usage,—England and the United States, who employed at one time an immense number of privateers, never to the best of my knowledge issued any instructions of this kind as to foreign privateers; that I did not believe in practice any instance could be found of a foreign subject serving on board a duly commissioned privateer being put to death, or treated as a pirate.

I am not aware of the circumstances in which Admiral Bondin made the declaration of 1839 which is adverted to by the Spanish Admiral, but there can be no doubt that England would not then have allowed her subjects to be treated as pirates because they served on board a duly commissioned privateer. And the doctrine that an arbitrary declaration by the commander of the naval forces of a single State can alter the law of nations because another State, at the time unaffected by it, does not protest against it, is inadmissible.

As to the hypothesis that France and England during the Crimean war would have treated American subjects on board Russian privateers as pirates, it is an hypothesis, I should suppose, wholly without foundation. That there being no foundation for the position upon authority, usage, or precedent, there was none in principle.

The characteer of the privateer is determined by her commission. If a lawful Sovereign Power issues that commission to the captain of that vessel, it cannot be treated as a pirate. It is said that your Lordship, speaking generally of privateering, called it "that scourge of humanity, and legal and organized piracy." The very words, if they were uttered, denote the existing legality of privateering, as well as the desire to render it illegal for the future; but Spain refused to be a party to the Declaration by which it was to be rendered so, and the words afford no pretence whatever for the proposition that those States which did not abandon privateering were to be at liberty to retain the practice, and introduce a new law respecting it affecting the subjects of other States, without their consent.

The Spanish Minister asks upon what principle the English Government rely: the answer is that Her Majesty's Government think the true and sound doctrine to be that a foreigner who serves a State by enlisting himself in her military or naval forces subjects himself to be treated by the belligerent of that State as an enemy, but not as a pirate; and that no advantage, but great evil to the welfare of the community of civilized States would spring from a confusion of the distinct characters belonging to each.

The reference to the Foreign Enlistment Act weakens instead of supports the Spanish argument. In the first place, Spain knows (by no very distant experience) that it is in Her Majesty's power to formally relax all the provisions of that Act without being at war. In the next place it is a Municipal Act for the purpose of enabling the Government of this country to prevent Her Majesty's subjects from taking part in the wars of other countries; but neither England nor the United States of America (which has a similar Act) ever held that it was lawful for other States to treat British or American subjects, taken by a belligerent, as pirates. And it is to be remembered that the argument of the Spanish Minister, as well as his citation from Hautefeuille, goes the full length of asserting that foreign subjects serving on board men-of-war, as well as on board privateers, are pirates. Not only are the consequences of such a proposition monstrous, but the practical difficulties attending upon it are infinite.

What uniform rule is to be adopted for determining when a sailor, who is perpetually changing his domicil, has become the subject of a foreign State?

1865

M. Massé (see my former Report) and other jurists hold that the very act of serving in the army or navy of a foreign State renders the person so serving a subject, with reference to other countries, of that State.

Others hold a certain period of domicil or residence, others naturalization, to be necessary.

A Chilean subject, fifty years of age, who had been in Chile since he was three months old, having been born in England would be a British subject. Is he to be hung at the yard-arm for defending his real country Chile against an enemy who has made (most unjustifiable) war upon her? What authority has a foreign State to say how many of the privateer's crew shall be natives? The very limitation concedes that there is no principle in the demand. The truth is, that the claim to issue such a decree is built upon a confusion of municipal and international law. It is competent to Spain to treat her own subjects serving on board Chilean privateers as pirates; but it is not competent to her to extend the crime of piracy by a new definition which is to affect the lives of the subjects of other States. It is competent, however, to her to treat them as pro hac vice subjects of the State which they serve, and to deal with them as enemies.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 208.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 29.)

Doctors' Commons, December 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Minister at Madrid (No. 62), respecting a request which has been made to Her Majesty's Consul at Bilbao, by a Spanish merchant at Santander, that a certificate should be given to him certifying that a cargo of flour shipped at that port on account of a British firm is the property of British subjects, to protect it from seizure by Chilean cruizers; and to request that I would take this despatch and its inclosures into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to this application.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that the request made to Her Majesty's Consul ought to be in this and all like cases refused. It is no part of the duty of the Consul to grant such certificates; nor has he adequate means of ascertaining the truth of the fact which he is asked to guarantee. Such a course of action would often lead (not improbably in the present case) to his being unintentionally the abettor of a fraud upon belligerent rights.

Lastly, the belligerent would not be bound to recognize the certificate as in any way restricting his right of visitation, search, and capture, according to the circumstances of suspicion which arose in each case.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Sweden.

No. 209.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Stockholm (No. 10), requesting to be informed whether he can properly accede to the request made to him by Mr. Fairman, who has applied to be furnished with a certificate to the effect that the Chancery of the Governor of Stockholm is an Executive Court, not legally empowered to try cases that are not clear and indisputable; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the answer which should be given to Mr. Hunt on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to me that to certify as to the character of the jurisdiction of this Court at Stockholm is within the province of the duties of Her Majesty's Consul at that place.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Switzerland.

No. 210.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 2, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence, as marked in the margin,[*] respecting a question which has originated in the Swiss Federal Council of authorizing the use of the Swiss National flag afloat, and the desire of the Federal Government to ascertain on what footing vessels carrying the Swiss flag would be received in British ports; but that before addressing any instructions to Admiral Harris on this subject, your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with our opinion on the proposed measure, and as to the answer which it would appear expedient to return to the Swiss Government on this subject.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although the proposal is novel, and although the Swiss Marine must necessarily be dependent upon the use of the ports of other countries which may be permitted to them by the Powers to which those ports belong, we know no principle of international law which ought to lead other countries to refuse to recognize the flag of an inland State, when used either by public ships belonging to that State, or by the ships of its subjects under the authority of its Government upon the high seas; and it appears to us (while concurring in the practical reasons suggested by Admiral Harris for doubting the policy of this measure on the part of Switzerland) that the answer of Her Majesty's Government to the application of the Swiss Federal Council may well be in accordance with the views of the Lords of the Admiralty, as expressed in Mr. Romaine's letter to Mr. Hammond of the 23rd December last, with the substance of which we concur.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Admiral Harris, Nos. 125, 126, and 131 of 1864; No. 5 of 1865; Admiralty, December 23, 1864.

1865

51506

No. 211.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received November 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 15, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a despatch and its inclosures received from Her Majesty's Minister in Switzerland (No. 91), respecting the position and privileges of an English company styling themselves "The European Central Railway Company," who have obtained from the Swiss Government a concession for a line of railway in the Valley of the Tessin, but whose Act of Concession is expected to become the subject of debate in the Federal Assembly, the President having, as it appears, assumed the position that an English Company, from the fact of their Direction being located in the Canton of Tessin and of their having an agent there, are not entitled to claim the support of the British Legation in regard to the privileges accorded to them by the Act of Concession; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion on the particular point in question, and as to the instructions which it may be desirable to address to Admiral Harris upon this subject.

The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that this English Company has not forfeited its right to the protection of the British Legation, because in the Act of Concession the technical domicil of the Company,—"la direction technique du chemin de fer," as the President terms it (letter to Admiral Harris, October 18, 1865, Inclosure 2 in No. 91 of Admiral Harris' despatch), is to be considered as being in the Canton where the Board or Administration of the Company is situated. The distinction between different kinds of domicil is familiar to all jurists; the domicil which incorporates a foreign citizen into the State in which he is resident is wholly distinct in its character and consequences from the domicil which is assigned by the State to a foreign subject with relation to certain legal acts or liabilities. Such a domicil is for the purpose of founding jurisdiction in the event of legal proceedings being taken either by him or against him in the country in which he is resident. The domicil specified in the Concession for the Company is of this nature, and falls under this category; but it does not affect the right of the Company to the intervention of its Government for the purpose of preventing an act of injustice being done to it by the foreign Government. The intervention, however, of the British Legation in Switzerland should be strictly confined to such a case, and should not attempt to interfere with the ordinary course of the municipal law in its operation upon the rights and liabilities of the Company.

I humbly advise that instructions to this effect be sent to Admiral Harris.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Tripoli.

No. 212.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 24, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 25th of August of last year, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch dated the 30th November ultimo, from Mr. Reade, Her Majesty's Consul at Scutari, relative to the complaint made against him, whilst holding the post of British Vice-Consul at Bengazi, by M. de Bacquerie, the French Vice-Consul at that place, with reference—1st, to the course pursued by Mr. Reade on the occasion of Madame de Bacquerie applying to him for protection against her husband, and afterwards taking shelter in the house of a Maltese; and 2ndly, in connection with a disturbance which took place among the Maltese in the Catholic church at Bengazi; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that the defence of Mr. Consul Reade, upon both the charges, is satisfactory and sufficient.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Tunis.

No. 213.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch, together with its inclosures, from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis (No. 14, May 17), reporting the proceedings which have taken place in consequence of the death in September last of a British subject named Marcello Schembri from injuries inflicted upon him by two other British subjects, named Giuseppe Curmi and Antonio Bagada, and an Italian named Antonio Bussetta; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to make thereon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that this unfortunate man, Marcello Schembri, was killed in a drunken brawl, in which he appears himself to have taken part. It is true that the evidence taken at Tunis points to the Italian, Antonio Bussetta, as having been a principal in the act of manslaughter which caused the death of Marcello. But it by no means follows that the Court of Genoa may not have been fully justified, on the evidence laid before them, in acquitting him. Probably, also, that evidence may have undergone a much closer sifting than it appears to have undergone at Tunis, where the Court must necessarily have been without the legal aid which the Court at Genoa possessed. On the other hand, Her Majesty's Consul at Tunis appears to us to have acted with caution and propriety, and to have arrived at a just conclusion upon the facts as they were proved before him, and to have inflicted a just sentence on the Maltese criminals. We do not see that any further steps can be taken in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 214.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Tunis, requesting instructions as to the course which he should pursue with regard to a sum of money deposited in his office belonging to a Mr. Smythe of London, being the dividend due to him out of a bankrupt estate, but which is now claimed by a Mr. Bensammon, on account of a debt of 134*l.* 16*s.* 10*d.* which he alleges to be owing to him by Mr. Smythe; and to request that we would take this despatch into our consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Consul-General Wood.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that Her Majesty's Consul-General at Tunis cannot lawfully adopt the course which he proposes to follow with respect to this sum of money.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 215.

The Queen's Advocate to the Earl of Clarendon.—(Received December 30.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, December 29, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General in Tunis (No. 73), reporting the course he has adopted in regard to a Maltese family who had been compelled by distress to embrace the Mahometan religion; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion in regard to the legality of Mr. Wood's proceedings.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the history of this transaction is rather vague; what the distress was which compelled the woman to become a Mahometan, and who made the application on behalf of the minor children, do not appear. The children of the Maltese father are, at least during their minority, British subjects; and assuming that the application on their behalf was made from a proper quarter, e. g., the next relation or friend of the children, and that the mother accompanied them of her own accord, I think that the conduct of the Consul-General in sending them to Malta was legal and proper.

I suppose that when he desired that means should be taken for preventing their return to Tunis, he meant during the continuance of their minority.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Turkey.

5/489

No. 216.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying papers, as marked in the margin,* relative to an application made by an Ionian named Demetrius Micrulachi, a partner in a mercantile firm at Manchester, that British protection may be continued to be afforded to him so long as he remains a partner in the said firm, and that your Lordship proposes to instruct Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople to protect Mr. Micrulachi so far as regards the commercial concerns of the house in England, but, as he is a Greek subject, not to extend to him general protection; but that before doing so, however, your Lordship would be glad to be furnished with my opinion as to the course your Lordship proposes to pursue in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That having regard to the fact that the domicil of this firm, of which Demetrius Micrulachi is a member, is British, and to the peculiar circumstances of the case, I think that your Lordship would be warranted in acceding to the petitioner's prayer with the limitations which your Lordship proposes, namely, to allow the British protection, which this gentleman now enjoys, within the Turkish dominions, to be continued to him, and so far only as the commercial interests of that firm in England are concerned, and while he remains a member of that firm.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Kent, January 3; to Mr. Kent, January 5; Mr. Kent, January 7, 1865.

No. 217.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received January 14.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, January 13, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that with reference to my Report of the 26th of August, 1863, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying extract of a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 25, January 19, 1864), respecting the course which the Turkish Government propose should be pursued with a view to the settlement of the claim of Mr. Hippodimatopulo against the Turkish War Department; and to request that I would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to the instructions which should be given to Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople on the subject. The previous papers were also annexed for information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople should be instructed not to assent to the proposal of Aali Pasha, which, I agree with Mr. Erskine in thinking, would be a mockery of justice. I adhere to the opinion which I had the honour to express in my last Report upon this subject, and I think that the Turkish Government should be pressed either to abide by the decision of the Commission, or to issue a supplemental Commission limited and restrained to the two points mentioned in my last Report.

It is of course obvious that the continued and systematic delay on the part of the Porte, as to the adjustment of this claim, is matter of just and grave complaint.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 218.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th of January instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 11th of May last, upon the subject of Consular jurisdiction in Tripoli, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a despatch which, on the receipt of that Report, your Lordship addressed to Sir Henry Bulwer, together with two despatches which have since been received from Her Majesty's Embassy at Constantinople,* from the latter of which we should perceive that the jurisdiction claimed by the Consul-General in Tripoli had again been called in question by the Turkish Government, arising out of a case in

---

* Sir H. Bulwer, No. 211; Mr. Stuart, No. 159, 1864.

1865

which a British subject was accused of wounding an officer in the Turkish army; and to request that we would take these despatches, together with the former papers, which were thereto annexed, into our consideration, and that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should pursue in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Report, that the claim of jurisdiction by the British Consul at Tripoli, in cases such as that now in question, is not justified by the terms of the Capitulations. And, as far as we can judge upon the materials submitted to us, no usage is proved of sufficient strength to found a claim, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, that it shall override these Capitulations in any material point.

On the whole, we very much incline to the opinion expressed in the despatch of his Excellency Sir Henry Bulwer; nevertheless, we think it most expedient that there should be a common resolution arrived at, and a common action taken, by all the Christian Powers, on this delicate and important question.

In the meanwhile we think the demand of Aali Pasha in this particular case should be acceded to.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 219.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 31, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul-General at Bucharest, calling attention to a circular note from the Government of the Principalities, as to a patent tax on wholesale foreign merchants.

And Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a Report from the Board of Trade on this subject, and was to request that we would report to your Lordship such observations as we may have to make on the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration. and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed in the Report from the Board of Trade, that if the tax in question be equally levied on native merchants, and on merchants of other foreign countries engaged in the same branch of trade, that it is competent to the proper authority to levy this tax on British subjects exercising the trade of wholesale merchants in the Principalities, or in any other part of the Ottoman dominions.

Whether the Government of Prince Couza be or be not the proper authority, or whether this is a matter which the Porte ought to regulate, is a question upon which our opinion is not directly asked, and as to which (having regard to the papers now before us) we are not in a situation to form a correct opinion.

Since, however, it appears from Consul Green's despatch to Mr. Stuart that the foreign Consuls at Bucharest generally look upon the resolution taken by the Government of Prince Couza on this subject as inconsistent with the rights hitherto admitted to belong to foreign traders in the Principalities, we think it may be expedient to obtain from the Consul a more exact statement of the grounds of that opinion, and also to ascertain the view taken of this matter by Her Majesty's Representative at Constantinople.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 220.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st February instant, requesting that we would have the goodness to take the inclosed despatch into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this despatch into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us very expedient that Mr. Green should be authorized to join in any notes which his colleagues may unanimously decide upon addressing to the Moldo-Wallachian Government upon questions affecting the interests of foreigners, provided he is himself satisfied that the ground taken up in such notes is tenable and consistent with the Capitulations between this country and the Porte.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 221.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st January, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 24th of November last, respecting the question of exclusive jurisdiction claimed by the British Consulate at Alexandria, in cases where British subjects are accused of having committed crimes or offences against subjects of the Porte, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir E. Hornby, dated the 7th ultimo, to whom the substance of our Report was communicated in a despatch of which the draft was inclosed therewith, stating the grounds on which his view of this matter rests; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the view taken by Sir E. Hornby of this question.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the former papers.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the question (as we conceive) is not as to the effect of any usage consistent with and additional to Treaty stipulations, but as to the validity of a usage contrary to and inconsistent with them. A great part of Sir E. Hornby's despatch seems to relate to the advantage which has resulted to British subjects from a non-observance of the provisions of the Capitulations of 1809. This may be very true, but it is no answer to the opinion expressed in our former Report that the Ottoman Porte has a right to insist, whenever it pleases, upon the strict fulfilment, and to complain of and obtain redress for the violation of the terms of an existing and binding Treaty. It is said that the Ottoman authorities have themselves, in a recent case happening in Turkey, substituted an alleged local usage for the Treaty, in their trial of a British subject. If this be so (as we believe it to be), there is, in our opinion, grave cause for remonstrance on the part of Her Majesty's Government; and this very fact furnishes an additional reason why the violation of the Capitulations by the British authorities in Egypt should not supply the Ottoman authorities with precedents for pursuing themselves a similar course in Turkey.

If, indeed (as we have already had the honour to report), other Christian States are allowed to avail themselves of any usage distinct from and over-riding the Capitulations, then the British Consuls may fairly and justly claim a similar liberty on behalf of Her Majesty's subjects. But the evidence of such permission, accorded to other Christian States, should be incontrovertible. Whether it might not be expedient to place this whole question on a better and more distinct foundation by fresh negotiation, in common with other Christian Governments, is a question which we venture to think well worthy of the attention of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 222.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, February 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (Nos. 7 and 21), on the subject of a new law on the Press in Turkey, which appeared to your Lordship to impose conditions upon British subjects owning journals incompatible with their privileges under the Capitulations; and to request that we would take this question into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 43), on the subject of the new Law on the Press in Turkey; and to request that we would take these papers, together the despatches referred to us in his letter of the 1st instant, into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that it is competent to the Turkish Government either to prohibit absolutely the publication of any newspaper by a British subject, or to authorize it on any conditions it pleases, provided always that those conditions are not contrary to the Treaty engagements of Turkey with this country.

If, for instance, the Turkish Government should grant a licence, determinable on the non-observance of certain rules, or revocable arbitrarily at the pleasure of the Porte, of those measures Her Majesty's Government could not complain. But if the Turkish Government goes on, as it proposes to do, to make certain offences of the press criminal, those offences must be dealt with in a manner consistent with the rules laid down by the Capitulations as to the trial of British subjects for other criminal offences in Turkey.

The Treaty engagements, it must be remembered, are with the Government of Great Britain, not with its individual subjects. Consequently it is not competent for individual British subjects to renounce the benefit of those engagements; and any attempt by the Porte to exercise any criminal jurisdiction over British subjects licensed to publish newspapers in Turkey, by their own consent, in a manner different from that prescribed by the Capitulations, would be contrary to the Treaty engagements of Turkey with this country.

We think, for these reasons, that Mr. Stuart's objections to the new law (by which we understand the presence or intervention of any British authority at criminal trials of British subjects for offences of the press to be practically excluded) are well founded; and that they are not removed by the answer of Aali Pasha to Mr. Stuart, dated the 18th of January this year.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 223.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, March 14, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Agent and Consul-General at Bucharest (No. 12), calling attention to the official declaration of the Prefect of Ibraila, relative to the exercise of Consular jurisdiction in Moldo-Wallachia; and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That according to the general principles of international law, the exercise of coercive jurisdiction within the territories of a foreign Christian State by the Consul of another State cannot be claimed as a matter of right. The State which places the authority, in this respect, of the Consuls of all foreign States upon an equal footing, furnishes no ground for a complaint that strict international law has been violated; though, if the limitation imposed be contrary to the usages of comity, there is ground for a remonstrance from the Government to which the Consul belongs.

In the Ottoman dominions, by Capitulations embodied in a Treaty, and by usage, a different practice has prevailed, and, as I am instructed, the local authorities in these dominions have never interfered in the administration of justice in civil suits in which foreigners, the subjects of Christian States, alone are concerned, and the respective Consuls of these foreign Christian States have been allowed to take the measures for enforcing the Decrees which in such civil suits they have made.

I presume, though I have no distinct evidence on the point, that not only while Moldavia and Wallachia were incorporated in the Turkish dominions in the same manner as any other portion of the Ottoman territory, but even after the Hatti-Sheriff of 1834, the foreign Christian Consuls enjoyed the same privileges in these provinces as in Turkey.

Assuming that this statement is correct, the question arises whether the Treaty for the re-establishment of peace with Russia, signed at Paris, March 30, 1856, or the Convention signed at Paris, August 19, 1858, between the principal Christian States relative to the organization of the Principalities of Moldavia and Wallachia, has made any difference in this respect.

By the XXIInd Article of the Treaty of 1856 it was provided that "the Principalities of Wallachia and Moldavia shall continue to enjoy, under the suzerainty of the Porte and under the guarantee of the Contracting Parties, the privileges and immunities of which they are in possession. No exclusive protection shall be exercised over them by any of the guaranteeing Powers. There shall be no separate right of interference in their internal affairs."

And by the XXIIIrd Article the Porte engages that the Principalities shall enjoy an independent national administration, and full liberty as to worship, legislation, commerce, and navigation. The existing laws and statutes are to be revised under a special Commission of the High Contracting Powers and a Commissioner of the Porte.

The Convention of 1858 had for its object the adjustment of the future relations between these provinces and the Porte; it provided, as follows, by the IInd Article:—

"Consequently, the Principalities shall carry on their own administration freely and exempt from any interference of the Sublime Porte, within the limits stipulated by the agreement of the guaranteeing Powers with the Suzerain Court;" and by the latter section of Article VIII it is provided as follows:—

"As hitherto, the international Treaties which shall be concluded by the Suzerain Court with foreign Powers shall be applicable to the Principalities in all that shall not prejudice their immunities."

I can find no other Articles, either in the Treaty or the Convention, which appear to me to affect, directly or indirectly, this question.

Assuming, therefore, that the foreign Consuls exercised previously to this Treaty and Convention the same privileges in these Principalities as in Turkey, I do not think that they have been abrogated by any provisions in these instruments; although it may be contended, with considerable plausibility, that the general effect of these Treaties is to place these Principalities, saving the suzerainty of the Porte, upon the same footing as other independent Christian States, and that such States have always a right to deny to the officer of a foreign State the exercise of jurisdiction over any person, of whatever country he may be, within their territories.

It seems to me a matter of much importance that the High Contracting Powers who signed the Treaty should arrive at a common determination as to whether their Consuls are, or are not, since the passing of that Treaty and Convention, entitled to exercise the same jurisdiction as they now exercise in the Ottoman dominions properly so called.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 224.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Minister at Athens (No. 22), reporting the result of his endeavours, in conjunction with his French and Russian colleagues, to effect a settlement of the long-pending claims of Turkish subjects to certain lands near Thebes.

And Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should perceive that M. Photiades, in his note of the 3rd of January, questions the opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown upon this matter; and he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would again take this case into our consideration, together with the former papers, and report to your Lordship any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying note, with its inclosures, from the Turkish Ambassador at this Court, respecting the course pursued by the Representatives of England, France, and Russia at Athens, with reference to the claim of certain Turkish subjects to lands near Thebes; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those referred to us on the 7th February, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Turkish Government makes out no case for the intervention of the Protecting Powers. The Rapport of January 23, 1865, by the Representatives of the three Protecting Powers, appears to us to be perfectly just and clear.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 225.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th of February ultimo, stating that, with reference to that part of our Report of the 10th of October last which relates to the project of a system of procedure to be observed in judging offences committed against the regulations of the European Commission of the Danube, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosure from Major Stokes (No. 2), relative to the alterations proposed to be made in the original project; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason to object to the alterations proposed by Major Stokes to be made in the original project; but without knowing more than we do at present about the nature of the Public Act to which Major Stokes refers as about to be signed, we are unable to judge whether such Public Act will suffice to give the necessary validity to this and the former regulations; all which should, in our opinion, be incorporated in or confirmed by some proper legislative Act of the authority competent to make laws for that part of the Principalities in which the River Danube below Isaktcha is situate.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 226.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 1.)

Doctors' Commons, April 29, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the correspondence which has passed between Sir Henry Bulwer, Her Majesty's Ambassador at Constantinople, who is now in Egypt, and the Foreign Office, relative to the Traffic in Slaves which is carried on in the Soudan, and from the Turkish ports in the Red Sea to Egypt; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether the measures which the Egyptian Government proposes to enforce for putting a stop to the Traffic in Slaves from Soudan, and which are embodied in a note from Cherif Pasha, inclosed in Sir H. Bulwer's despatch No. 30 of the 23rd ultimo, are such as can be approved by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is, of course, most desirable that every facility should be given by European Powers to the honest endeavours of the Egyptian Government to suppress the Traffic in Slaves carried on from the Soudan through the White River. The real difficulty of the case consists in giving this facility without surrendering any of the privileges which at present protect Europeans from being subject to the administration of Mahometan criminal law.

To that part of the Cherif Pasha's proposal which relates to seizing vessels which come from the White River laden with slaves, I see no objection in theory; though upon this, as upon the other proposals of his Excellency, it would be expedient that Her Majesty's Government should have an opinion from some Consular officer or person of practical experience, more especially as Sir H. Bulwer expresses no opinion of his own upon the project of Cherif Pasha,

With respect to the jurisdiction over European persons contained in these proposals, it seems to me reasonable that a foreigner who is not placed under the protection of any European State should not be allowed to claim, so far as any question of property which may arise out of the seizure of one of these slavers is concerned, the protection of a European State on the sole ground that he is a foreigner. I think also that no foreign Agent should be allowed to place an Egyptian subject under his protection except in the capacity of dragoman or cawas. I think also that the demand of the Pasha with respect to the restriction of arms on board of boats ascending the river ought to be conceded.

With respect to Europeans whom the Pasha describes as "résidant au Soudan ou s'y trouvant en voyage," &c., who commit acts of violence against the property or persons of Egyptian subjects in these regions, it also appears to me that the demand of the Pasha is reasonable, which in substance I understand to be that they shall be subject, in the first instance, to measures of prevention or arrest by the Egyptian local authorities, provided that these authorities so acting place themselves in immediate communication with the Agent or Consul of the State to which the accused person belongs, and that all measures relating to his trial or punishment be taken in accordance with usage and Treaty Capitulations subsisting between the Porte and Christian States.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 227.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received May 16.)

Doctors' Commons, May 13, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying letter from Mr. Watkin (dated the 11th instant), together with a letter from the party therein referred to, requesting, under the circumstances, and for the purposes stated by him, that he may be furnished with a letter of introduction to the Turkish Ambassador; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That I see no reason why a simple letter of introduction to the Turkish Ambassador should not be given to Mr. Norris Buckley.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 228.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 19, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a correspondence which had passed between Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge of the Supreme Consular Court at Constantinople, the Board of Trade, and the Foreign Office, relative to a judgment of the Ottoman Court of Admiralty against the steamer "Stella," for running down and sinking a Turkish vessel, and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon, with reference more especially to the proceedings of Mr. Robinson, the owner of the "Stella," in questioning the justice of the claim made against him, and expressing his intention of resisting its enforcement.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to be the opinion of Sir E. Hornby that the "Stella" was properly tried and condemned in damages for this collision. Assuming this to be the case (and we have no evidence whatever before us on the subject), the enforcement of the sentence of the Ottoman Court ought to be aided by any means in the power of Her Majesty's Government. But we are not aware of any means which are in their power. The case of the "Harold" is referred to, but we have no information respecting the proceedings of the Board of Trade in that case.

The proceeding against the "Stella" was what is technically called a proceeding in rem, and the vessel herself was liable to be seized and sold for the payment of the damages in which she was condemned, and the proper course to have pursued (according to the analogy of proceedings in the Admiralty Courts of this country) would have been to have detained her pending the trial, or to have taken bail for the proper amount of damages. As this was not done, there may probably be no other legal remedy than for the parties to whom the money is due under the judgment of the Turkish Court, to bring an action for its recovery in the Courts of this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 229.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 31.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Sir Henry Bulwer, observing on Sir Edmund Hornby's despatch of January 7 and upon the instructions to Mr. Consul-General and Judge Logie of March 7, founded upon our Report of February 7.

Mr. Hammond was pleased to inclose these despatches, as well as the instructions to Mr. Consul-General Murray of February 9, 1848, and other papers, including despatches from Mr. Consul-General Colquhoun, No. 83 of August 12, 1861, and No. 24 of February 24, 1865, and a Report from Mr. Logie, No. 22 of April 11, 1865, and to state that the letter from Mr. Murray of August 5, 1862, referred to by Mr. Colquhoun, unfortunately cannot be found.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that these papers were now sent to us with reference to the question raised by Sir Henry Bulwer, and the recommendations which he has made to the Pasha of Egypt with respect to the improvement of the judicial system in Egypt; and Mr. Hammond was further pleased to add, for convenience of reference, a copy of the Capitulations with the Porte and of the late Order in Council, and to request that having considered these papers we would report to your Lordship our opinion as to the propriety of sending any instructions to Sir Henry Bulwer as to the question raised by him whether those questions are to be treated with the Porte at Constantinople or with the Pasha in Egypt.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th of May instant, stating that with reference to his letter to us of the 5th instant, inclosing various despatches and papers respecting criminal jurisdiction in Egypt, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit therewith some further papers on the same subject, and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with the papers then before us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the suggestions of his Excellency Sir Henry Bulwer for the improvement of the judicial system in Egypt appear to us in every respect proper to be adopted.

We have the honour to express, in accordance with our former Reports upon this subject, our entire agreement with the opinion expressed by Sir Henry Bulwer as to the principle upon which our Consular jurisdiction should be exercised in the Ottoman dominions, namely, that it should be exercised in strict accordance with the provisions of the Treaty Capitulations between Great Britain and the Porte; though, at the same time, we adhere to the opinion expressed in our last Report, that we should have a right to be placed on the same footing as other Christian States with respect to the practical interpretation of these provisions by the Ottoman authorities. We are of opinion that instructions should be sent to Sir Henry Bulwer to endeavour to procure by negotiation the introduction into the judicial system of Egypt of those improvements which he suggests. It would appear to us that this negotiation should be carried on, in the first instance at all events, with the Pasha of Egypt, and that the assistance of the Porte at Constantinople should not be invoked, unless in case of necessity. We venture, however, to suggest that great latitude of discretion should be left to Sir Henry Bulwer, as to the mode and manner in which he should endeavour to carry into effect the general instructions of Her Majesty's Government on this important subject. His Excellency seems to be fully impressed with what appears to us to be the true doctrine relative to the whole question, namely, that it should be the object of the British authorities in the Ottoman dominions to endeavour by co-operation, as far as it is practicable, with the Ottoman authorities to raise the tone and improve the principles upon which the administration of justice is carried on by those authorities, and not to use the privileges conceded to Christian States as a means of enabling their subjects who have committed offences or crimes to escape, in the conflict of two jurisdictions, from the punishment which is their due.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 230.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 6.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, June 6, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me the accompanying telegram, dated the 3rd instant, received from Her Majesty's Ambassador Constantinople, requesting to be informed as to whether British authority has the power to take and deliver up a Venetian seaman on board a British vessel, deserted from the Austrian navy; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion as to what answer should be returned to Sir Henry Bulwer.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that the British authority at Constantinople has not the power to deliver up this deserter from the Austrian ship of war.

The only power which a British authority can have in this matter must be derived from the 15th and 16th Vict., cap. 26, and the Order in Council of October 16, 1852, passed in consequence of that statute (9 Hertslet, 134).

1865

The Statute and the Order in Council apply only to deserters from Austrian merchant-ships, and also "when such ships are within Her Majesty's dominions or the territories of the East India Company."

The deserter in this case is from an Austrian man of war in a foreign port.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 231.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 6, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Constantinople (No. 252), containing observations respecting the proceedings of the Representatives of the Great Powers at a Conference held at Constantinople on the subject of the observance of the Capitulations and Treaty engagements in the Danubian Principalities; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion on the view taken by Mr. Stuart on the question referred to in point No. 5 of the Internuncio's Report, viz., the delivery of foreigners to their Consuls after conviction.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report.

That we are clearly of opinion that the view taken by Mr. Stuart with respect to the delivery of foreigners to their Consuls after conviction for offences against the local law of the Principalities was correct as regards British subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 232.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received June 22.)

Doctors' Commons, June 21, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 3rd ultimo, from Mr. Elmslie, setting forth the grounds on which Mr. de Mattos prefers a claim against the Porte for interest on a sum of 2,876*l.* 16*s.*, being the amount paid to him by the Turkish Government for coals supplied to the Imperial Gas Works at Constantinople in the year 1859. A despatch from Sir H. Bulwer relative to this claim was also transmitted; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion as to the instructions which should be addressed to Sir H. Bulwer with regard to this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am of opinion that, upon the facts stated in these papers, Mr. de Mattos is entitled to interest during the interval which occurred between his giving notice to the Porte that he would demand it and his receiving the principal sum.

Mr. de Mattos contracted with the Porte to deliver a certain quantity of coals at a certain price, on the express condition that they were paid for within twenty-one days from the date of their delivery. Mr. de Mattos faithfully fulfilled his part of the contract. The Porte did not, however, fulfil their part. They took the coals, but refused to pay, and on the express ground that they had no money. After repeated and ineffectual applications for his principal, Mr. de Mattos gave the Porte notice that he should claim interest. It required the intervention of Her Majesty's Representative to obtain the bare price of the coals for Mr. de Mattos.

None of these facts are denied, and it is only consistent with the elementary principles of justice that reasonable interest should, in these circumstances, be paid to Mr. de Mattos; principles, moreover, which it appears are recognized by the lex loci contractûs, by the commercial tribunals of Constantinople in the case of the contracts of private individuals.

The question of the amount is more difficult, and though the rate of interest current at the time in the country furnishes, strictly speaking, perhaps the proper legal standard, Her Majesty's Government are not obliged to demand that amount on behalf of Mr. de Mattos; and probably it would be expedient to require a less sum than that of 12 per cent., however true it may be that this was the current rate of interest at the time at Constantinople.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 233.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 22, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating, with reference to the opinion given by us in November last on the draft Order in Council respecting jurisdiction in the Levant, that to prevent question, a Bill should be brought into Parliament to declare and enact that in the Foreign Jurisdiction Act, the term "British Colony" includes all Her Majesty's possessions abroad, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of a Bill for that object which has been prepared under the direction of the Solicitor of the Treasury; and to request that we would take the same into our early consideration, and report whether the Bill may be introduced into Parliament.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and we have the honour to report—

That we think it will be proper and desirable that this Bill should be introduced and passed.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 234.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received August 14.)

Lincoln's Inn, August 14, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, a correspondence with Messrs. Cavan, Lubbock, and Co., of Leadenhall-street, and with Her Majesty's Consul-General and Judge at Constantinople,* relative to the request preferred by that firm for the interference of Her Majesty's Government in the matter of a fraud alleged to have been practised upon them by a Mr. James Gout, a merchant at Smyrna; and Mr. Murray was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to the directions and commands of your Lordship we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there can be little doubt that Mr. Gout is endeavouring to perpetrate a gross fraud, through the medium of a fraudulent bankruptcy, upon the Messrs. Lubbock; and upon a consideration of the whole case, and of the facilities afforded for such frauds by the usage and practice of acquiring and holding landed property in Turkey by Europeans, so clearly stated by Her Majesty's Judge at Constantinople, we think that Her Majesty's

---

* Messrs. Cavan, Lubbock and Co., June 12; to Consul-General Logie, No. 12, Judicial; Consul-General Logie, No. 41, Judicial, 1865.

1865

Government may properly, and in aid of justice, support an application made by the Messrs. Lubbock to the authorities at Constantinople to obtain what is termed an Imperial Iradé on the report of the Supreme Council of Justice, by means of which a valid sale of the machineries and factories may be effected for the benefit of the general body of the creditors, without the consent of the nominal owner.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 235.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received September 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, September 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 1st of September instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches as noted in the margin,[*] on the subject of the objectionable conditions introduced by the Moldo-Wallachian Government into contracts with foreigners for the sale of timber, the produce of the forests belonging to the public domains; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that this 12th Article of the conditions of the sale of timber justifies the kind of remonstrance against it which Mr. Green, acting under the directions of Sir H. Bulwer, has made to the Moldo-Wallachian Government; at the same time, it would be difficult to deny the abstract right of that Government to attach to the sale of timber belonging to the State a condition of this kind, however harsh and discourteous to the foreigner.

It must be observed, also, that this question is one of the many which seem to be perpetually occurring, in which it is not easy to pronounce how far the Moldo-Wallachian Government is autonomous, and even acts irrespectively of the authority of the Porte.

We venture to think that it would be very expedient that, in matters like this, which call for remonstrance, the Representatives of the great European Powers should act together and jointly complain to the Moldo-Wallachian Government or to the Porte, or both, as the case may require.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 236.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received November 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, November 6, 1865.

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to my Report of the 19th of September, 1864, relative to a claim preferred by M. Condopoulo, a Russian subject, for compensation on account of losses sustained by him owing to the manner in which the British Vice Consul at Toultcha has disposed of a vessel and cargo belonging to him which had been run down in the Danube by Her Majesty's ship "Weser," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me, together with the previous papers[†] the subsequent correspondence[‡] which has taken place in regard to this case. That the last despatch from Sir H. Bulwer, No. 174 of the 13th instant, incloses a copy of the award of the arbitrators who were appointed in accordance with my suggestion to decide various questions arising out of this case; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take the inclosed correspondence into consideration, and report to your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

---

[*] Mr. Green, No. 46, May 24, and No. 67, August 14; Sir H. Bulwer, No. 99, July 22, 1865.

[†] Sir H. Bulwer, No. 21, March 24, and No 264, August 27, 1864.

[‡] To Mr. Stuart, No. 2, September 26, 1864; Mr. Stuart, No. 50, January 28; Sir H. Bulwer, No. 174, October 13, 1865.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is much to be lamented that the questions put were not answered categorically, and in their order, by the Arbitrators. They have in part mistaken their duty, which was not to give a judgment, but to find facts upon which Her Majesty's Government was afterwards to decide.

If, however, they had in their judgment substantially answered the questions propounded to them, the form of their doing so would be of comparatively small importance. A very material question, however, appears to me unanswered; the question in substance was, What would an intelligent and properly appointed agent for the Russian owner have done in the circumstances, which the Consul, acting as self-appointed agent, did not do? Because the measure of this difference ought to furnish, in some degree at least, the measure of the compensation which this unnecessary intermeddling of the Consul has entailed upon Her Majesty's Government.

If it is meant to be said that the award of 428*l.* 3*s.* expresses that difference, that is, that a proper intelligent agent would have saved that sum to the Russian owner by measures which the Consul ought to have taken, but did not take, then I am afraid it will be difficult to escape from the conclusion that this sum should be paid to Condopoulo.

I think the arbiters should be required to give a clear answer to the question to which I have adverted.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

United States.

No. 237.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 6.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 6, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd January instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 2nd instant, with a despatch and private letter from Lord Monck, dated December 15, 1864, respecting the measures which might be adopted in Canada for restraining persons who seek an asylum in that country from the commission of acts calculated to compromise the neutrality of Her Majesty's dominions; and to request that we would take these papers into our immediate consideration and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience, and at all events before next Saturday, with our opinion on Lord Monck's suggestions; and that we would state whether it occurred to us to suggest the enactment of any laws, or the grant of any powers to the Governor-General, which would be more effectual for the purpose than those which Lord Monck appears to contemplate.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that your Lordship is inclined to think that the preparation of chemical materials, to be used for the purpose of burning any property of a friendly and neighbouring State, should also be made subject to penalty; and, further, that your Lordship would wish to be informed whether it would not be right for you to address a letter to Mr. Mason, the Agent for the Confederate States, who is now at Paris, complaining of the conduct of the Confederate Government in projecting hostile expeditions from Canada.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state, that if, however, we should consider the St. Albans raiders as guilty of robbery and murder, such a letter might not be expedient.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we retain the opinion expressed in our last Report on this subject, that it is most expedient that the Governor-General of Canada should be armed, with as little delay as possible, with such extraordinary powers as may enable him to deal promptly and effectually with the difficulties incident to the present emergency.

And we are clearly of opinion that he should be furnished with these extraordinary powers by an Act of the Provincial Legislature, and not of the Imperial Parliament.

It appears to us that these powers should embrace two objects; viz., the sending of suspected aliens out of the province, and the seizure of suspected vessels on the British lakes, and munitions of war of every kind; in which category we think (according to your Lordship's suggestions) might be included chemical materials adapted to and prepared for the burning of property.

For the first object, we agree with his Excellency Lord Monck that the 11 Vict., cap. 20, contains provisions which the Law Officers of Canada could easily adapt to the exigencies of the present emergency; and for the latter object, we think the Act of Congress referred to by Lord Monck, as well as that of March 10, 1838 (to which we referred in our former Report), passed for the purpose of strengthening the hands of the United States' Government, during the Canadian rebellion, to prevent the invasion of Canada by subjects of the United States, would furnish a very proper precedent and model; and we think it especially desirable that the operation of the proposed Canadian statute should be limited either to a short period of two or three years (as the United States' statute was) or to the duration of the present civil war in America.

We cannot safely advise your Lordship that the persons termed the "St. Albans raiders," if they possessed (as they professed to do) commissions from the Confederate Government authorising what they did, could be legally treated as guilty of robbery and murder; but as this is a question which must depend, in every particular case, upon the evidence which may be produced for the purpose of giving to the act done the character of a warlike operation, we think it would scarcely be expedient for your Lordship, on the present occasion, to address a letter of remonstrance to Mr. Mason, founded upon the assumption that the recent outrage was perpetrated under the instructions of his Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 238.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 24th ultimo (? 29th June, 1864), he was directed to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing copies of further correspondence respecting the Hong Kong Neutrality Ordinance; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether the Ordinance as now amended is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Ordinance as now amended is right and proper.

With deference to Mr. Justice Ball, we think it ought to appear on the face of the Ordinance, and not be left to be inferred only upon the principle of necessary implication, that the offence created is one which must be committed within the limits of the Colonial jurisdiction. We agree that in many cases this would be apparent, although not expressed; but we hesitate to assume that the present is one of those cases—the peculiar nature of the subject matter of legislation, and the express mention of a ship within five miles from the Colony being duly considered. There is no necessary legal presumption against an inadvertent excess of its powers by a Colonial Legislature.

---

* Colonial Office, June 1; to Colonial Office, July 4, 1864.

We entertain no doubt at all that the Ordinance will be valid and effectual in law if passed in the form now proposed, although a ship lying within five miles of the Colony is still mentioned.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 239.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 11, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a copy of a letter from the Treasury, dated the 10th instant, respecting the shipment to New York of certain steam-launches for the service of the Government of the United States; and to request that we would take this paper into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any, and what, steps should be taken by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this paper into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as we understand the facts stated in the letter from the Board of Customs to the Treasury, the present case is simply one of an intended importation into New York from this country, of certain wooden boats capable of being used for warlike operations (though not, we suppose, capable of being used for cruizing on the high seas), and which we assume, from their construction and denomination as "launches," to be intended by their importers to be so used, these boats being shipped like ordinary merchandize on board a steamer or merchant-vessel bound for New York.

Assuming (according to the information given to the officer of the Board of Customs though it does not at present appear whether that information rests upon legal evidence), that these boats have been ordered by the Federal Government from an English firm, and are being shipped to New York on account of that Government, it does not appear to us that Her Majesty's Government have at present any evidence, or even information, of an "equipment, furnishing, fitting out, or arming," as distinguished from building and sale, which acts (i. e. building or sale) alone were held by all the Judges in the "Alexandra" case to constitute no offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act.

The case therefore seems to resolve itself into the mere importation of articles, contraband of war, by the United States' Government into their own territory from this country, and we do not think that any steps can at present properly be taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 240.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 9th instant, and its inclosures, respecting the seizure of the steamer "Mary" (formerly called the "Alexandra"), on the ground that she was being equipped as a vessel of war for the service of the so-styled Confederate States; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon as soon as we conveniently can, and at all events before Saturday next, when the mail is dispatched for the Bahamas.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Governor of the Bahamas has acted properly in seizing the "Mary" (or "Alexandra"), which we understand to be a vessel still navigated under British papers.

There seems little, if any, room for doubt that the 7th section of the Foreign Enlistment Act has been violated by the shipment of arms, &c., in this vessel at Bermuda; and we incline to agree with the Attorney-General of the Bahamas, that even if the only act of equipment or fitting-out, done in that Colony, should prove to be the preparation of additional sleeping-berths for the crew (the United States' Consul, in his letter of the 5th of December, 1864, alleged that several boxes of shell had been put on board in the harbour of Nassau, but of this we do not at present find any evidence), such preparation of sleeping-berths ought to be held a further violation of the statute in the Bahamas. The vessel, both when she left Bermuda and when at Nassau, was (as we understand the facts) so equipped and armed as to be capable of cruizing with effect against merchant-vessels; and the Confederate flag, &c., and the commission in blank, and forms of seamen's pay-receipt, and muster-rolls, &c., found on board her, with the card and effects of Lieutenant Hamilton, appear to us to be quite sufficient (unless otherwise explained, which we think most improbable) to prove an actual destination for the war-service of the Confederate States.

We think it will be proper to allege and prove, as a distinct and separate charge, "equipment," "fitting-out," and "arming," within Her Majesty's dominions at Bermuda, as well as further equipment, &c., in the Bahamas. The ruling of Judge Lees, in the case of the "Oreto," that no evidence could be given of acts done elsewhere than in the Bahamas, except for the purpose of explaining acts done within that Colony, seems to us to be incorrect, and to have arisen from a confusion between a criminal proceeding in personam (which, under the 4th section of the Act, must be taken before a Court having local jurisdiction where the offence was committed) and a proceeding for condemnation in rem, which, under the 7th section, seems to us to be competent, wherever the ship, previously forfeited by any act working a forfeiture under that section, may happen to be found within Her Majesty's dominions. The question to be tried in such a case is, the title of the Crown by forfeiture, which, under the Imperial statute, is perfect, if the prohibited act has been done in any part of Her Majesty's dominions. It is not said in the 7th section (and we think it would be unreasonable to imply) that the subsequent seizure, &c., must take place in the same part of Her Majesty's dominions in which the act making the forfeiture was done; and still less that the Court which has to try the question of title to the vessel between the Crown and any claimant who may come forward, is not at liberty to receive allegations or evidence of such acts, wherever done, as, under the Imperial statute, would vest in the Crown an actual title by forfeiture at the time of seizure. The effect of such a construction would be, that a ship forfeited in law to the Crown would be delivered for ever from all the effects of that forfeiture, if she could once pass from one part of Her Majesty's dominions to another, without afterwards returning to the place from whence she came. If such a doctrine should still be adhered to by the learned Judge at Nassau, we think it would be necessary to appeal from his Judgment to Her Majesty in Council; but if an adverse decision should be pronounced upon the general merits, it must be left to the Colonial Attorney-General, who will have the evidence before him, to determine whether an appeal should be prosecuted or not.

We think that the course of proceeding which the Attorney-General of the Bahamas proposes to follow is judicious and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 241.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 13.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 3rd instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a further letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 4th instant, inclosing a despatch from Viscount Monck, suggesting whether an Order in Council should not be passed, suspending the operation of the Imperial Act respecting the extradition of offenders.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that while sending for consideration the draft of such order, Mr. Secretary Cardwell suggests certain doubts as to the effect which it would have on the measures now taking by Viscount Monck in the matter of the St. Albans raiders.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take this letter and its inclosures into our immediate consideration, and to state that, as Her Majesty would hold a Council at Osborne on Saturday then next, the Order in Council might then be submitted for Her Majesty's sanction, if we should be of opinion that it would be advisable that such an Order should be at once passed.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 5th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of that morning, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for reference the accompanying volumes (Laws of Canada, vol. viii; Consolidated Statutes, Canada; Statutes of Canada, 1861), containing the Acts alluded to in Lord Monck's despatch No. 196 of December 15; and to request that these volumes might be returned as soon as done with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, if it were necessary for us to express a positive opinion upon the question whether the decision of Judge Coursal was right or wrong, we should desire to take further time for consideration. It may (perhaps) be a tenable view (though certainly not free from difficulty), that the suspension of the Imperial Statute (6 and 7 Vict., cap 76), effected by the Order in Council of 8th January, 1850, consequent on the passing of the Canadian Statute 12 Vict., cap. 19 (30th May, 1849), is still in operation, notwithstanding the passing of the Act 22 Vict., cap. 29 (or cap. 89 of the Consolidated Statutes of 1859), and 24 Vict., cap. 6 (18th May, 1861); which two Statutes may, perhaps, be regarded as consistent with the "continuance in force" of the Act of 1849, though, by the former of them, it was converted into a chapter of the Consolidated Statutes, and by the latter amended, in certain not important particulars: otherwise we should have great difficulty in arriving at the conclusion that the Canadian Statute 24 Vict., cap. 6, could be regarded as being in concurrent operation with the Imperial statute 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76, on the ground that it was merely subsidiary and auxiliary to that Statute. Taking, however, into consideration the doubts which may be felt upon these points, and all the other circumstances of the case, we have thought it, on the whole, most expedient that a new Order in Council should be made, to take effect from the time of its promulgation, by his Excellency the Governor-General of Canada, in Canada. With this view, we have taken the liberty of making some alterations in the draft Order submitted to us, which (so altered) we approve.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

1865

No. 242.

The Attorney-General to Mr. Hammond.—(Received January 12.)

Dear Sir, Lincoln's Inn, January 12, 1865.

THE Solicitor-General and myself have been talking over the case of the steam-launches said to be ordered by the United States' Government from a firm at Millwall, several of which were stated to be now on their way to America on board a British ship in the Channel, in a letter from you (marked Most pressing), on which the Law Officers reported yesterday.

The Solicitor-General suggests (and I agree with him) that although we did not find, in the facts stated, any primâ facie case of violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, the facts may nevertheless deserve some notice from the Government (if true), having regard more especially to the tone assumed by the United States' authorities towards this country as to similar matters. Perhaps Lord Russell might not think it inexpedient to write to Mr. Adams, stating what the facts reported to Her Majesty's Government are, and inquiring whether these steam-launches have been really ordered by his Government, and if so, for what purpose.

Believe me, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.

No. 243.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th of January instant, stating that, with reference to his letter of the 9th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 11th instant from Mr. Lafone, owner of the "Mary" (or "Alexandra"), and to request that your Lordship might be favoured with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to it.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That an answer should be sent to Mr. Lafone, to the effect that the "Mary" (or "Alexandra") has been seized at Nassau, under the authority of the Colonial Government, on the ground of her having violated the provisions of the Foreign Enlistment Act, and that the validity of the seizure will be tried in the ordinary course of law.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 244.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th of January instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st of October, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from Mr. Heslop,† claiming compensation from the Government of the United States for his imprisonment at Baltimore, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and inform your Lordship whether we see any reason to alter the opinion which we had previously come to with regard to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Heslop (who, we observe, was tried and acquitted as a citizen of the United States) does not furnish us with any reason to alter the opinion which we had the honour to express in our former Report; on the contrary, it strengthens the main ground of that opinion, namely, that Mr. Heslop has so completely domiciled himself in the territory of the United States as to place him, with respect to any injuries committed upon his property, in the same category as that of any subject of the United States. It makes no difference, in that respect, whether the place where he is settled is part of the territory in the actual possession (as we before supposed) of the Confederates, or (as Mr. Heslop now states it to be) of their opponents.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 245.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 16.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 14, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th of December, 1864, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Lord Lyons and Mr. Burnley* respecting the regulations recently issued by the United States' Treasury Department for "the purchase of products of the insurrectionary States on Government account;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th January instant, stating that with reference to Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th ultimo he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a further despatch and its inclosure from Mr. Burnley† respecting the regulations for trade with Southern ports.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are not sure that we fully understand the purpose and scope of these regulations.

If it be intended by them to effect a relaxation of the belligerent's right of blockade, the benefit of which relaxation is to extend equally to neutrals and belligerents, we see no reason for any objection to them on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The language of Article 5 of the Executive Order, and of the General Order No. 42 of the Navy Department, at the foot of it, gives rise to an apprehension that these instruments may be construed or acted upon so as to enable persons residing in Confederate ports, which are blockaded, to carry on, under a system of licences, a trade with the specified ports and places in the United States, from which trade neutrals will (by the continued operation of the blockade) at the same time be excluded. Such a system could not lawfully be introduced and acted upon by a belligerent without vitiating the blockade; and any attempt to do so (maintaining the blockade) would be in fraud of neutral rights.

It may be, however, that these regulations are intended to apply only to ports which are, in law, not blockaded, being in the possession of the United States' forces; but as to which they have, nevertheless, declared that they are still to be regarded as under blockade (using that term in an improper and inaccurate sense), and with which they only permit a limited and restricted trade.

We have already had the honour to report, that though it is competent to the United States' Government to make what regulations they please with respect to the trade of the ports in their possession, it is not competent to them to enforce such orders

---

* Lord Zetland, September 5; to Lord Lyons, No. 423, September 7; Mr. Burnley, No. 77, September 30; to Lord Zetland, November 10; to Mr. Burnley, No. 507, November 10; Lord Lyons, No. 697, November 29, 1864.

† Mr. Heslop, December 6, 1864.

* Lord Lyons, No. 533, July 26; Mr. Burnley, No. 129, December 9, 1864.

† Mr. Burnley, No. 158, December 23, 1864.

1865

by the exercise of the belligerent right of blockade; inasmuch as it is inconsistent with the nature of a blockade that it should be applied to ports or places under the control, and in the actual possession, of the blockading Power. Upon the whole, we think that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should be instructed to ascertain, exercising his own discretion as to the means of doing so, whether these Regulations and Executive Order are or are not intended to have the effect of opening to the belligerent a trade from which the neutral is to be shut out.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 246.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 16, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying Memorial from Mr. E. E. Sewell, complaining of his having been improperly enlisted into the United States' army; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the story is so strange, if not incredible, that the United States' Government could hardly be expected to recognize any claim founded upon it, in the absence of the person making it, whom they ought to have an opportunity of examining.

We think that this person should have made application to Her Majesty's Representative at Washington, who might have procured an inquiry to be instituted into the alleged facts of the case; and we do not understand why Mr. Webb, a merchant at New York, and the employer of Sewell at the time when he says he was so strangely kidnapped, has taken no steps on his behalf.

We do not advise Her Majesty's Government now to make any claim upon the United States' Government in consequence of this petition.

We have, &c.
Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 247.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 17.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 17, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that with reference to the various questions arising out of the St. Albans raid, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Home Office dated the 10th instant, and its inclosures, respecting the case of Thomas Kain, whose extradition was refused by the Government of the United States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the case of Kain does not appear to us to call for any material observations, in addition to those we had the honour to offer in our former Reports on the subject of these Canadian "raiders."

But it certainly furnishes historical proof that the United States' Judge, in 1852, thought himself bound to construe the Treaty and the Act of Congress quite as strictly and as technically as the Canadian Judge, in 1864, has construed the British Statute in the instance of these Canadian "raiders." Nor can the offence of these men possibly be put higher than that of Kain, who, in consequence of a technical error, escaped trial (and perhaps execution) as a murderer.

So far, the case may perhaps be useful hereafter, in future diplomatic communications with the Government of the United States, but at present it does not occur to us that any official use can be made of it.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 248.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 23.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 20, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us two letters dated the 14th instant from Mr. Adams, calling the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the proceedings of the "Hawk" and the "City of Richmond," vessels alleged to be employed in the Confederate service, and also as to certain alleged Confederate enlistments. Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a letter from the Home Office inclosing a copy of a police report relative to the "City of Richmond;" and to request that we would take these papers into immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 19th instant, transmitting a further letter from the Home Office, and its inclosures, respecting the "Hawk."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to find in these papers any such evidence of a violation of the Foreign Enlistment Act, either by the equipment or fitting out of the ships "City of Richmond" and "Hawk, or either of them, or by the enlistment or procurement of men in this country for the Confederate war service, as would justify us in advising Her Majesty's Government to take any steps in consequence of the representations now made to your Lordship by Mr. Adams.

It does not at present appear that either the "Hawk" or the "City of Richmond" is intended for the war-service of the Confederate States; still less that there has been any illegal equipment, &c., in this country of either vessel.

As to the men (the greater part of whom have already sailed for Nassau by the "City of Richmond"), it seems to be probable that they came together for some purpose connected with the war service of the belligerents. But it is not shown, either that any particular persons among them, being natural-born subjects of Her Majesty, have enlisted in that service, or have left this country with a view to such enlistment, or that any of them (whether natural-born subjects of Her Majesty or not) have been induced to enlist in this country, or to go from hence for the purpose of enlistment, by any particular person or persons now amenable to Her Majesty's jurisdiction.

The facts stated, with regard to such of these men as belonged to the "Florida," rather lead us to the conclusion that, when they arrived in this country from Bahia, they were already (whether subjects of Her Majesty or not) in the Confederate service; and that no new enlistment or engagement in this country need be supposed, in order to account for their coming together, and going out to a port, from whence they may be able to proceed to the Confederate States.

It will be remembered that when the particular facts relative to the engagement of the crew of the "Florida" were formerly brought before us, on the occasion of the presence of some of them at Liverpool, it was found that they had been engaged and shipped at Mobile, in the Confederate States, under circumstances which did not seem to us to justify the expectation that they could be successfully prosecuted for any offence against the Foreign Enlistment Act. Whether the men now in question were part of the same crew, or were enlisted for the "Florida" at some other place and under different circumstances, does not at all appear.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 249.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 25, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers,* respecting the case of Mr. Rawson, who alleges that he has been subjected to the most cruel ill-usage by officers of the United States' Government; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether, under the circumstances therein set forth, anything can properly be done on Mr. Rawson's behalf.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That, as the strong presumption of insanity which arises from a persual of this poor man's petition is confirmed by the deliberate opinion of Mr. Consul Archibald, we can only advise your Lordship that Her Majesty's Government ought to take no steps in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 250.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 27.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 26, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the inclosed paper dated the 24th December, 1864, purporting to be a Proclamation of the President of the so-called Confederate States of America, acknowledging and claiming as a belligerent operation on behalf of the Confederate States the act of Bennett G. Burley, in attempting in 1864 to capture the steamer "Michigan," with a view to release numerous Confederate prisoners detained in captivity on Johnson's Island in Lake Erie. That no official account has been received at the Foreign Office of the attack on the "Michigan;" but that we should see by the inclosed despatches that the extradition of Burley and others has been demanded in consequence of their participation in an attack on two other American steamers on Lake Erie, the "Philo-Parsons" and "Island Queen." But that supposing the Court in Canada to consider the attack in question as an act of robbery, and not of war, the offence of the Confederate Government towards a neutral Power seems to remain an act tending to involve Her Majesty in hostility with the United States.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit what purports to be a despatch from the Confederate Secretary of State to the Confederate Secretary of the Navy, which was published in the "Index" newspaper on the 29th of December last, containing instructions for the guidance of the Commanders of Confederate cruizers; and to state that these instructions are nearly identical with those contained in the paper received from the French Ambassador, which was submitted for our consideration on the 8th December, and called forth the instruction to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris contained in the inclosed despatch (No. 806), which was founded on our Report of the 15th December.

---

* Mr. Rawson, August 30; to Home Office, September 1; Home Office, September 20; to Mr. Burnley, No. 455; Lord Lyons, No. 710; Mr. Rawson, December 29, 1864; to Mr. Rawson, January 3; Mr. Rawson, January 6, 1865.

That, as we are aware of the numerous attempts made by the Confederate Government to evade the provisions of the municipal law of this country, in regard to procuring and fitting out, directly or indirectly, from British ports, vessels destined to carry on belligerent operations against the United States, Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these matters into consideration and inform your Lordship whether they do not furnish sufficient grounds for making to the Confederate Government through their Agent, Mr. Mason, who is now at Paris, a strong remonstrance against the conduct of that Government in these matters, and the wrong which it thereby does towards this country, and if we should be of opinion that such remonstrance may properly be addressed to the Confederate Government, Mr. Hammond was further to request that we would advise your Lordship as to the specific demands which should be made by Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the matters referred to in Mr. Hammond's letter do furnish sufficient grounds for making to the Confederate Government a strong remonstrance against, first, the authority avowed to be given by them (if the inclosed Proclamation is genuine) for acts which, notwithstanding the profession made of respect for the neutrality of this country, rendered necessary the use of British territory as a point of departure for the expeditions thereby contemplated; secondly, the conduct of officers and men commissioned by them in using British territory and British waters as a means of enabling them to carry on hostilities against a country with which Her Majesty is at peace; thirdly, the gross disregard of neutral rights contemplated by the instructions to the Captains of Confederate cruizers, which were the subject of your Lordship's despatch to Earl Cowley of the 21st December last; and, fourthly, the systematic violation and evasions of the laws of Great Britain, made for the protection of her neutrality, which have been practised by persons acting in Her Majesty's dominions as agents for the naval service of the Confederate States by fitting out vessels for that service in Her Majesty's ports, and manning them (to a great extent) with subjects of Her Majesty.

With respect to the two first mentioned grounds of remonstrance, the offence appears to us to be much aggravated by the character of the hostilities, and the contiguity of Her Majesty's territories with those of the United States, both those circumstances tending to implicate the Canadian Government in the consequences of these proceedings, and to give occasion for complaints and claims against them by the United States' Government for the injuries inflicted by attacks resembling those of banditti, and not of a regular military force, upon the lives and property of the subjects of a neighbouring Power in amity with Her Majesty.

We are, therefore, clearly of opinion that ample cause has been furnished by these "raids," and by the other circumstances above referred to, for a remonstrance of the gravest character to the Confederate Government; and we think that if such a remonstrance is made it will be proper for Her Majesty's Government to demand an assurance that, for the future, all practices similar to those which form the first, second, and third grounds of complaint shall be discontinued, and neither authorized nor countenanced or permitted (so far as their power extends) by the Confederate Government; and also that the instructions to cruizers above referred to shall not be put in force as to British shipping or other British property.

We doubt, however, very much whether the remonstrance should be addressed to Mr. Mason, at all events without first endeavouring to make it directly to the Confederate Government. That gentleman has not been recognized as a Diplomatic or accredited Agent of the Confederate Government in this country; and it seems to us that the effect of the remonstrance would be much increased if it were directed at once to the Government at Richmond. It is true that the blockade of the Southern coasts presents (and has on a former occasion presented) a difficulty in the way of taking this course; but we think it is one which another attempt should be made to overcome. If a formal demand were made to the United States' Government to allow the passage of a Special Commissioner for the express and avowed purpose of making this remonstrance, and were refused, we think that Her Majesty's Government would have serious reason to complain of such refusal; at all events such a refusal would weaken the force of any complaint directed against Her Majesty's Government on the ground of the abuse of Her Majesty's territorial rights by the Confederates.

1865

Moreover, such a refusal might go far to render necessary a more formal recognition of Mr. Mason than has hitherto taken place, and thereby to lighten the increasing inconvenience which Her Majesty's Government experience from the absence of any proper channel of communication with the Confederate Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 251.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received January 23.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 28, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us two letters dated the 21st and 25th instant, and their inclosures, from the Home Office, relative to a steam-vessel named the "Ajax," then at Kingstown, and supposed to be intended for the Confederate service; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our early convenience with our opinion whether this vessel can be detained either at Kingstown, or at Nassau, the alleged port of her destination.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the statements made by the men who were summoned before the Magistrate at Kingstown, as reported in the letter of Superintendent Armstrong of the 18th January, 1865, do not seem to amount to any legal evidence of the matters alleged by them; but they certainly appear to us to be calculated to excite suspicion, and would (if the ship had remained in British waters) have justified further inquiry. The conclusion, however, of the Government surveyors, who on the same day examined the vessel, appears to have been, that she was not properly fitted out for a ship of war or gun-boat. Their Report was accepted as satisfactory by the Collector of Customs at Dublin; and the Law Adviser of the Lord Lieutenant considered that there was nothing to warrant any steps being taken by the Executive in the matter. In this opinion we concur, there being in fact no evidence either of an illegal destination of the "Ajax" for the war service of the Confederates, or for any equipment, &c., within this realm, with a view to that service.

The ship having now sailed, all that can be done is, to report the circumstances connected with her to the Governor of the Bahamas, in order that she may be observed on her arrival there; and that if she should there receive any warlike equipments (and if there should be sufficient reason to believe those equipments to be for the service of the Confederate States) such proper measures may be taken as to the Governor and his legal advisers may seem necessary.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 252.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 31, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 21st instant, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office, relative to the course which the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick should pursue in regard to the arrest, with a view to their extradition, of persons charged with having taken part in the St. Alban's raid; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take this matter into early consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick and his advisers have taken a correct view of the requirements of the law, and of the duty of the Lieutenant-Governor in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 253.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, January 31, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 14th instant, stating that, with reference to that part of our Report of the 13th ultimo, respecting the St. Alban's raiders, in which we stated that "Lord Monck should be instructed to take the opinion of his legal advisers whether, upon the evidence and other information in possession of the Canadian Government, these persons may not properly be put upon their trial on a charge of misprision and violation of the Royal prerogative, by levying war from Her Majesty's dominions upon a friendly Power," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous correspondence and depositions, a letter from the Colonial Office, and its inclosures, from which we should see that, on the 29th of December, the Canadian Attorney and Solicitor-General reported to Lord Monck that they had "failed to find in the evidence anything to justify the arrest of the said parties for the violation of the Neutrality Law, or of any law of Canada;" and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with an explanation as to our views on the matter.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 14th instant, transmitting the accompanying despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 139, December 15), inclosing, with other documents, a Report of the proceedings before Judge Coursal in the case of the St. Alban's raid; and requesting that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the ground on which the prisoners were discharged.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion of the Canadian Law Officers, that there was nothing in the evidence produced before Mr. Coursal to justify the arrest of the parties whose extradition was demanded, or any of them, for the violation of any Imperial or other law in force in Canada. The depositions before Mr. Coursal were all exclusively directed to the proof of acts, alleged to be criminal, done at St. Albans, in the United States. It was not the object of the prosecutors to prove any offence (if any had been committed) against the laws of Canada; and no evidence was given of any act whatever done in Canada (except the arrests of the prisoners after their return from St. Albans); nor was any admission which could supply the want of such evidence made by the prisoners themselves.

It does not so much as appear from any part of this evidence that the "raiders" were ever in Canada before this attack upon the banks, &c., at St. Albans, much less that they had organized any military expedition there, or had proceeded from thence into the United States for the purpose of invading or making war upon the latter country.

We entertain no doubt (although direct authority, applicable to the precise case, may not be found in the books), that it is a misprision and a high misdemeanour at common law for any persons within the Queen's dominions (whether owing to Her Majesty a permanent or only a temporary allegiance) to conspire to invade from those dominions, and make war upon, the territories of a neighbouring friendly Power with whom Her Majesty is at peace, especially when Her Majesty has, by her Royal Proclamation, declared her Royal intention to be neutral in a war in which that friendly Power is engaged, and has commanded and warned all her subjects to abstain from taking any part in that war.

"The power," says Sir Mathew Hale" (1 P. C., 159), "of making war or peace is inter jura summa imperii; and, in England, is lodged singly in the King." Serjeant Hawkins (1 P. C., cap. 6, parts ii and iii) says, "It is also a high crime to disobey the King's lawful commands or prohibitions," of which he gives several examples, and "all contempts against the King's person or Government are very highly criminal, and punishable with fine and imprisonment," &c.; adding that "it is generally obvious to common sense in what cases, and to what degree, a man is guilty of this offence; and it would be endless to enumerate all the particulars." The general principle of law does not seem to us doubtful; but the proof of the facts necessary for its application to the circumstances of this case is at present wanting.

1865

We agree with the opinion of your Lordship, intimated in Mr. Hammond's letter (23rd December, 1864*) to Sir F. Rogers, that, for this purpose, everything depends on the precise facts. If, as alleged by the prisoners, the expedition was not organized in Canada; if Mr. Young acted under instructions received by him in August 1864, while at Chicago; and if it is not shown that the persons accused ever entered Canada before going to St. Albans, there can be no ground for imputing to them an offence against Canadian or Imperial law.

With reference to the grounds on which the prisoners were discharged by Judge Coursal, we have not arrived at entirely the same conclusions. We all agree that, as the Canadian Extradition Acts were passed "in lieu of" and "in substitution for" the "Imperial statute" (under the provision for that purpose made by the Imperial statute itself) they cannot properly be held to have a concurrent operation with the Imperial statute in Canada. The question, therefore, appears to us to be whether the suspension of the Imperial statute, by the Order in Council made on the passing of the Canadian Act of 1849, is still in force. And this depends upon the further question, whether the present Canadian Extradition Act ought to be regarded in law as identical with, and a continuance of, the Act of 1849, of which the three first clauses were repealed (and others, differing in substance, substituted for them) by later legislation. The Attorney-General, after much consideration, thinks that Judge Coursal's decision upon this point was correct; the Solicitor-General and Queen's Advocate incline to think that the contrary view, though not free from difficulty, may be maintained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above Report was copied, we have received Mr. Hammond's further letter, of this day's date, with its inclosures, which appear to show that Mr. Justice Smith has arrived, in Canada, at the conclusion to which two of us incline, but which do not require from us any other remark.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 254.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, January 31, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying letter from Mr. Nicol, dated the 28th ultimo, claiming compensation from the United States' Government on account of the detention of two apprentices who deserted from on board his vessel "Cuzio" at Valparaiso, and were received on board the United States' ship of war "St. Mary's." That we should perceive from the despatches of Mr. Burnley, No. 82 of the 30th of September, and from Lord Lyons, No. 673 of the 18th November, that it was at one time intended that these apprentices should be given up, but that it now appears from a despatch recently received from Mr. Burnley (No. 145, December 16), that the United States' Government have come to the determination to refuse either to grant compensation, or to deliver up the apprentices, alleging, as grounds for this refusal, the proceedings of Her Majesty's Government in the case of the United States' ship "Iroquois," the papers concerning which were also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the steps, if any, which should now be adopted in Mr. Nicol's behalf.

---

* See printed Confidential Papers, page 59.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are unable to follow the principle or reason of the resolution taken by the United States' Government to depart from their previously announced intention to deliver up the apprentices who deserted from the ship "Cuzio," on the ground that certain deserters from the United States' ship "Iroquois," when claimed before a magistrate at Dover, were not delivered up.

Mr. Seward must have been well aware when he met the former application of Lord Lyons concerning the deserters from the "Cuzio," by the liberal and satisfactory answer which he gave to it, that the delivery up of those deserters was not, and could not be, claimed by Her Majesty's Government as of right, but could only be asked from the comity and good-will of the United States' Government. It is in the power of the naval officers of the United States (as it would be in that of Her Majesty's naval officers in a like case) to deliver up on the high seas, or in any foreign port, under the instructions of their Government, deserters from foreign vessels, who may without lawful authority be found on board one of the ships of war of the United States. This was all that was asked from Mr. Seward, and this he agreed to do. But when a foreign deserter is on shore in Great Britain (and we presume the case would be the same in the United States) the power of Her Majesty's naval officers, and of Her Majesty's Government itself, over him, is at an end; he can then only be detained or delivered up for some cause authorized by the law of the land.

The case of the seamen from the "Iroquois" fell under the latter category; and Mr. Seward, when he agreed to give up the deserters from the "Cuzio," cannot well have supposed that desertion from a foreign vessel was an offence cognizable by the laws of Great Britain, so as to warrant the interference of any magistrate in this kingdom with the personal liberty of such a deserter, the case being clearly not provided for by the Extradition Treaty between Great Britain and the United States.

Her Majesty's Representative at Washington asked for a thing which the United States' Government was legally competent to grant in a matter not falling within the local jurisdiction of any Court or Magistrate of the United States, and the request was promptly and liberally acceded to.

The application to the magistrate at Dover was one which he was incompetent by law to grant; it was made in a matter which could only be dealt with in the ordinary course of law; and it was refused, not from any want of comity towards the Government of the United States, but from mere legal necessity.

It is, of course, for the Government of the United States to judge what conduct is most suitable for their own dignity and honour; but we cannot for a moment imagine that Her Majesty's Government, under similar circumstances, or for a like cause, would have retracted a lawful promise previously given. There is of course no question at all of compensation in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 255.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 6, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 25th ultimo from Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe, applying for permission to inspect the depositions made by some of the crew of the "Sea King" before Her Majesty's Consul at Teneriffe; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inform us that the depositions in question were sent on the 15th of November to the Board of Treasury.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason why Messrs. Gregory and Rowcliffe should not be allowed to inspect the depositions made by some of the crew of the "Sea King" before Her Majesty's Consul at Teneriffe.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 256.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st of February instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 18th ultimo, and its inclosures, from Mr. Adams, respecting the proceedings of Confederate agents in this country.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to transmit to us a draft of the answer which it is proposed to return to Mr. Adams, and to request that we would take this proposed answer into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether it is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the proposed draft answer of your Lordship to Mr. Adams is proper to be sent. The documents inclosed in Mr. Adams' letter (of which the most recent is dated February 5, 1864, just a year ago) appear to us rather to show the probable efficacy of the measures taken by Her Majesty's Government to prevent a continuance of illegal acts in violation of British neutrality, than to furnish evidence of the continuance of such acts in this country, down to the present time.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 257.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 8.)

Doctors' Commons, February 8, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a copy of the Convention of Washington of July 1, 1863, providing for the establishment of a Mixed Commission to settle the claims of the Hudson's Bay and Puget Sound Companies upon the United States, under the Treaty of Washington of June 15, 1846; and to request that I would furnish your Lordship with my opinion whether Her Majesty's Government would be borne out in calling upon the Governor and Council of the Hudson's Bay Company, with which the Puget Sound Company is believed now to be amalgamated, to provide funds for defraying the expenses of the British portion of the Commission. A despatch, and its inclosures, and a private letter from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, respecting the expense of the Commission were also inclosed.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I observe that in the IIIrd Article of the Treaty, it is expressly provided as follows: "The salaries of the Commissioners and of the clerk or clerks shall be paid by their respective Governments. The salary of the arbitrator, or umpire, and the contingent expenses shall be defrayed in equal moieties by the two Governments." And I think that unless there are some circumstances, of which I am not apprized, tending to show that there was an understanding between Her Majesty's Government and these Companies, now amalgamated, that they were to defray all or part of the expenses, that Her Majesty's Government would not now be warranted in requiring them to furnish all or any part of the funds requisite for the execution of this Treaty between the United States and Great Britain.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 258.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 10, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of January ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. R. A. Westbrook, stating, with reference to the case of his son, the grounds on which he considers that the Regulations, of which a copy was therewith inclosed, issued by the United States' Government, respecting the discharge of minors from the military service of the United States, do not apply to the cases of such minors as are British subjects; and to request that we would take Mr. Westbrook's letter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

Mr. Hammond was likewise pleased to transmit for our information a previous letter from Mr. Westbrook, stating the circumstance of his son's enlistment; and to state that no report on this case had yet been received from Mr. Burnley.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of a Report from Mr. Burnley we are unable to advise your Lordship satisfactorily on this matter.

Assuming that the first letter of Mr. Westbrook contained an accurate narrative of his son's enlistment, we should be disposed to agree with his position that the unlawful enlistment of a foreigner, who was a minor, was not a case contemplated by the United States' Regulations, which must be taken, primâ facie at least, to refer to subjects of the United States. Probably, however, the United States' authorities would deny that Mr. Westbrook's son was made drunk, and enlisted, and would procure testimony to the effect that he voluntarily enlisted. In that case we think Mr. Westbrook would be ill-advised not to procure the release of his son by the payment of the sum required.

It is to be observed that, in order to lay any foundation for the argument that this young man was enlisted by wrong (unless his enlistment was involuntary), it must be shown that the United States' Government, or their recruiting officers, were aware, at the time of his enlistment, that he was a minor and a British subject. Being at New York as an ordinary seaman, there could be no presumption that he was not a subject of the United States, free from disability.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 259.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 11.)

Doctors' Commons, February 11, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a letter, dated the 9th instant, from Mr. Henry Lafone, of Liverpool, asking for the interposition of Her Majesty's Government to enable him to save a quantity of cotton which is deposited at Savannah.

A despatch and its inclosures from Mr. Burnley* relative to the question of the cotton at Savannah was also annexed, and Mr. Hammond was to request that I would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at my earliest possible convenience, with my opinion as to any instructions which it will be proper to address to Mr. Burnley by to-day's mail with reference to the general question, or to that of Mr. Lafone's cotton in particular.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in this case it appears that certain bales of cotton, claimed as belonging to a subject of a neutral State, are found by the belligerent in a town which he has obtained by conquest from his enemy.

It is an uncontroverted proposition of international law that if the neutral subject has a just title to this property, it is not liable to confiscation. The principle is simple

---

* Mr. Burnley, No. 56, January 24, 1865.

1865

and intelligible. War gives the belligerent a perfect right to capture the goods of his enemy, but none to capture the goods of his friend. The principle does not depend upon the element on which the goods of the neutral happen to be in company with the goods of the enemy.

The obligation of the belligerent to restore to the neutral owner his goods is equally binding upon the belligerent whether he captures them in the ship or in the town of his enemy. This is the general principle of law applicable to this case. It is, however, not inconsistent with the observance of this principle on the part of the belligerent, to require clear proof that the goods in question are bonâ fide the property of the neutral, and that the neutral has not so conducted himself during the war as to have impressed upon himself the character of an enemy. The belligerent, therefore, would be justified, in cases of real doubt and uncertainty, in submitting the question of property to the investigation of the proper authority.

In cases of naval prize, or of mixed naval and military prize, there is a recognized Court which administers the Law of Nations on the subject.

It depends upon the constitution of the belligerent State what authority shall determine the question of military prize alone, but it must of course be an authority which is capable of doing and which does justice to the neutral claimant.

To apply these observations to the facts of the present case. If there be fair and reasonable doubt whether the bales of cotton belong to a bonâ fide neutral, if they be not plainly distinguishable from the cotton of the enemy, it does not appear to me an excess of the jus victoris to submit these questions to the consideration of the proper authority at home. It is certainly a hardship on a neutral owner to send the cotton from Savannah to New York for this purpose. It is certainly an unfriendly act on the part of the United States' Executive to do so, unless there be a real well-founded apprehension that they may be subject to recapture by the enemy at Savannah, while the question as to their ownership is pending and undecided.

If, on the other hand, there be really no doubt that these bales of cotton do belong to a neutral owner, and they can be distinguished on the spot by ordinary measures, the arbitrary transfer of them to New York is a subject of legitimate complaint on the part of the Government of the neutral owner.

It seems to me that Mr. Burnley should be instructed to act upon these principles of law, applying them, according to his discretion and his knowledge of the circumstances, to the facts of the case.

If these bales of cotton be transferred, it will probably be necessary to send further instructions to Mr. Burnley when the course which the United States' Government intend to take with respect to them has been clearly ascertained.

In the meanwhile, and until he receives further instructions, Mr. Burnley should protest against any compulsory sale of the cotton claimed by British owners.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 260.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received February 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 15, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 27th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for our consideration, a despatch from Mr. Burnley respecting the case of Mr. H. C. Westbrook (No. 51, January 24).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere in this matter. The Report of the American Secretary of the Navy, as we had anticipated in our last Report, directly contradicts the statement of Westbrook.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 261.

The Attorney and Solicitor-General to Earl Russell.—(Received February 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, February 25, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of this day's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith a letter from Mr. Dalglish, dated the 24th instant, respecting the apprehension entertained lest Mr. Burley, who has been given over by the Canadian authorities to the United States' Government under the Extradition Act, on a charge of robbery, should be tried on a charge of piracy; and to request, as the mail goes to-day, our immediate opinion, whether, if Burley has been given up on a demand founded on a charge of theft or robbery, he can be lawfully tried on a charge of piracy.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that if the United States' Government, having obtained the extradition of Burley on the charge of robbery, do not put him on his trial upon this charge, but upon another, viz., piracy (which, if it had been made before the Canadian authorities, they might have held not sufficiently established to warrant his extradition), this would be a breach of good faith against which Her Majesty's Government might justly remonstrate. If, however, the United States' Government do bonâ fide put him on his trial for the offence in respect of which he was given up, it seems difficult to question their right to put him upon his trial also for piracy, or any other offence which he may be accused of having committed within their territory; whether or not such offence was a ground of extradition or even within the Treaty. We do not see that Her Majesty's Government can do more than protest against any attempt to change the ground of accusation upon which Burley was surrendered in pursuance of the Treaty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 262.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received February 28.)

Doctors' Commons, February 28, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me a correspondence, as marked in the margin,* which has taken place relative to an application made by a Mr. James Slattery for the assistance of Her Majesty's Government to enable him to recover certain effects belonging to his deceased son, Michael Slattery; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that I would take this application into consideration, and report to your Lordship my opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That I am clearly of opinion that no case is made out by Mr. James Slattery for the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government in his private affairs. The directions contained in the letter to Mr. Slattery from the Foreign Office, dated February 8, 1865, appear to me perfectly proper.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 263.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 2, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 14th of November last (that being our latest Report), respecting the case of the "Peterhoff," he

---

* Mr. Slattery, December 17; to Mr. Slattery, December 23; to Mr. Burnley, No. 570; Mr. Burnley, No. 29, 1864; to Mr. Slattery, February 8; Mr. Slattery, February 14, 1865.

1865

was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter, dated the 20th ultimo, from Messrs. Reed and Phelps, drawing your Lordship's attention to a Judgment pronounced in the Court of Common Pleas, establishing, as they contend, the illegality of the capture of the vessel and cargo, and the consequent impropriety of the arrest of their client, Mr. Bowden; and that Messrs. Reed and Phelps requested that your Lordship would take some step on behalf of Mr. Bowden towards obtaining for him the compensation he asks for from the United States' Government, and with regard to which they were told on the 28th November, 1863, in conformity with the advice tendered in our Report of the 10th of that month, that Her Majesty's Government could not make any representation to the United States' Government respecting claims arising out of the capture of the "Peterhoff," until the case shall have been decided in the Supreme Court; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take Messrs. Reed and Phelps' present communication into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Judgment of the Court of Common Pleas (with the general doctrines of which we entirely agree) does not induce us to alter or vary the advice which we have had the honour to offer to Her Majesty's Government in our last Report. That Judgment was given in an action brought on a policy of insurance, by the assured party, the owner of the captured goods, against the insurer. The insurer pleaded certain defences to the action; the assured demurred to the legal validity of these defences as pleaded, which, in substance, setting aside technicalities, were as follows:—

First. That the assured owner concealed, at the time of effecting the insurance, material facts from the insurer. But the facts, as alleged by the plea, were consistent with a boná fide and final destination of the ship and her cargo to Matamoros, a neutral port, coupled with a mere mental intention on the part of the shippers of the goods that they should afterwards find their way from Matamoros to some Confederate port or place. The Court so construing this plea properly held that it did not necessarily show any lawful ground of capture; and that, as the insurance was "against the capture lawful and unlawful," the record, which was all they had before them, did not show any such concealment as, according to the authorities, would vacate such a policy.

Secondly. The insurer pleaded the Judgment of the Prize Court as an estoppel; that is, as offering proof, not examinable by any other Court, of the facts recited in the Judgment of the Prize Court.

The owner in his demurrer contended—

1. That the Judgment did not clearly decide the precise matter of fact on which the insurer relied.

2. That if it had so decided the matter of fact, still the Judgment could not be pleaded as an estoppel.

The Court held that the owner was right on both points. On the first point, the learned Judge (though not professing to give any opinion upon the question whether the decision of the Prize Court was right or wrong) criticized the language of the Judgment as pleaded, and found it to be consistent with an actual destination of the ship and cargo to Matamoros, which was, primâ facie, sufficient to support the policy. And, although the Judgment of the Prize Court went on to declare that "the said ship with the said cargo was not truly destined to Matamoros, a neutral port, but was destined for some other port or place in aid and for the use of the enemy, and in violation of the law of nations, and that the ship's papers were simulated and false," the Court of Common Pleas held (and we think quite correctly) that the grounds of that conclusion were not set forth with such distinctness as necessarily to show that they were such as (if true) would avoid the policy. On the second point the Court held that although this Judgment of the Prize Court might be admitted on the footing of evidence in the course of the trial, it was not admissible as an estoppel or absolute bar to any trial taking place.

This decision appears to us to have been in all points right; but we think it furnishes no ground whatever for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government with the United States' Government on behalf of the owners of the goods captured on board the "Peterhoff," or of Mr. Bowden.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 264.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 4.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of an Act passed by the Canadian Legislature for the prevention and repression of outrages on the frontier of Canada; and to request that we would take this Act into consideration, and favour your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was at the same time to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion whether it is necessary that similar Acts should be passed by the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the Statute is properly framed, and that it would be expedient that a Statute with the like provisions should be passed by each of the Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 265.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 8, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 22nd ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers as marked in the margin* (including therein a Report from Her Majesty's Advocate-General), on the subject of cotton, asserted to be the property of neutrals, which has been seized by the Federal authorities at Savannah since the occupation of that city by the Federal forces; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's two further letters, dated respectively the 25th and 28th ultimo, transmitting further despatches from Mr. Burnley respecting the question of cotton at Savannah (No. 95, February 10, No. 101, February 13, 1865).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the Attorney and Solicitor-General express their entire concurrence with the former Report of the Queen's Advocate, and with the despatch which was founded upon that Report. That we are all of opinion that we are not at present sufficiently apprised of the particular circumstances in which the cotton stood at the time of the capture, to enable us materially to add to the suggestions contained in that Report. It would seem to us that the cotton of British subjects must either have been deposited in places under their own custody, or in storehouses belonging to other persons. That, in the former case (in which indeed the seizure would appear to be primâ facie wrongful, and a ground for remonstrance), it is to be presumed that the owners would possess sufficient means of identifying their property before it was taken away. That, in the latter case, the British owners must be in possession of vouchers of some kind tending to establish their property in the bales. Nevertheless there may be circumstances which would render proper and reasonable the request of British owners to be allowed, by some additional means, to provide themselves with the proof necessary for establishing their title, at least to the quantity and description of cotton which they claim, and especially in cases where such cotton has been deposited with the cotton of other owners in public warehouses.

In the absence of more precise information, we are unable to give further advice upon this subject; but we think that Mr. Burnley should be instructed to express

* Mr. Lafone, February 9; Mr. Burnley, No. 56; Queen's Advocate, February 11; to Mr. Lafone, February 11; to Mr. Burnley, No. 50; Mr. Burnley, No. 90, 1865.

1865

generally to the United States' Government the confident hope which Her Majesty's Government entertain that no obstacle will be interposed to prevent the subjects of Her Majesty from establishing their just claim to their own property.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 266.

The Queen's Advocate to Earl Russell.—(Received March 11.)

Doctors' Commons, March 10, 1865.

My Lord,

I AM honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to me therewith the accompanying volumes containing a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 70, January 30), and the correspondence therein referred to, respecting the case of a British subject named T. W. Benson, who has been tried at Louisville, Kentucky, on charges of fraud in carrying out contracts with the United States' Government; and to request that I would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with my opinion thereupon.

I am also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, transmitting a further despatch from Mr. Burnley respecting this case (No. 98, February 10).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands I have the honour to report—

That upon a careful perusal of the voluminous papers in this case, the following questions appear to me to present themselves for solution:—

1. Was Dr. Benson subject to the jurisdiction of the United States' Courts in this matter?

2. Was he subject to the exceptional jurisdiction of the United States' court-martial?

3. Was his case fully and fairly tried, and were all the means of defence which the rules of natural justice require, and the usage of civilized States concede to a person so accused, afforded to him?

4. Was the sentence of the court-martial manifestly unjust as being at variance with the evidence of the facts or the principle of law applicable to the facts?

If these questions be answered in the affirmative there will remain no ground for the official intervention of Her Majesty's Government in this case.

With respect to the first question, it appears that Dr. Benson was a native of Canada, educated for the medical profession in New York, where he married, and that he afterwards became a medical professor in the State of Georgia; that he afterwards went to Chicago; that about six years ago he settled at Louisville, and was appointed to a chair in the Medical College of that city. The breaking out of the civil war in Kentucky caused the Medical College to be closed, and compelled Dr. Benson to seek for some other mode of subsistence. He accordingly entered into partnership with a Mr. M. B. Taylor and a Mr. Lycurgus Black, on the 18th November, 1862.

The contributions of money among the partners were unequal, but the partners were to receive equal dividends. The object of the co-partnership is described in the deed (Exhibit D, fol. 172) as being "for the purpose of carrying on the business of Government contracting in the city of Louisville, State of Kentucky, under the style and name of 'M. B. Taylor,' from date until the 1st day of April, 1863."

The firm so constituted entered into a contract with the United States' Government, whereby they agreed to furnish "such quantities of good merchantable hay, corn, and oats as should be required for the public animals, from day to day at the Government stables, in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, at the Oakland Race Course, and at the fair ground near said Louisville, to be delivered at such stables, to commence on the 18th day of November, 1862, and terminate on the 1st day of April, 1853."

Upon this state of facts I am clearly of opinion that Dr. Benson was subject, both by reason of his domicil and of his contract, to the jurisdiction of the United States' Government.

With respect to the second question, it is one purely of American law, and I see no reason to doubt the soundness of Mr. Carlisle's opinion that the Act of Congress had made a contractor to the army liable to jurisdiction of the Court-martial, though I think it is to be regretted the case was not submitted to the ordinary civil and commercial tribunals to whose cognizance such a case properly belongs, and who would be far better able to deal with the mixed questions of mercantile law and fact which arose than a military tribunal; but I answer this question also in the affirmative.

With respect to the third question Dr. Benson was defended by two zealous, and, as it appears, eminent advocates, who certainly appear to have manifested no undue obsequiousness to the Court, and to have been allowed the fullest latitude accorded to Counsel in such cases. Ample time and ample means for the defence were, in my opinion, afforded to Dr. Benson, and I answer this question also in the affirmative.

With respect to the fourth question the undertaking of the firm, of which Dr. Benson was partner, was to supply the Government with "good merchantable hay, corn, and oats." It was clearly proved at the trial that instead of pure oats, a mixture composed of rye, other more worthless articles, and oats (though the latter largely preponderated), was intentionally and deliberately prepared under the positive orders of Dr. Benson, and sold to the United States' Government.

A defence was, indeed, attempted to be set up that this mixture constituted as good feed for horses and mules as good merchantable oats, but this defence was in my opinion rightly rejected by the Court. It was proved also that damaged corn was mixed with sound corn.

A further defence was set up that no concealment was practised upon the United States' Government, and, therefore, that there was no fraud; this defence was also considered but did not avail, and this, after reading the letter of Dr. Benson to his agent, Mr. Priesttes, is not to be wondered at. In one of them occurs a remonstrance with some person under a sort of sub-contract with Dr. Benson to supply grain, in these words —"If his disposition is to be punctilious there, it will be our duty to be so here; instead of labouring for the passage of large quantities of trash through the Inspector's hands, we will in future look to our own interests." (Exhibit K, p. 189.)

Questions, indeed, of grave importance in mercantile jurisprudence arose, such as whether grain which was termed "rejected" at Chicago might not, nevertheless, be legally "merchantable" at Louisville; and as to the substitution of what are called "burlaps" for what are called "gunny bags," and some other questions of the same character involving the true construction of commercial terms. And it is possible that a civil tribunal might have taken a view of these matters more favourable to Dr. Benson than that which was taken by the military tribunal: but I am certainly of opinion that there was no such miscarriage of justice—if there was any at all, which I do not allege—as to call for any interference on this ground on behalf of Dr. Benson from Her Majesty's Government.

Entertaining, therefore, no doubt that the answer to all these questions must be in the affirmative, I am led to the clear conclusion that Her Majesty's Government cannot with propriety address any remonstrance on the subject of Dr. Benson's conviction to the United States' Government. I think, however, that the long delay and imprisonment (though this latter was in great measure the fault of Dr. Benson) which preceded the trial, does furnish Her Majesty's Government with a ground for suggesting, through Her Majesty's Representative at Washington, that it would be reasonable to allow the consideration of this previous endurance of punishment to abridge the other term of imprisonment inflicted by the sentence.

I have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 267.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 14, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 27th February ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 4), in which your Lordship's attention is called to the form of agreement entered into between the Agent of the United States' Government and certain other parties for the purchase of products of the insurrectionary States.

Mr. Layard was also pleased to state that Mr. Burnley's despatch (No. 129) was also returned to us, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and report to your Lordship such observations as we might have to offer on the matter to which they relate.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we beg leave to refer to our former Report on this important subject.

That the practical importance to neutral States of the question raised by these regulations is, at the present moment, not very great, inasmuch as the United States are in possession of the towns on the sea coasts as to which a vigorous blockade has been hitherto maintained; and the only practical question which could arise out of these regulations is, whether the commerce permitted under them would, or would not, have the effect of vitiating the blockade. Nevertheless, we think it right to state that we entertain very grave doubts as to the competency of the United States' Government to authorise this commerce with the belligerent on their own behalf, and on account of their own exigencies, while they debar the neutral from participating in it by a blockade, which it would seem from reference to Order V, and the General Order No. 42, is also to be partially relaxed in favour of the belligerent imposing it, but not of the neutral.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 268.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 16, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Bermuda, reporting the arrival in St. George's Harbour, Bermuda, of the Confederate States' merchant steamer "Chameleon," formerly the Confederate States' war-steamer "Tallahassee," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion on the points as affecting the "Chameleon" and vessels sailing under similar circumstances, with regard to which the Governor applied to be furnished with instructions.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the first question contained in the despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of Bermuda, we are of opinion that he exercised a sound discretion in treating the "Chameleon" (after he had satisfied himself of the truth of the representations made by her master), as a merchant-vessel belonging to the country of one of the belligerents. That it is competent to the Government of either belligerent to sell or transfer a ship of war to a private merchant, or to change the character of a vessel from that of a ship of war to that of a merchant-vessel, if the Government choose to trade on its own account.

To the second question we answer, that the merchant-vessels belonging to the citizens of both belligerents, and registered in their ports, ought to be admitted to the harbours of Her Majesty on the same footing. The absence of a formal recognition by Her Majesty of the Confederate States does not affect the principle of strict neutrality upon which the vessels of both belligerents are so admitted.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 269.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 16, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th March instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 9th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 14th instant, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick reporting that he had signed the warrant for the apprehension of such of the St. Albans raiders as might be in the province, and adverting to the Report of the Provincial Solicitor-General pointing out defects in the requisition from Mr. Seward on which the warrant was issued, and to request that we would take this matter into our immediate consideration and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon in time to admit of instructions being addressed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick by the mail of Saturday next.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to add that no copy of the warrant had yet been received by Her Majesty's Government, and that the requisition mentioned by the Provincial Solicitor-General is to be found at page 82 of the papers (North America, No. 1) laid before Parliament this session.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consition, and have the honour to report—

That it does not appear to us to be expressly required, either by the terms of the Treaty of the 9th August, 1842, or under the Statute 6 and Vict., cap. 76, that the requisition to be made by the authority of the United States, for the delivery of any person charged with any of the offences therein specified, should be in any particular form, or that it should state upon the face of it the facts necessary to constitute the alleged offence, or the time when such offence was committed. All that appears to be expressly required is, that it should be, in substance, "a requisition for the delivery of any person charged with the crime of murder, &c., committed within the jurisdiction of the United States of America, who shall be found within the territories of Her Majesty." If, indeed, the Governor's warrant, issued upon this requisition, were itself sufficient to authorize the apprehension of the alleged offender, it might be reasonable and proper to construe these general words as involving the specification of everything requisite to show that such an offence has really been committed. But inasmuch as no step can be taken under the Governor's warrant, without the production before a Magistrate of "such evidence as, according to the laws of that part of Her Majesty's dominions, would justify the apprehension and committal for trial of the person so accused, if the crime of which he or she shall be so accused had been there committed," it does not seem to us that the purposes of justice necessarily require any such exactness in the statement of the charge on the face of the requisition; and the statute itself being silent on the subject, it seems to us to be the better opinion that the Magistrate, or the Judges on habeas corpus, would not be authorized to hold the Governor's warrant invalid for any defect in the specification of the facts necessary to constitute the alleged offence, on the face of the requisition, if before the Magistrate himself sufficient evidence of all these circumstances were produced, and if the Magistrate's warrant for the apprehension of the offender were itself in proper form.

We are, therefore, disposed to differ in this respect from the Solicitor-General of New Brunswick, and to think that Mr. Seward's requisition, addressed to the Governor of New Brunswick, through Mr. Burnley, on the 19th December last, ought not to be deemed insufficient to support the Governor's warrant issued under the same, merely on the ground that it does not name the persons on whom, or the time at which, the alleged offences of murder and robbery, &c., were committed.

We must, however, add that we think it highly inexpedient to depart from the usage which, we believe, has hitherto prevailed of making these requisitions in a more formal manner, and of accompanying them with depositions sufficient to satisfy the Governor, before he issues his warrant, that the case is primâ facie within the Extradition Treaty. The 2nd section of the Statute contemplates (if it does not by implication require) such depositions, which, we understand, were not offered in the present case. If, under these circumstances, the charge against the St. Albans raiders should eventually miscarry in New Brunswick, we cannot but think that the responsibility of such miscarriage will rest with the authorities of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 270.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 16.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 16, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Robert Smith relative to his arrest and imprisonment, under the circumstances therein set forth, by the military authorities of the United States; and to request that we would take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that Lord Lyons had addressed the Secretary of State of the United States on behalf of this person; but it does not appear how the application was received, or what the answer to it was. It is perhaps therefore premature to offer any decided opinion to your Lordship upon the case.

But, on our present information, we are not disposed to advise your Lordship to interfere in this matter. If one of Her Majesty's subjects chooses to disobey Her Majesty's Proclamation, and to place himself in or connect himself with the military service of either belligerent, he cannot, as a general rule, on the ground of alleged ill-usage in that service, claim the protection of Her Majesty's Government; and at present we see no exceptional circumstances in the case of Mr. Robert Smith.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 271.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 17.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 16, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to the Report of the Attorney and Solicitor-General of the 25th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit, for such observations as we may have to offer thereupon, a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing copies of the Judgments delivered by the Judges in Canada in the case of Bennett Burley, together with copies of other legal proceedings in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That although this is a case of difficulty, we are unable to say that the decision of the Canadian Judges was incorrect, or that Burley was not rightly delivered up to the United States' authorities under the Extradition Treaty. We understand the Canadian Judges to have proceeded upon the ground that under the Ashburton Treaty, and the Statutes for carrying it into effect, extradition was due if such evidence of criminality was given as, according to the laws of Canada, "would justify the prisoner's apprehension and committal for trial" if the alleged offence had been committed in Canada; and that the duty of the magistrate, and of the Judges on habeas corpus, was not to discharge the office of a jury upon the trial, but simply to inquire whether a sufficient case was made on which (if the act had been done in Canada) the prisoner might properly have been committed for trial. We think this view is correct; and it appears to us that in weighing the effect of the evidence for this purpose, the Canadian Judges fairly followed the example set them by the Court of Queen's Bench in this country when examining the effect of the evidence in the somewhat similar case of Tionan* (24th and 25th May, 1864), to which they refer.

We think it unnecessary to repeat the observations made by the Canadian Judges, or their comparison of the acts which were proved to have been done by the prisoner, with the terms of the authority under which (as set forth in the Proclamation of President Davis) it was sought to ascribe to them a belligerent character.

We think there was great force in the observation that what is said to have been authorized was not attempted, and that what was done does not seem to have been authorized. The seizure of a merchant-vessel engaged in her usual peaceable occupation of carrying goods and passengers between the American and British borders of Lake Erie, and the abstraction of money from the person of one of the officers of that vessel, effected by a natural-born British subject previously residing as a civilian in the United States, by the aid of arms and a party of men taken on board from British territory in

---

* Reported in 10 Law Times Reports (U. S.), p. 499.

British waters, are not acts which, consistently with the observance in good faith of the Extradition Treaty, can be dealt with in any way more favourable to the parties concerned in them than that which strict law demands; and upon a question of this kind, turning upon the effect of such evidence as that which was given, the decision of the Canadian Judges ought, in our opinion, to be held conclusive.

It must not, however, be supposed that the decision arrived at in this case would rule the question whether the extradition of Burley would have been justified if he had taken refuge in British territory after an attack made, under the warrant of his commission, upon the United States' war-steamer "Michigan," or upon the forces in Johnson's Island.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 272.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 17, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st of January, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a further letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office,† on the subject of the issue by the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick of his warrant for the extradition of certain of the St. Albans raiders; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we infer, from the terms of Mr. Gordon's despatch of the 8th February last, that he had then actually issued his warrant under the Extradition Treaty, in compliance with the requisition of the United States' Government, although no depositions had been submitted to him, for the purpose of showing, either that there was any primâ facie ground for the charges of "murder, robbery, and assault with intent to commit murder, at St. Alban's, in the State of Vermont," made (somewhat indirectly) against the persons named in Mr. Seward's letter to Mr. Burnley of the 19th December, 1864, or that those persons, or any of them, were then in New Brunswick.

We are not prepared to say that, in this course, there was anything certainly illegal, but we adhere to the opinion formerly expressed by us (to which Mr. Gordon adverts in his letters to Mr. Burnley), that the safer and more proper course is for the Governor of a Colony, in all cases, to require and receive some primâ facie evidence of the commission of an offence within the Treaty, and of the existence within his jurisdiction of the persons charged, before issuing his warrant. It is true that the persons so charged cannot be apprehended under the Governor's warrant, without evidence to satisfy the Magistrate that the case comes primâ facie within the Statute; and there are no words expressly requiring the Governor to receive, or found his warrant upon, any evidence.

But the statute makes it a necessary condition that the persons charged "shall be found within the territories of Her Majesty" (i.e. within the particular territory over which the Governor's jurisdiction extends); and of this fact, at least, we think the Governor ought to have some evidence before issuing his warrant: and the second section of the statute shows that it was certainly within the contemplation of the Legislature (though it may not have been absolutely required) that there might or would be "depositions upon which the original warrant" (i.e. the Governor's warrrant) "was granted."

The Governor of New Brunswick has justly pointed out that the effect of granting the warrant prematurely, before any evidence is forthcoming, may be to frustrate, rather than to advance, the further proceedings; and on such a subject it seems to us very desirable to adhere, as far as possible, to the hitherto established practice.

At the same time we fully appreciate the motives which (in this particular case) have probably induced Mr. Gordon to deviate from the course suggested by his own good judgment, rather than allow the good faith of his Government to be for a moment brought in question by the Government of the United States.

We agree with his Excellency, and disagree with the Law Officers of New Brunswick,

---

* Colonial Office, January 4, 1865.

† Colonial Office, March 8, 1865.

1865

as to the sufficiency of the letter of Mr. Seward to Mr. Burnley, before referred to, as a requisition from the United States' Government. Neither the Treaty nor the statute requires that such a requisition should be made in any particular form or manner; and it appears to us that such requisition need not be made directly by the authorities of the United States to the Governor of a British Province, but that it may competently be made by the United States' Government to the British Legation at Washington, and if duly certified to have been so made, may be acted upon as sufficient by a Provincial Governor.

Subject to the foregoing remarks, we think that his Excellency has rightly interpreted the requirements of the statute.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 273.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st of March instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 1st of November last, respecting the case of Miss Hill, who was tried by the Federal authorities at New Orleans, and passed through the lines into the Southern States, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a correspondence which had passed between that lady aud your Lordship,† since her arrival in England, from which we should perceive that your Lordship consented to receive any written statement of her case which she might desire to submit to you; and to request that we would take the letters from Miss Hill of the 18th and 26th ultimo into our consideration, and again report to your Lordship our opinion upon her case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we see no reason whatever to vary the opinion which we expressed in our former Report on this case.

It is impossible to believe the statement of Miss Hill, that she was guiltless of any communication with the Confederates. The words in her letter (directed to the Confederate commanding officer), "communicate and state what you require, and I will do all in my power—I will be here until end of July;" are irreconcilable with her version of the letter having been sent to her by accident, and answered out of mere politeness. Her whole story is, moreover, extremely improbable. It is not true, as she says, that she was acquitted; she was found guilty and banished. It is certainly not improbable that she may have been rudely treated by the United States' authorities; but the British Consul and Lord Lyons appear to have done all that was in their power to save her from the consequences of her own (to say the least) very imprudent acts.

We are clearly of opinion that there is no ground for your Lordship's interference in this matter.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 274.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 9th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 7th instant, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, reporting the course which he had deemed it advisable to take with respect to the request of the United States' Government for the

---

* Miss Hill, August 6; to Miss Hill, September 7; to Lord Lyons, No. 422; Mr. Burnley, No. 73; to Mr. Burnley, No. 509, 1864.

† Miss Hill, February 18 and 24; to Miss Hill, February 25; Miss Hill, February 26, 1865.

extradition, in the event of their arrest, of some of the persons concerned in the seizure of the steamer "Chesapeake," which case formed the subject of our Report of the 26th April, 1864, and of our previous Reports therein referred to; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter and its inclosures from the Colonial Office, dated the 15th instant, from which it appears that Louis Seely, one of the persons named in the warrant of Mr. Justice Parker, has been arrested in St. John's, New Brunswick, and is now in gaol awaiting examination on the charge of being concerned in the seizure of the "Chesapeake;" and requesting us to take this matter into consideration together with the papers before referred to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the course pursued by the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick in the matter of the "Chesapeake" has been in every respect proper.

The opinion formerly expressed in that case by Mr. Justice Ritchie (though not at the time satisfactory to ourselves) has since been confirmed by the decision of the majority of the Judges of the Queen's Bench in England in the case of "Tionan and others" (10 Law Times Reports, new series, page 499); and we think that it must be now taken to be settled by that authority that piratical acts committed on the high seas on board a United States' vessel over which British Criminal or Admiralty Courts can exercise jurisdiction, do not constitute offences for which extradition is due under the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 275.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 18.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 18, 1865.
My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 12th January last, respecting the seizure of the "Mary (" late "Alexandra") at Nassau, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a note from Mr. Adams,† representing that the United States' Government is informed that that vessel, even if condemned and sold under judicial process for a violation of neutrality, may be bought in by the same parties first interested in her, and started again in the guise of a merchantman on her original errand to carry on war against the United States; and Mr. Adams states, that he is requested to remonstrate against giving permission to that vessel to depart from Nassau without abundant security that she is not to be used for the hostile purpose indicated.

Mr. Hammond also annexed a letter from the Colonial Office, from which it will be seen that, in consequence of the communication to that Department of a copy of Mr. Adams' note, the Governor of the Bahamas would be instructed by the mail of that evening not to sell the "Mary," until he shall receive further orders from Her Majesty's Government; and Mr. Hammond was accordingly to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion what those further orders should be.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it is, in our opinion, competent to Her Majesty's Government to direct, if they should think fit, an indefinite postponement of the sale of the "Mary," in the event of her condemnation, or (if it should be thought more expedient) permanently to retain that vessel for Her Majesty's service, unsold.

The only law upon the subject that we are aware of, is 16 and 17 Vict., cap. 107, sec. 228, under which the Commissioners of Customs would, we presume, always act upon such directions as they might receive, in any particular case, from the Lords of Her Majesty's Treasury.

---

* Mr. Burnley, No. 9; Colonial Office, January 9, February 11, and February 17, 1865.

† Mr. Adams, March 7, 1865.

1865

Assuming that it might be desirable eventually to sell this vessel (in the supposed case of her condemnation), we should be disposed to recommend the postponement of any such sale, either till the termination of the present war, or (at least) until such a period shall have elapsed as to render it no longer probable that it would be the object of any person to purchase her for the war service of the Confederate States.

If, however, there should be any serious objection to this course, we think it ought to be made one of the conditions of any sale at Nassau, that the purchaser shall give substantial security against the use of this vessel, either by himself or by any person deriving title from him, in aid of the war service of the Coufederate States, within such a period of time from the sale as may be thought sufficient.

Such security was, we believe, required, and was given (not indeed by any purchaser, but by the owners, to whom the ship was restored), in the case of the "Pampero," seized last year in the Clyde.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 276.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 17th of January, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit therewith, for our information, and for any observations which we might have to offer thereupon, a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 104, February 13), inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Consul Archibald, respecting the extradition of Kain and the general practice in the United States in extradition cases.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the letter of Mr. Consul Archibald certainly throws a new light upon the case of Kain, though it leaves it "a mystery" (as the Consul truly says) how the discharge of Kain by Judge Nelson in 1853 is to be reconciled with the opinion of the Supreme Court in 1863.

It does not, however, occur to us that we can usefully offer at present any additional observations on the practice of the United States under the Treaty of Extradition. Substantially, the various modes adopted in the United States, in England, and Canada (which differ according to the particular legislation of each country), execute with equal good faith the provisions of the Treaty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 277.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 22.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 21, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans (No. 12, February 10), inclosing a copy of the proceedings in the United States' Prize Court at that port in the case of the schooner "Louisa," and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the evidence upon which this vessel was condemned seems to us slender; but as no defence was made, and no application for further proof preferred, it must be presumed that the owners were guilty of intending to break the blockade, and no ground is laid for the official interference of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 278.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 24, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence, as marked in the margin,* relative to the imprisonment at Fort Warren, near Boston, of a British subject, named Thomas Saville, who was serving as boatswain on board the "Hope," a blockade-runner, when that vessel was captured by the United States' ship "Eblus;" and to request that we would take Thomas Saville's case into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the general principles applicable to this case, we beg to refer to our former Reports, and especially to our Report sent in on the 5th of July, 1864.

We understand that Thomas Saville was one of the crew of a Confederate merchant-vessel engaged on a private enterprise, and not connected in any way with the service of the Confederate Government. Should this turn out to be the case, and should Saville be a British subject who has entered into no engagements whatever with the Confederate Government, we think that the good offices of Her Majesty's Representative at Washington should continue to be employed to obtain his release from prison, though we think that the circumstances in which he was seized do not render his imprisonment, until these facts have been ascertained, an illegal proceeding on the part of the United States' authorities.

We observe in the letter of the United States' Secretary of the Navy to Mr. Seward, the following passage:—

"If any of those captured in the 'Hope,' who claim to be British subjects, and to have been passengers only, having no interest in the vessel or cargo, and no connexion with the insurgent Government, will produce satisfactory proof on those points, the Department will give a favourable consideration to their applications for release."—November 23, 1864.

We desire to guard ourselves against expressing any agreement with the proposition herein implied, that an interest in the vessel or cargo would render a neutral subject liable to be treated as a belligerent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 279.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 24, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th March instant, stiting that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 13th instant, respecting the case of the "Chameleon," late "Tallahassee," which formed the subject of his letter of the 2nd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Saville, January 12; to Mr. Saville, January 14; to Mr. Burnley, No. 19, January 14; Mr. Burnley, No. 78; Mr. Saville, February 25, 1865.

1865

That the conduct of the Governor of the Bahamas with respect to these two vessels, the "Rattlesnake" and the "Chameleon," appears to have been perfectly proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 280.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are hououred with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th January, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 19th December, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 20), inclosing a copy of the record of the proceedings of a Naval Court of Inquiry held at Boston, in the case of the "Night Hawk," and containing observations respecting the long-continued detention in prison of the master and officers of that vessel, and also a letter from Messrs. Lawrence and Co., dated the 27th January ultimo, on the latter point; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th February, transmitting a further despatch from Mr. Burnley respecting the case of the "Night Hawk."

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused with equal surprise and regret these papers, which, while they in no respect alter our former impressions as to the case of the "Night Hawk," or as to the treatment of the British subjects who constituted the crew of that vessel, furnish in themselves serious grounds of complaint, both with respect to the manner in which the Naval Court of Inquiry was conducted, and as to the continued detention in prison, while that inquiry was impending and in progress, of the officers of the "Night Hawk."

The Court of Inquiry appears to have been ordered by the Secretary of the Navy of the United States, "for the purpose of inquiry into the circumstances attending the capture and destruction of the steamer 'Night Hawk;'" and they were (most properly) instructed to direct their particular attention to "the treatment of her officers and crew at the time of, and subsequent to, her capture and destruction." When this inquiry was directed and held, the officers of the "Night Hawk" (seven, as we collect, in number) were still detained as prisoners, though her crew had been released, and the only ground which was, or could be, alleged for lengthening their imprisonment (originally in our opinion unjustifiable) was, that their evidence would be wanted before the Court of Inquiry.

How then was the inquiry conducted? The Judge Advocate called as witnesses all the officers and some of the crew of the "Niphon," whose conduct was the subject of investigation; among the rest, Mr. Seaman, the officer in charge of the boarding party, and the person most directly responsible for any wrong which might have been done. It appeared, even on their own evidence, that while the "Night Hawk" was lying aground, without any signs of armed resistance, some shots were fired into her by the boarding-party; that a passenger, Dr. Taylor, was wounded by one of those shots; and that Mr. Seaman used personal violence towards the chief engineer of the "Night Hawk," by striking him in the face, and knocking him down with the butt end of a pistol after he (Mr. Seaman) had set the ship on fire. Explanations of these occurrences (we cannot say to our minds satisfactory) were offered by the persons responsible for them. After which the Judge Advocate stated that he "knew of no other person whom it was necessary to summon before the Court," and "the testimony being finished," the Court found in accordance with the version of the facts given by these witnesses, and placed upon those facts (as might have been expected) the most favourable construction. All this time the officers of the "Night Hawk" (including, as we presume, the chief engineer, whom Mr. Seaman had knocked down) were kept in prison; their evidence was neither asked nor obtained; they had no opportunity of tendering it; and that detention, for which no justification could be alleged, except a bonâ fide intention to secure and make use of their testimony, resulted in its total suppression.

Comment upon such facts as these is superfluous. We are sure that the Government of the United States would never be satisfied with such an inquiry, or admit that the imprisonment of their subjects was justified under such circumstances, if the case were their own. Nor can we forget the recent case of O'Neill, in which, after an ex parte inquiry had resulted in the exculpation of an officer of the United States' navy, by whom O'Neill had been causelessly wounded, a subsequent inquiry by court-martial, which the justice of the United States' Government induced them to direct, resulted in the condemnation and dismissal of that officer. We cannot but hope that upon a proper representation being made to the Government of Washington on this subject, it would appear that the course followed is not that which the Secretary of the Navy of the United States intended when he directed the inquiry; and that some satisfaction may yet be given to Her Majesty's Government in this case.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 281.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 3rd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th of January, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a further letter from Mr. Nottcutt respecting the case of Mr. Edward Sewell; and to reqnest that we would take Mr. Nottcutt's letter into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it may be proper for your Lordship to answer Mr. Nottcutt to the effect that it appears to your Lordship to be now far too late to propose to the United States' Government any inquiry into Mr. Sewell's case, Mr. Sewell himself having left the United States without asking for such an inquiry, either through the medium of Lord Lyons, or through that of his former employer at New York, Mr. Webb; and that it is not in the power of Her Majesty's Government to guarantee him protection in the event of his again visiting the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 282.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, March 25, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a note and its inclosures from Mr. Adams, together with a copy of the answer which your Lordship has returned thereto, as well as two letters and their inclosures from the Colonial Office,* respecting the steamer "Confederate States," late "Laurel," which had recently cleared from Nassau for Liverpool under the circumstances stated in the inclosed papers.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that Mr. Adams states that he was instructed to remonstrate against the receipt and clearance with mails of that vessel from Nassau; and to request that such measures might be adopted in regard to her as might prevent her from thus abusing the neutrality of Her Majesty's territory, for the purpose of facilitating the operations of the enemies of the United States.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report our opinion thereupon.

---

* Mr. Adams, March 7; Colonial Office, March 6 and March 9; to Mr. Adams, March 10, 1865.

1865

The papers showing the connection of this vessel with the case of the "Shenandoah," late "Sea King," were sent therewith for reference if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears that the "Laurel," now the "Confederate States," being either a British or a Confederate merchant-vessel, took (under British colours, it is said) arms and munitions to the "Sea King," not at any place in Her Majesty's dominions, but at some place in the neighbourhood of Teneriffe; that she afterwards went to Charleston; after which she appeared at Nassau, still as a mere merchant-vessel, but under the new name of the "Confederate States;" that at Nassau a British mail-bag for Liverpool was put on board her, and of this Mr. Adams complains, but we think without just cause. This vessel, though liable to capture on the high seas by the cruizers of the United States, had committed no offence punishable by British law; and it was as competent to British authorities at Nassau to put a mail-bag on board of her as on board of any merchant-vessel of the United States, or of any other nation bound to England.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 283.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received March 30.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 29, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the papers, as marked in the margin,* relative to the landing of a boat at Nassau from the United States' ship of war "Honduras," without the permission of the Governor of the Bahamas and without having been admitted to pratique. That we should observe that Mr. Adams, under instructions from his Government, has made to your Lordship a representation respecting the proceedings of the Colonial authorities on the occasion in question, and has suggested, by Mr. Seward's orders, that Her Majesty's Government should no longer recognize the belligerent rights of the Confederate States upon the high seas.

A draft of answer which your Lordship proposes to return to Mr. Adams' note, and a correspondence with the Colonial Office, from which we should perceive that the draft has already been submitted to Mr. Secretary Cardwell, was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with such observations as we may have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That so far as relates to the question as to the United States' ship "Honduras," and the proceedings of the Governor of the Bahamas, we think the proposed despatch is right and proper to be sent.

With respect to the remainder of the despatch, we think it our duty to submit, for your Lordship's consideration, the following remarks:—

1. So far as relates to the paragraph which deals generally with the subject of breaches of blockade, we see no objection thereto; but if it is retained, we would suggest the addition of words at the end to the effect "that Mr. Adams must therefore see that no international duty has been violated by Her Majesty's Government in permitting the resort to the Bahamas, or other British possessions, of merchant-vessels of either belligerent, in whatever traffic they may have been engaged."

2. The last paragraph but one of the draft despatch (which we have inclosed within brackets and marked No. 1) relates to a Report of the Secretary of the Navy of the United States on the subject of the blockade of Wilmington, which Report we have not seen.

If that Report is such as really to amount to an admission by the United States that no legal blockade has been maintained at that port, it may be a matter for the serious consideration of Her Majesty's Government whether any steps ought to be taken by them for the vindication of the rights of any British subjects whose ships or cargoes may have been condemned for the alleged violation of such a blockade. But it is obvious that this would be an exceedingly grave matter, involving, possibly, the interests of many persons, and it would be absolutely necessary, in our judgment, before any safe opinion could be formed on such a point, that the effect of the letter containing the supposed admission should be very deliberately considered; and Her Majesty's Government would probably think it desirable, on such a subject, to have the assistance of the Law Officers of the Crown.

On the contrary supposition, viz., that the Report, when examined, would not be found clearly to amount to an admission that no legal blockade has been maintained at Wilmington (although it may have been therein stated that, owing to local circumstances, the blockade has been maintained there with greater difficulty and less efficiency than elsewhere), we venture to express our decided opinion that it would be very inexpedient to introduce into your Lordship's despatch any passage to the effect of that which we have bracketed and marked No. 1, or any other reference to the same subject. We found this opinion not merely upon the fact that the Declaration of Paris has not been understood by us to alter the previous law upon the subject of blockade (and if it had done so would not have been binding upon the United States), but also upon other and more important reasons. It seems to us obvious that the suggestion of the legal insufficiency of the blockade at Wilmington in a diplomatic communication, without reference to any practical consequences, is not desirable; and, in the event of such a despatch being made public (as would probably happen either in this country or in the United States), it might tend to raise very embarrassing questions, both as to the propriety of the acquiescence hitherto of Her Majesty's Government in the blockade, and as to the duty of advancing claims for restitution to private persons; which questions, at all events, ought not to be raised unless under some clear exigency of public duty.

We therefore respectfully suggest that, under any circumstances, this passage should be entirely omitted from the despatch.

3. With respect to the final paragraph of the draft (which we have also bracketed and marked No. 2), we would suggest the expediency of an alteration to the following effect: "With respect to the latter part of your letter, suggesting that certain consequences ought to arise from the present altered position of the seaports of the Confederates, I feel bound, in the same spirit of fairness and amity which has throughout this painful contest inspired Her Majesty's Government, to state to you that Her Majesty's Government are not aware of any principle of international law which would justify them, under the circumstances to which you refer, in making a distinction between the belligerent rights of either of the contending Powers, whether at sea or by land; though Her Majesty will, of course, continue, as she has heretofore done, to prevent, to the utmost of her power, the violation of her own rights and of her own neutrality."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 284.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, March 31, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th of February ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 31st of January, and to our previous Reports on the case of the persons charged with having committed the St. Alban's raid, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for such observations as we might have to offer thereupon, a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing copies of depositions and other evidence in this matter taken before Mr. Justice Smith at Montreal.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 16th of March instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two further letters and their inclosures from the Colonial Office relative to the case of the St. Alban's raiders; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, together with those inclosed in his letter of the 27th ultimo, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, without seeing all the documents proved on the part of the prisoners, for the

---

* Mr. Adams, March 15; Colonial Office, March 16; Mr. Burnley, No. 138, 1865.

1865

purpose of showing that the St. Alban's raid was an expedition undertaken under express orders for that purpose from the authorities of the Confederate States (and especially the alleged instructions under the hand of the Honourable Clement C. Clay, which are not with the papers), we are unable to judge whether the primâ facie case of robbery, made out by the depositions on the part of the United States, has been sufficiently rebutted.

We collect, however, from the depositions that the Honourable Clement C. Clay, lately resident at St. Catherine's, in Upper Canada, was a Political Agent of the Confederate Government, said to be armed with the largest powers; and that it was the object of the prisoners' evidence (oral and documentary) to show that they, being Confederate officers and soldiers, were directed by their Government to take their instructions from this Mr. Clay as to the special service to be performed by them; and that they did accordingly receive from Mr. Clay, in Canada, instructions for the attack which they afterwards made upon St. Alban's, and were furnished by him, in Canada, with money for that purpose; and that they did, in fact, proceed from Canada to St. Alban's, on a belligerent expedition, under those instructions.

If this be so (and assuming the belligerent character of the acts done to be made out by the evidence), we think the Attorney-General of Canada is right in holding that the evidence discloses a gross and deliberate violation of the neutrality of this country: and that the prisoners, if discharged under the warrant for their extradition, ought (together with Mr. Clay, if he can be found within the jurisdiction) to be put upon their trial for such misdemeanour, either at common law, or under the Foreign Enlistment Act, as may appear to the Legal Advisers of the Canadian Government to be capable of being established by the evidence.

It is needless for us to add that the employment by the Confederate Government of a Political Agent resident in Canada for such purposes is a wilful offence by that Government against the neutrality of this country, for which no excuse or palliation can be suggested.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 285.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 5, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of March ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith, for our information, and for any observations which we might have to offer thereupon, a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 161, March 13), inclosing a copy of an Enrolment Act lately passed by the United States' Congress.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are glad to see the penalties imposed by this Act against unlawful enlistment. It does not seem to us to require any further observation, as the subject matter is one entirely for the consideration of the United States' Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 286.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of yesterday's date, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the papers respecting the case of Vernon Locke, a person who while in command of the Confederate privateer "Retribution," captured in the year 1863, a United States' merchant-vessel, the "Hanover," and, taking her into a port of the Bahamas, disposed of her cargo, under circumstances which led to the arrest of Vernon Locke, and to an indictment being preferred against him for conspiracy and forgery.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe that the offence being a bailable one, Vernon Locke was admitted to bail, to which however he did not answer, and his recognizances were forfeited. And that it further appears from the letter from the Colonial Office of the 5th instant, that Vernon Locke has been re-arrested, and lodged in gaol at Nassau, and that his trial will take place about or before the 25th of this month. And that he was accordingly directed to request that we would take this case into our consideration, and advise your Lordship as to any directions which it might be expedient to transmit to the Governor of the Bahamas for his guidance therein, and that, as we should observe that it would be necessary that those directions should be transmitted to the Governor by the mail of Saturday next, the matter is very pressing.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the conduct of the trial of Vernon Locke for the offences with which he now stands charged, must necessarily be left to the Colonial Attorney-General, who seems fully alive to the importance of the case.

The only observation which it occurs to us to make (being in ignorance of the precise facts which the Attorney-General of the Bahamas expects to be able to prove at the trial, except so far as they may be inferred from the correspondence of 1863-64), is that we do not quite see why the prisoner should be charged with forgery, as a misdemeanour at common law only, and not as a felony; it being stated in the papers of 1863 that he forged the name of Washington Case to papers subscribed by him in his pretended character of master of the "Hanover," while she was at Long Cay. We presume that forgery of this description is a felony by the law of the Bahamas, as well as by that of England.

In the event of the present prosecution failing, we do not at present see what evidence there is of any other charge on which Vernon Locke could be detained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 287.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 7.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 5th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a letter dated the 4th instant from Baron Rothschild, forwarding two letters addressed to your Lordship by Mr. Samuel Pratt, in which he asks for the interference of Her Majesty's Government to obtain the release of his son, Mr. Ernest William Pratt, who has been arrested at New York, under the circumstances therein mentioned; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this case into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion as to any steps which it may be practicable for Her Majesty's Government to instruct Sir Frederick Bruce to take on behalf of Mr. Ernest Pratt.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think all that can be done at present is to forward copies of these papers to Sir F. Bruce, and to instruct him to use his good offices on behalf of Mr. Pratt, and endeavour to obtain his release if that be found practicable. It is manifest that the contemplated breach of blockade by the "City of Richmond" cannot be any justification for Mr. Pratt's arrest or imprisonment. But a much more serious question will arise if the cause of the arrest should prove to be Mr. Pratt's participation in the equipment for war of the ram "Stonewall Jackson."

If the Government of the United States should insist upon treating as enemies all persons who may have taken part in the equipment at sea of ships of war for the service of the Confederates, when such persons are found within United States' territory, and should claim the application of this principle to the case of Mr. Pratt, we should desire to give further consideration to this novel and important question.

In the meanwhile, we are of opinion that Mr. Pratt must be entitled to know upon what charge he is imprisoned, and to be allowed all necessary means for defending himself.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 288.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 8.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 7, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th ultimo, stating that he was directed to transmit to us a despatch and its inclosures from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, respecting a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States, imposing the penalty of confinement as prisoners of war upon domiciled aliens and non-resident foreigners, who have been, or shall have been, engaged in violating the blockade of the Southern ports; and to request that we would take this Proclamation into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, transmitting a despatch from Mr. Burnley respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have the honour to express our entire agreement with the principles laid down in the Memorandum of Mr. Burnley to Mr. Seward. It is not necessary to dispute the right of the United States' Government to order any individual foreigner or foreigners, whom they may consider to be dangerous or hostile to the United States, to leave their territory upon reasonable notice. But this Proclamation cannot be justified on that principle. It is addressed to no particular individuals, but to all "non-resident foreigners who have been, or shall have been, engaged in violating the blockade of the insurgent ports," and it makes the continuance of any person, who may afterwards be decided by martial law to fall within this category, for twelve days in the United States, a ground for his imprisonment in military custody till the end of the war.

This cannot be called a reasonable warning to individuals to leave the United States' territory; it is nothing less than an enactment of an ex post facto criminal law, and an evasion of the restraints of international law under the colour of territorial rights.

It is obvious that such an edict may, if acted upon, be the occasion of most arbitrary injustice towards the subjects of neutral States, to which Her Majesty's Government cannot be expected to submit.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above was written, we have received Mr. Hammond's further letter of the 6th instant, inclosing one from Mr. Manlove, calling your Lordship's attention to a Proclamation stated to have been issued by the President of the United States, ordering all Englishmen out of the States in twelve days, under pain of imprisonment; and Mr. Hammond stated that your Lordship presumed this Proclamation to be the same as that referred to in his former letters above reported upon, and requested that we would report to your Lordship as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Manlove.

We have therefore the honour further to report—

That, with respect to Mr. Manlove's letter, we think your Lordship's answer should simply be that you are not aware of any such Proclamation having been issued as that which he describes, except one which applies exclusively to foreigners being in or coming into the United States, who may have been engaged in blockade-running; as to which Her Majesty's Government are now in communication with the Government of the United States.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 289.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 15.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 15, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 13th instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 16th ultimo, upon the case of the "Tallahassee" or "Chameleon," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the accompanying letters and their inclosures,* from which we should see that this vessel has now arrived in the Mersey; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion as to the course which Her Majesty's Government should adopt in the matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we find in these papers nothing to show either that the vessel now called the "Chameleon" is not what she is represented to be at the present time, namely, a merchant-vessel of the Confederate States (in which character she was received after a careful examination by the British authorities at the Bahamas), or that any part of her present cargo is prize taken from subjects of the United States.

We have on former occasions reported our opinion that it is competent to a belligerent (subject to the right of capture by the other belligerent) to sell, or to convert into a merchant-vessel, any ship which has been previously employed as a ship of war; and that a ship of which the character has been bonâ fide so changed, ought to be treated as a merchant-vessel by neutral States.

We think, therefore, that the "Chameleon" ought to be suffered to discharge and deliver her cargo without further delay at Liverpool; especially as in the two former cases of the "Sumter" and "Georgia," in which similar questions arose, nothing transpired after the alleged conversion of those ships into merchant-vessels to throw doubt upon the bona fides of such conversion.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 290.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, April 19, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th April instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 8th March ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 186, March 21), inclosing a copy of a letter from Mr. Seward, in answer to the representation, founded on the Queen's Advocate's Report of the 11th of February, which he had addressed to the United States' Government respecting cotton, the property of British subjects, stored in Savannah at the time of the occupation of that city by the United States' forces.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that the previous papers,† together with a subsequent despatch from Mr. Burnley and a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Charleston,‡ relative to cotton at that port owned by British subjects, were also inclosed, and that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would again take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any further observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That, with respect to the principal question, we have nothing to add to the considerations relating to it contained in our former Report.

* To Colonial Office, March 18; Admiralty, April 10; Treasury, April 11; to Treasury, April 11; Treasury, April 12; Admiralty, April 12; Colonial Office, April 12; Mr. Adams, April 12; Treasury, April 13, 1865.

† Mr. Burnley, No. 56, January 24; Mr. Lafone, February 9 and February 11; to Mr. Burnley, No. 50, February 11; Mr. Burnley, No. 90, February 7, and No. 101, February 13; to Mr. Burnley, No. 86, March 11, 1865.

‡ Mr. Burnley, No. 164, March 13; Mr. Walker, No. 22, February 27, 1865.

1865

We think that the British claimants of cotton should be apprised that they must be prepared to substantiate by proper legal proof their claims to the cotton which they allege to be their property, and to take whatever measures they may be advised by competent authority may be necessary for prosecuting those claims in a court of justice. It is to be presumed that the United States' Government will give due information to all parties interested, as to the tribunal before which such claims must be established.

Having regard to the despatch of Mr. Consul Walker (No. 22, Inclosure 1), it is necessary that the British claimants should be informed that they must not rely upon the Convention of Commerce (3rd July, 1815), inasmuch as the cotton has been seized jure belli in a town of the enemy, captured by the forces of the United States. It will, therefore, be incumbent upon them to show both that the cotton is their property and that they have not in any way impressed upon themselves, by their conduct, the character of belligerents.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 291.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 21, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th of April instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans (No. 14, February 23), inclosing a transcript of proceedings in the United States' Prize Court in that city in the case of the British schooner "Carrie Mair," and to request that we would take this case into consideration and favour your Lordship with any observations which we may have to offer thereupon.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that Mr. Acting Consul Coppell's despatch referred to by Mr. Donohoe was likewise inclosed (No. 3, January 11).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have no copy of the Judgment in extenso which we presume was delivered in this case. The vessel appears to have been taken in blockaded waters, and as at present advised we see no reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of the owners.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 292.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 21, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Wallace Foden, dated the 11th ultimo, stating the circumstances under which he has become a resident in the United States, and the grounds on which he seeks exemption from serving in the United States' army; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take Mr. Foden's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Foden cannot, in the circumstances which he states, be protected by Her Majesty's Government from serving in the United States' army.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 293.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 22.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 21, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 17th instant, inclosing copies of despatches from Governor Sir C. Darling, together with their several inclosures, relative to the visit to the port of Melbourne of the Confederate States' steamer "Shenandoah," and the alleged enlistment of British subjects there to serve on board that vessel; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we may have to offer thereupon, and more particularly as to whether they seem to require any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that, in the circumstances stated, his Excellency the Governor acted with propriety and discretion; and there does not appear to us, at present, to be a necessity for any action on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

With respect to his Excellency's request that he may receive instructions as to the propriety of executing any warrant under the Foreign Enlistment Act on board a Confederate (public) ship of war, we are of opinion that, in a case of strong suspicion, he ought to request the permission of the commander of the ship to execute the warrant; and that, if this request be refused, he ought not to attempt to enforce the execution: but that, in this case, the commander should be desired to leave the port as speedily as possible, and should be informed that he will not be re-admitted into it.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 294.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 25.)

Lincoln's Inn, April 25, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 7th instant, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 8th October and 9th May last, respecting the case of the "Scylla," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Gustavus Heyn, dated the 29th ultimo, inclosing a statement by Mr. Francis D. Hamilton, master of the "Scylla," claiming compensation from the United States' Government on account of ill-treatment which he received when that vessel was seized by the United States' authorities. The previous correspondence was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Heyn.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case again into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think it is not expedient, in answer to Mr. Heyn, to say more than that Her Majesty's Government have been in communication with the Government of the United States on the subject of the "Scylla," and have had reason to suppose that the question of the validity of the capture of that vessel had been, or would be, made the subject of judicial proceedings: and that they now propose to transmit a copy of Captain Hamilton's statement to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, with a view to such further inquiries being made, or such other measures being taken, as may be proper, under the circumstances of the case; but that, until the facts as to the vessel and her cargo are more clearly understood, it would be premature to determine whether a claim for compensation to Captain Hamilton can be urged with any prospect of success. We desire to point out to your Lordship the inconsistency between Captain Hamilton's statements, as to the interference of General Canby to withdraw this case from the Prize Court, after the vessel had been libelled, and the representations contained in the inclosures sent by Mr. Seward to Lord Lyons in his letter of the 26th November last.

We cannot but add, that the circumstance of no representation having been made to Her Majesty's Government by or on the part of Mr. Mesnard, the alleged British owner of the "Scylla," while Captain Hamilton's case is recommended to their notice by Mr. Gustavus Heyn of Belfast (whom we do not understand to have had or to claim any interest in the vessel or her cargo), appear to us strange and suspicious; and that their apparent tendency is to corroborate Mr. Seward's assertion and belief, that the British ownership of the "Scylla" was colourable only.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 295.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, April 25, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Layard's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 11th instant, and its inclosure, respecting the arrival at Nassau of the "City of Richmond," after having been engaged in conveying seamen, arms, and ammunition, to the "Stonewall;" and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion whether the parties concerned in this transaction can be prosecuted on their return to this country for their proceedings at Greenhithe or elsewhere.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That there is not at present any evidence before us on which a successful prosecution of any of the parties could be conducted, if they should return to this country.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 296.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 26.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, April 25, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 18th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter dated the 12th instant from the Colonial Office, and its inclosures, containing an account of the proceedings arising out of the wreck of the United States' ship "San Jacinto," off Abaco Island; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the definition of British waters given in Governor Rawson's circular of the 27th of February, together with any other observations which a perusal of the papers might suggest to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the circular of Governor Rawson is proper and in accordance with the principles of law applicable to the subject, and that his definition of the limits of Her Majesty's territory is substantially correct.

That we think that it would be expedient to grant the discretionary power which he desires to be conferred on the principal officers in the out-islands, with respect to permitting the anchorage of belligerent vessels in British waters, for the purpose of assisting other vessels of the same character which may have been werecked.

That the course pursued by his Excellency towards the "San Jacinto" and the United States' officers appears to us to have been in every respect judicious and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 297.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received April 28.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, April 28, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams in answer to a letter received from him, dated the 7th instant (inclosed therewith), in which Mr. Adams, under instructions from his Government, renews, with reference to the case of the "Shenandoah," and the part lately taken by the "City of Richmond" steamer in taking supplies to the French-built steam-ram "Stonewall," the charge against this country of not properly checking hostile organizations against United States' commerce. Mr. Adams is instructed to maintain that this and the other evils of which he complains have had their origin in the fact of Her Majesty's Government having recognized the Confederates as belligerents; but as the Southern ports have now fallen into the hands of the United States, the United States' Government looks to that of Her Majesty for a removal of this ground of complaint. Finally, Mr. Adams expresses a hope that the ships of war of the United States will be welcomed in British waters in the same friendly manner as has been heretofore customary.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship at our earliest convenience with our opinion upon the answer which it is proposed to return to Mr. Adams' representation.

Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that a printed memorandum drawn up in your Lordship's Department upon the conduct pursued by the United States towards Spain and Portugal during the revolt of the Spanish American Provinces was annexed for our information.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have carefully perused and considered the draft of the letter which your Lordship proposes to address to Mr. Adams, and are humbly of opinion that, with certain additions and alterations which we have taken the liberty to suggest, it is proper to be sent.

(In the absence of the Queen's Advocate),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.

No. 298.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 4, 1865.
My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th April he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with Mr. Menlove's previous letter and with a copy of the answer which was returned thereto[*] in conformity with our Report, a letter which has been received from that gentleman, dated the 22nd April, in which he again adverts to his claim against the United States' Government in reference to the closing by that Government of certain banks in the Southern States; and to request that we would take Mr. Menlove's letter into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to the reply which should be made thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proper answer to be sent to Mr. Menlove would be, to refer him to the answer returned, by your Lordship's direction, to his former letter; and to add, that your Lordship cannot interfere with respect to the proceedings of the United States' Government in closing the Banks at New Orleans.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

[*] Mr. Menlove, April 3; to Mr. Menlove, April 11, 1865.

1865

No. 299.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a correspondence between Mr. Cornelius Noonan and your Lordship's Department,* upon the question whether he can claim protection for his property and that of his wife in New Orleans; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Mr. Noonan is not entitled to claim British protection for his own property or that of his wife, at New Orleans.,

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 300.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Murray's letter of the 21st ultimo, stating that with reference to our Reports of the 25th of February and 16th ultimo, respecting the case of Bennett Burley, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a despatch from Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington (No. 196, March 24), inclosing copies of his correspondence with Mr. Seward on the suggested attempt to change the ground of accusation upon which Burley was surrendered by the Canadian authorities. A letter from the Colonial Office, containing observations upon this correspondence, was also inclosed; and Mr. Murray was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we retain our opinion that it would have been a breach of good faith to have put Burley upon his trial for the charge of piracy, which was not the ground of his extradition under the Treaty, unless he were, at all events, bonâ fide tried for robbery, for which offence he was given up. The same observation is equally applicable to the charge of assault with intent to commit murder; with which we do not understand him to have been charged before the Canadian authorities.

We adhere, however, to our former opinion as to the limited power of interference of Her Majesty's Government in this case, if Burley be really tried upon the charge for which he was delivered up, and upon other charges also. It appears now that, at all events, he will not be tried for piracy, as had been apprehended.

We have, &c.

(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 301.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 5, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 7th ultimo, respecting the case of Verdon (or Vernon) Locke, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, a letter, and its inclosures, from the Colonial Office dated the 2nd instant, on the subject of a requisition made by the United States' Government, through Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington, for the surrender of Locke on charges of piracy and murder, arising out of the case of the "Chesapeake;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion as to any instructions which it will be proper to send to the Governor of the Bahamas thereupon; and that we should observe that it is stated in the letter from the Colonial Office that the mail for the Bahamas will be dispatched on Saturday next.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in our opinion the Governor of the Bahamas has taken a correct view of his immediate duty in this case.

When a demand is duly made for the extradition of a person who is himself already under arrest and about to be tried for an offence against British law, or who is undergoing his sentence after a conviction for any such offence, the trial for that offence ought to take place, and the sentence (if any) ought to be undergone, before it can be necessary or proper to deliver up such accused person to the foreign Government demanding his extradition; and the proceedings with a view to his extradition ought to be regulated by these considerations, though care should, of course, be taken to avoid any such delay as would enable such an accused person, who was in custody or within the power of the British authorities when the demand was made, afterwards to escape, before the necessary warrants for his detention under the charge made by the foreign Government were issued and executed.

With respect to the remarks of the Governor of the Bahamas upon the form of Mr. Seward's requisition of the 6th March, 1865, it is desirable, we think, to point out that the Statute 6 and 7 Vict., cap. 76, requires, in all cases of extradition by any British Colonial authorities, two warrants,* the first being the Governor's own warrant, which is necessary to enable any Justice of the Peace to deal with the case, but which is not itself sufficient to authorize the apprehension of the alleged offender, and the second being that of "a Justice of the Peace, or other person having power to commit for trial persons accused of crimes against the laws of that part of Her Majesty's dominions," under which alone the prisoner may be actually apprehended and committed to gaol.

The Statute authorizes the Governor to issue his preliminary warrant upon any request proceeding from the United States' Government which is, in substance, "a requisition for the delivery of any person charged with the crime of, inter alia, murder or piracy committed within the jurisdiction of the United States who shall be found within the territories of Her Majesty;" and although it is desirable that every such requisition should (as has been hitherto usual) be in such a form as upon the face of it to show all facts necessary for the commission of the alleged crime within the United States' jurisdiction, and though it is expedient, whenever opportunity offers, to call attention to the informality of any such requisition which may appear to deviate from that usual and desirable practice, we think (as we have before advised) that it is better for the Governor to issue his warrant upon a requisition defective in form, but not manifestly improper in substance, than to withhold it, because no final injustice can be done by his so granting it, and the responsibility for any risk of a failure of the subsequent proceedings on that account will rest with the United States' Government; while, on the other hand, the refusal of the Governor might, perhaps, frustrate the object of the demand, and (if grounded on reasons not clearly authorized by the terms of the Treaty) might lead to embarrassing questions between the Government of this country and that of the United States.

The same observations apply to the absence of depositions in support of the requisition. It has been usual to submit to the Governor, with the requisition, depositions verifying the charge; the 2nd section of the Statute seems to contemplate that there will, or at least may be, such depositions, and the practice is a very proper and convenient one, to which it is, in our judgment, desirable (whenever practicable) to adhere. But we do not find in the Statute any express provision which makes it absolutely necessary that there should be such depositions, in order to justify the Governor in issuing his preliminary warrant, and no injustice can be done to the person accused if he issues it without them, because no step can be taken under that warrant without the production before a Magistrate of "such evidence as, according to the laws of that part of Her Majesty's dominions, would justify the apprehension and committal for trial of the

---

* Mr. Noonan, February ; to Mr. Noonan, February 25; Mr. Noonan, April 21, 1865.

* See on these subjects our Report of the 16th March last, on a despatch of the Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick as to the St. Alban's raiders.

1865

person so accused, if the crime of which he or she shall be so accused, had been there committed."

Our conclusion therefore is, that if, in the present case, the Government of the United States should think fit, at their own risk, to press the demand upon Mr. Seward's requisition of the 6th March, 1865, which states the crimes of piracy and murder to have been committed by "Vernon G. Locke," "on board the United States' merchant-steamer 'Chesapeake'" (not specifying where the "Chesapeake" then was), then the Governor of the Bahamas ought not to refuse to act upon this, as a sufficient requisition; and that if the United States' Government do not accompany or follow up the demand by proper depositions before such warrant is issued, they may be left, if they can, to make good that defect before the Magistrate to whom the application must then be made for the necessary warrant of arrest.

We may add that if the depositions should show (as we believe the fact to be) that the alleged "piracy" was committed on the high seas, the decision of the English Court of Queen's Bench in the case of the "Joseph Gerrity"* is a direct authority against the extradition of the accused upon that ground. But Mr. Seward's demand extends to murder also; and as the United States' Courts have exclusive jurisdiction to try charges of murder committed on board United States' merchant-ships on the high seas, we think that this part of the charge is not governed by the case of the "Joseph Gerrity."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 302.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 8.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 8, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 19th ultimo, and to previous Reports upon the question of the cotton captured at Savannah, he was directed to transmit to us a despatch from Mr. Burnley (No. 216), inclosing copies of a Judgment delivered in the Supreme Court in December last, in the case of some cotton captured in the Red River, and a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York, reporting that 391 bales of the captured cotton had been sold at auction; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the effect of the decision of Chief Justice Chase upon the property of neutrals.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with Mr. Burnley in ascribing considerable importance to the decision of the Supreme Court delivered by Chief Justice Chase.

It appears by that decision that any claimant of property captured by the land forces of the United States may, at any time within two years after the suppression of the rebellion, on proof of ownership of the property, and that "he has never given aid or comfort to the rebellion," have a decree for the proceeds.

The doctrine that property seized upon the capture of a town in the enemy's country is, primâ facie, the property of an enemy, and liable to seizure and confiscation, is one the legal soundness of which Her Majesty's Government cannot (in our opinion) be advised to gainsay. We think that the burden of displacing this presumption lies upon each individual claimant, suing for his own right, in the Courts of justice of the captor; and it may be proper to add, that foreigners having a permanent, or a commercial, domicil in the enemy's country, are (generally speaking) regarded by the laws of war, in the same light as citizens of that country.

We think that the Government of the claimant might properly interfere in his behalf to obtain for him, if it were denied, access to a judicial remedy; but that it should not (except under exceptional circumstances) exceed this limit.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* 10 Law Times' Reports (new series), p. 499.

No. 303.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 10.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 10, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 2nd instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Mr. Valentine O'Connor, dated the 22nd ultimo, with whose claims in respect of tobacco, both at Richmond and on board the "Hiawatha," we are familiar, requesting, now that Richmond is in the possession of the United States' Government, that Her Majesty's Government will take such measures as may lead to the recovery by Mr. O'Connor of the tobacco at Richmond bought and paid for by him; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take Mr. O'Connor's application into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

Mr. Hammond also transmitted the volumes containing the case of the "Hiawatha," and previous correspondence, and further stated that we should observe that in Mr. O'Connor's letter of the 19th of September, 1861, he said he had about 360 hogsheads of tobacco in Richmond, whereas now he states the quantity to be 853 hogsheads.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think that, having regard to the peculiar circumstances of this case, Her Majesty's Representative at Washington might properly be instructed to use his good offices with the United States' Government in order to procure, if possible, the delivery of this tobacco to Mr. O'Connor, on proof of his title thereto. He ought, however, first to be called upon to explain the discrepancies between his original statement (19th September, 1861) that he had 360 hogsheads at Richmond; his subsequent statement (13th May, 1862), that he had 667 hogsheads (the marks and numbers of which were inclosed in his letter of that date); and his present claim to 853 hogsheads. We assume that this tobacco was all so stored at Richmond as to be primâ facie identified as Mr. O'Connor's property. If it should turn out that all, or any part of it, has been ordered to be sold with other property seized at Richmond by the forces of the United States, or if the proofs of title offered are not satisfactory to the United States' authorities, Mr. O'Connor must unavoidably be left to substantiate and prosecute his claim like other persons under similar circumstances, before the proper tribunals of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

P.S.—Since the above Report was copied, we have received Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, with the further letter from Mr. O'Connor, dated the 6th instant, therein inclosed.

The only reply which can properly be given to that letter is, that the Government of the United States cannot be held answerable for tobacco burnt at Richmond by order of the Confederate Government; and that Her Majesty's Government cannot interfere, with a view to obtain from Mr. O'Connor any compensation for losses so sustained.

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. P.

No. 304.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 11.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 10, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of the letter which was sent to Mr. Adams on the 4th of May, together with his letter to which it was a reply; and with reference to the concluding passage in that draft, wherein your Lordship states, "Her Majesty's Government are quite willing that vessels of war of the United States shall be treated in the ports of Her Majesty in the same manner as Her Majesty's vessels of war are treated in the ports of the United States, with this single exception, that if an enemy's vessel of war should come into the same port, the vessel which shall first leave the port shall not be pursued by its enemy till twenty-four hours shall have elapsed," Mr. Hammond was to request that we would prepare, at our earliest convenience, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, a draft of the instructions which should be issued by the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, and by Her Majesty's several Secretaries of State, in conformity with what your Lordship has stated to Mr. Adams. For convenience of reference, copies of the instructions of the 31st of January, 1862, and 15th of December, 1863, were also inclosed.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we have prepared the draft instructions, which are appended to this Report.

It is hardly necessary for us to observe that so long as a state of war is recognized by Her Majesty's Government as continuing (Her Majesty being neutral therein), any orders which Her Majesty may think fit to issue as to the vessels of war of the one belligerent must apply equally to those of the other, unless, for special reasons, a distinction is thought proper to be made.

We are not in this case informed of any such special reasons; and we have assumed that no such distinction is intended to be made, as every such distinction (even if it were justified by special reasons) would be a departure, pro tanto, from that absolute neutrality which Her Majesty has hitherto observed in the present contest.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 304.

Draft Instructions.

Sir,
May , 1865.

WHEREAS Her Majesty was pleased to command that certain rules which were set forth in a letter sent by Earl Russell, K.G., Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, on the 31st January, 1860, and published in the "London Gazette" of the 15th December, 1863, should be enforced as Her Majesty's orders and directions relative to the admission into British waters of ships of war or privateers belonging to either of the belligerents during the continuance of hostilities between the Government of the United States of North America and the States calling themselves the Confederate States of America.

I have now to apprise you that it has pleased Her Majesty to recall the said orders and instructions, and to remove, with one exception, presently to be named, all restrictions relative to the admission into Her Majesty's ports and harbours of ships of war or privateers belonging to the aforesaid belligerents, and to substitute for the said orders and instructions the following order, which you will take care by all usual and proper means to make known and to enforce:—

All vessels of war belonging to either of the belligerents in the war between the Government of the United States of North America, and the States calling themselves the Confederate States of America, will be admitted into Her Majesty's ports and harbours with the same privileges and rights as the ships of war of all foreign States enjoy in time of peace, with the following exception (that is to say), "that in all cases in which there shall be any vessels (whether ships of war, privateers, or merchant ships) of both the said belligerent parties in the same port, roadstead, or waters within the territorial jurisdiction of Her Majesty, there shall be an interval of not less than twenty-four hours between the departure therefrom of any such vessel (whether a ship of war, a privateer, or merchant ship) of the one belligerent, and the subsequent departure therefrom of any ship of war or privateer of the other belligerent."

R. P.
R. P. C.
R. J. P.

No. 305.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 19, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 4th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying papers* relating to an Act of Congress recently approved by the President of the United States, respecting the fees of Custom-house officers on the northern, north-eastern, and north-western frontiers of the Republic, and containing some observations made by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, upon the 13th clause of this Act; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would furnish your Lordship with our opinion whether there is anything contained in this Act which is contrary to existing Treaty stipulations between this country and the United States.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that the 13th clause of this new Act of Congress does necessarily conflict with the provisions of reciprocity contained in the Treaties and notifications referred to, all of which (with the exception of the special provisions in the Treaty of the 5th of June, 1854, as to the navigation of Lake Michigan) relate only to the direct trade between foreign ports and ports of the United States.

We understand that, under this clause, permission will be given to foreign vessels to which they are not strictly entitled, namely, a permission to carry on an internal or coasting trade in the United States, to which the Treaties did not apply. If this be so, if the United States have, or might consistently with their Treaty obligations establish the same law respecting their internal or coasting trade, which not long ago prevailed in Her Majesty's dominions, we are disposed to think that it may be competent to the United States' Government to relax that law on such conditions as they may think proper, and on such conditions only, in favour of foreigners. But while this is our view of the strict law involved in the case, we think it may very properly be represented to the Government of the United States that the imposition of differential charges of this kind upon British shipping, when no similar charges are imposed upon the shipping of the United States under like circumstances in Her Majesty's dominions, would be at variance with the spirit (if not with the letter, properly interpreted, of the IInd Article of the Convention of the 3rd July, 1815.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 306.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 19, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 8th May instant, inclosing a copy of the proceedings taken against the St. Albans' raiders before the Recorder of Toronto; a previous letter from the Colonial Office dated the 25th ultimo, inclosing a copy of Judge Smith's decision in this case, was likewise transmitted to us.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and that in reporting to your Lordship our opinion thereupon, we would inform your Lordship whether we consider the offence with which Lieutenant Young was charged was bailable.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the offence with which Lieutenant Young was charged was a bailable offence. The papers laid before us do not appear to call for any observations in addition to those which are contained in our former Reports on this subject.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

---

* Mr. Burnley, No 181, March 17; Treasury, April 24, 1865.

1865

No. 307.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a proclamation of the President of the United States dated May 2, offering rewards for the apprehension of sundry persons charged with being parties to the late assassination of President Lincoln, and that with reference to this document he was to request that we would report to your Lordship at our earliest convenience on the following point:—

Whether Confederate adherents found in Canada or in other British North American provinces, or elsewhere in Her Majesty's dominions, and who should be charged as accessories to the murder of President Lincoln, such charge being duly supported by evidence, could properly be given up to the United States on demand for their extradition being regularly made under the provisions of the Treaty between this country and the United States, it being presumed by your Lordship that, except under the Extradition Treaty, such persons could under no circumstances be given up.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that Confederate adherents found in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, charged with being accessories to the murder of President Lincoln, the extradition of whom is demanded by the United States' Government, must be treated exactly in the same manner as persons charged with the commission of any other murder within the territory of the United States, and dealt with according to the provisions of the Extradition Treaty between this country and the United States.

We are clearly of opinion that such persons cannot be given up except under the provisions of the Extradition Treaty.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 308.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 20.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 20, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to request that we would consider and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion upon the following points:—

Supposing the war on the American continent to cease, and all exercise of the right of blockade and of detention of neutrals on the high seas to be abandoned, what will be the situation of Confederate men-of-war entering British harbours or being found there?

Should Her Majesty's Government insist, in case of such vessels being found in British harbours, upon their disarming?

That Confederate vessels of war could not be allowed to continue to carry on the war at sea from British harbours: should Her Majesty's Government prohibit any vessel of war carrying a Confederate flag from entering British harbours?

Are there any precedents by which the course to be pursued by Her Majesty's Government in such cases, as stated, could be regulated.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these questions into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that whenever the Government of the United States shall formally communicate to Her Majesty's Government that they no longer claim to exercise any of the rights of a belligerent towards neutral States, it will be competent to Her Majesty's Government, having regard to the actual state of circumstances, to consider that the war between the late belligerents has de facto ceased, and to recognize the re-establishment of peace in the territory of the United States of North America. When this recognition has taken place, we are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government should not permit any vessel of war carrying a Confederate flag to enter any of the territorial waters, harbours, or ports belonging to Her Majesty. With respect to vessels of war actually being at the time of such recognition in the territorial waters, harbours, or ports of Her Majesty, we are of opinion that the most expedient course for Her Majesty's Government to pursue will be, upon receiving the formal communication above mentioned from the Government of the United States, to apprize, without delay, that Government, that while Her Majesty is willing to recognize the fact of the war being at an end in the territories of the United States, and all the consequences which according to the principles of international law are generally incident to such a recognition, there must of necessity be a certain class of special cases reserved from the immediate operation of this recognition; namely, the cases of Confederate vessels of war (if any such there should be) which, at the time of the above-mentioned communication and recognition, may have already entered British ports on the faith of Her Majesty's Proclamations of neutrality, and which, having complied with the provisions of those Proclamations, may be then actually within the territorial waters, ports, or harbours of Her Majesty. That with respect to any such vessels, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the course which a due regard for national good faith and honour would require them to follow is to order the immediate departure of these vessels from Her Majesty's territories, enforcing for the last time, with respect to them, the existing rules which Her Majesty has hitherto required to be followed by the belligerents.

We have arrived at the conclusion that we ought to tender this advice to Her Majesty's Government after a long and anxious consideration of the subject. The course which we recommend is one which we hope will obviate the necessity of a decision upon various questions of great nicety and difficulty in international law, and which might possibly lead to great practical embarrassment in the relations between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States of North America.

In conclusion, we have to observe that we are not aware of any direct precedents by which the conduct of Her Majesty's Government can be guided in this matter; but we think that the general analogies and principle of international law are in favour of the advice which we have the honour to offer; and the reason of the thing itself suffices to show that a war like the present cannot, with regard to all its practical bearings upon the duties and rights of neutral States, be so immediately at an end as to replace at once, and by the mere announcement of the fact, exactly the state of things which existed previously to the war. The line of demarcation cannot, in practice, and without injustice, be so sharply drawn. The true rule of conduct appears to us to be that the neutral State should acknowledge, as promptly and as completely as the obligations of good faith towards the defeated belligerent will permit, the fact, with all its consequences, that the war is at an end, and that the victorious belligerent now represents the only Power within the limits of the Union which Her Majesty can any longer treat as entitled to international recognition, either for the purposes of war or otherwise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 309.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 23, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for such observations as we might have to offer thereupon, a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 256, April 25, 1865), inclosing a copy of an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States on certain questions arising out of the terms of capitulation accorded to General Lee and the army of Virginia by General Grant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the answer of the Attorney-General of the United States would appear to us very important if there could be a serious question raised upon the subject to which it relates. It places the recognition of the Confederates as belligerents upon the most exact and formal footing, and deduces from it very strictly its rigorous consequences. If it were possible to suppose that any demands or complaints, founded on the recognition of the belligerent status of the Confederates by this country, would hereafter be pressed by the United States' Government, this document might advantageously be referred to in any answer which it might become necessary to return to such demands or complaints.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 310.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Messrs. Laurie and Co., of Leith, dated the 15th instant, putting forward a claim against the United States' Government for the sum of 13,000*l.* on account of tobacco, the property of their firm, destroyed at Richmond by order of the Confederate authorities; and to request that we would take Messrs. Laurie's letter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned thereto.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the severe loss of Messrs. Laurie is very much to be regretted; but we must advise your Lordship that the proposition of law, uniformly, we believe, maintained by the Law Officers of the Crown upon principles of international law in similar cases, must be applied to the case of Messrs. Laurie, namely, that a foreigner whose goods are destroyed by the inevitable casualties of war in the place in which he is resident, or in which his property may be, cannot claim the official interference of his own Government to obtain compensation for his loss. He must seek the same remedy as the citizens of the place in which he is resident, or in which his property is, at the hands of the Government of that country.

We may add, that it is manifestly impossible for Her Majesty's Government, who have recognized the Confederate States as a belligerent Power, to hold the Government of the United States (the other belligerent) responsible in damages for injuries done by the Government of the Confederate States to property of British subjects at Richmond.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 311.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th of May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from Sir Frederick Bruce, dated the 2nd instant, relative to the treatment of foreigners accused of having run the blockade, and who have been employed by the Confederate Government; and to request that we would take this letter into immediate consideration, and favour your Lordship at our early convenience with our opinion on the matters therein referred to.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this letter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have often had the honour to state, in former reports, that the mere offence of blockade-running by neutrals cannot be visited by the belligerent with any severer punishment than the confiscation, after due judicial investigation in the proper Prize Court, of the vessel and cargo, one or both, according to the circumstances of each case; to that opinion we steadily adhere.

This simple question, however, becomes seriously complicated when the blockade-runner has entered, directly or indirectly, into engagements of any kind with the belligerent Government. He may have thereby rendered himself liable to be treated as an enemy; and whether he has done so or not must depend upon the circumstances of each individual case.

As to the general proposition, we desire to report that it cannot be too firmly maintained by Her Majesty's Government that the United States have no right, so far, at least, as neutral interests are concerned, to claim the privileges of belligerents, and, at the same time, by denying that there is an enemy or a war, to escape from the obligations of belligerents.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 312.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 272) inclosing a copy of a letter which he had addressed to the Acting Secretary of State of the United States, relative to a notice issued by the United States' military authorities at Boston, directing that vessels are not to be allowed to land passengers or cargo, if the passports of any of the passengers are not duly viséd; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this matter into immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th instant, transmitting the accompanying despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at Boston (No. 23), inclosing a copy of the notice issued by the Provost Marshal at that port, which formed the subject of Sir F. Bruce's despatch No. 272 of the 2nd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that the letter of Sir F. Bruce was very proper. We are not able to deny the strict right of the United States' authorities, in such critical times as the present, to make, for their own security, any reasonable passport regulations. But if a passenger duly provided with a passport were prevented from landing, merely on the ground that other passengers were not so provided, this would appear to us to be unreasonable, and, indeed, at variance with the tenor of the passport itself.

We cannot, therefore, but hope that the meaning of the Regulation in this respect may have been misapprehended by Sir F. Bruce; and we assume that, at all events, it is not meant to be applied to any vessels, which may have sailed from this country, or from the Continent of Europe, before they could receive notice that such passports would be required.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 313.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 26.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 19th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 271, May 2), inclosing a copy of a letter which he has addressed to the Acting Secretary of State of the United States, relative to an oath exacted from foreigners resident in the Southern States, and the steps taken by the United States' military authorities at Charleston to induce foreigners to leave that city; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this despatch into consideration, and furnish your Lordship at our early convenience with our opinion thereupon.

1865

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinion expressed in our former Reports on this subject. We think it competent to the United States' authorities to forbid the trading of foreigners at Charleston, who do not withdraw themselves, for whatever reason, from that city, and who refuse to take any oath (not involving a renunciation of allegiance to their proper Sovereign) which the Government of the United States may think it necessary for its own security to tender to them.

At the same time the present measure appears to us to be of extraordinary rigour, and we trust that the letters of Sir F. Bruce may produce some mitigation of it in favour of British subjects.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 314.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 25, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 18th May instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the draft of a letter, founded on our Report of the 10th instant, which your Lordship caused to be addressed to Mr. O'Connor on the 13th instant, respecting his tobacco at Richmond, together with the letter which has been received from that gentleman in reply, dated the 15th instant; and to request that we would again take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to the letter from Mr. O'Connor.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think an answer should be sent to Mr. O'Connor to the effect that Her Majesty's Government are advised that they ought not to make any application to the United States' Government for compensation to Mr. O'Connor for the loss which he alleges himself to have sustained.

That Mr. O'Connor must seek such remedy (if any) as may be competent to a citizen of the place in which his tobacco was destroyed, who had sustained a similar loss.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 315.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 25.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 25, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for such observations as we might have to offer thereupon, a letter from the Colonial Office dated the 11th instant, inclosing copies of a despatch and its inclosures from the Governor of the Bahamas, relative to certain vessels suspected by the United States' Government to be designed for the Confederate service.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the despatch of his Excellency the Governor of the Bahama Islands does not appear to us to call for any special observations on our part. The course which his Excellency has pursued is in our opinion right and proper.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 316.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 11th May instant, stating that with reference to our Report of the 8th instant he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir Frederick Bruce (No. 255), relative to cotton in places captured by the United States' forces which is claimed by British subjects or other foreigners.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous papers, together with a copy of the Act of the United States' Congress referred to by Sir Frederick Bruce; and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer on Sir Frederick Bruce's despatch.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 15th instant, stating that with reference to his letter of the 11th instant respecting cotton in places captured by the United States' forces belonging to British subjects, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us for consideration a despatch on this subject from Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans (No. 20, April 14).

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that if the United States' Government treat the cotton of British subjects captured by the United States' forces in blockaded or besieged towns, in the same way as they treat the cotton so captured of their own subjects, their conduct in this respect furnishes no ground for complaint on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

The view of the case taken by Sir F. Bruce appears to us to be correct, and the course he has pursued to be right.

It is to be hoped that the suggestion contained in the opinion of Messrs. Sullivan, Billings, and Hughes (if founded on a correct view of the law and practice of the United States in these cases, on which point we do not feel ourselves by any means competent to offer an opinion) may be spontaneously adopted by British owners of cotton, and by this means many embarrassing questions avoided: but we do not think that Her Majesty's Government can take upon themselves the responsibility of advising the adoption of this or any other particular course by individuals; and at all events we see no reason at present for any interference on the part of Her Majesty's Government.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 317.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, May 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, for such observations as we may have to offer thereupon, a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 11th instant, inclosing copies of a despatch and its inclosures from the Governor of the Bahamas, relative to the proceedings of the United States' vessels of war at Inagua.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd instant, transmitting a further letter and its inclosure from the Colonial Office, dated the 22nd instant, respecting this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the course pursued by the Governor of the Bahamas appears to us to have been in every respect right and proper.

With respect to his Excellency's suggestion, that United States' ships of war engaged in convoying mail-packets carrying passengers of all nations should, upon the conditions and under the limitations mentioned by him, be permitted to use the roadsteads at Mariguana and Inagua, we think that it may properly be acted upon if it should be considered necessary or expedient still to continue in force the general exclusion of ships of war of either belligerent from the ports and waters of the Bahamas.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 318.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 29.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 25th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 287, May 10), inclosing a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States with regard to Confederate cruizers. A draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir F. Bruce on this subject was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take the same into consideration, and furnish your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, with our opinion whether it is right and proper.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That in our opinion the proposed despatch is right and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

Inclosure in No. 318.

Draft of Despatch to Sir F. Bruce.

Foreign Office, May , 1865.

Sir,

I HAVE received your despatch No. 287 of the 10th instant, and the Proclamation inclosed.

But neither in your despatch nor in the Proclamation do I find any answer to this question: Does the United States' Government renounce for the future the exercise of belligerent rights?

This consequence, indeed, may seem to follow from the words of the Proclamation:—

"And whereas armed resistance to the authority of the Government in the said insurrectionary States may be regarded as virtually at an end, and the persons by whom that resistance, as well as the operations of insurgent cruizers, were directed, are fugitives or captives."

It would seem, I say, to follow from these words that the United States' Government renounced for the future those rights of search, detention, and capture of the merchant-vessels of friendly Powers which belong to a state of war.

For the United States cannot, at the same moment, declare that peace exists and exercise rights which belong only to a state of war.

Still the matter is not quite clear, and until either Mr. Adams, on the part of his Government here, or the Secretary of State at Washington, shall declare that neutrals will no longer be subject to search and capture, Her Majesty's Government cannot act upon or publish the Proclamation of the 10th of May.

I am, &c.

No. 319.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received May 30.)

Lincoln's Inn, May 29, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of the Bahamas, dated the 11th instant, reporting the circumstances under which certain guns were permitted to be shipped at Nassau, for Havana, on board the screw-steamer "Louisa Ann Fanny." The previous correspondence respecting this vessel was also inclosed; and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take this case into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion with regard to the proceedings of Governor Rawson in this matter.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this case into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the shipment of guns referred to in Mr. Hammond's letter appears to have taken place at Bermuda, and not at Nassau.

It is difficult for us to form an entirely satisfactory opinion upon the question, whether Lieutenant-Governor Hamley (not Governor Rawson) was well advised by his Privy Council, or not, when he permitted this shipment to take place. If it should hereafter appear that the guns were really shipped for the purpose of arming the "Louisa Ann Fanny," and that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bermuda was deceived by the representations of Major Walker and of the master of the vessel, the case might possibly lead to embarrassing discussions between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the United States.

Considering the active interest shown in the shipment by Major Walker, a known or reported Confederate agent, it would, in our opinion, have been prudent for the Lieutenant-Governor to obtain, from competent naval authorities, a report upon the questions whether the guns proposed to be shipped were such as would be suitable for the purpose of arming that particular vessel, and whether there were or were not in the structure or fittings of the ship herself any indications of an intention to use her for any warlike purpose. And as Major Walker had expressly offered to give security in six times the value of the freight, that "no belligerent act should be attempted by the steamer," we think it would have been proper, at all events, to take that security before waiving the objection originally made to the shipment of the guns. It is possible that both these precautions may have been actually taken; but it is not expressly so stated in Lieutenant-Governor Hamley's despatch of the 13th of April last.

Subject to these observations, it appears to us that the Lieutenant-Governor intended to do, and to the best of his judgment did, his duty in this case. The shipment of articles contraband of war for purposes of trade on board a merchant-vessel in a British port cannot be prohibited or interfered with, unless under a Royal Proclamation, prohibiting their exportation by virtue of the powers entrusted to Her Majesty by the Customs Laws Consolidation Act, which powers have not been exercised by Her Majesty during the present war. And it cannot be presumed, without evidence, that guns proposed to be shipped as cargo on board a seeming merchant-vessel are not really intended as such cargo, but are meant for an illegal armament contrary to the Foreign Enlistment Act.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 320.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 1, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of May ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 20th of that month, therewith returned to us in copy for convenience of reference, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a copy of a despatch which your Lordship had that day addressed to Her Majesty's Ambassador at Paris (No. 432, May 30), instructing him to propose to the French Government to concur with that of Her Majesty in declaring that the belligerent rights of the so-called Confederate States are no longer recognized by them.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to send us a copy of a letter which your Lordship had that day addressed to Mr. Adams, in reply to a letter from him, also inclosed,* forwarding a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States respecting

---

* To Mr. Adams, May 30; Mr. Adams, May 29, 1865.

1865

insurgent cruizers; and to request that we would take your Lordship's despatch and letter into our immediate consideration, and report to your Lordship, at our earliest convenience, any observations which might occur to us in their perusal, so that your Lordship might be prepared, if the French Government concur, to give effect to the views of Her Majesty's Government, thus set forth, with the least possible delay.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That your Lordship's despatch to Earl Cowley itself indicates, with sufficient clearness, the course proposed to be taken in the event of the French Government concurring in the views therein expressed.

We presume that, before sending that despatch, and the letter to Mr. Adams, your Lordship had satisfactory grounds for believing that the indispensable condition of the renunciation of the further exercise of belligerent rights against neutrals would be readily accepted by the United States' Government, although no formal declaration had been as yet received from them to that effect.

Assuming this to be the case, we concur in the views expressed in that despatch; and we think that the line of conduct therein mentioned may be properly pursued.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 321.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 2.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 2, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the previous day, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us therewith the draft of a letter to be addressed to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty and of the Treasury, and to the Secretaries of State for the Home, Colonial, War, and India Offices, requesting that instructions might be issued to the several authorities under their control, in conformity with the decision of Her Majesty's Government to recognize the civil war in North America as de facto at an end.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to state that we should observe in this despatch a paragraph which does not appear in your Lordship's despatch to Lord Cowley, a copy of which was inclosed in his letter of yesterday, providing for the contingency of the Commander of a Confederate vessel of war found within British territorial jurisdiction desiring to divest his vessel of a warlike character.

And Mr. Hammond was further pleased to state that a paragraph in this sense is inserted in the draft at the suggestion of the French Government; and he was to request our earnest attention to this reference, and in addition to state to us that your Lordship was most anxious to receive our opinion upon it at latest on Friday morning, so that the matter might be considered by the Cabinet to be held on that day.

We are also honoured with Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, transmitting a copy of a despatch received yesterday from Lord Cowley (No. 631), reporting a conversation with M. Drouyn de Lhuys, on communicating to him your Lordship's despatch of the 30th of May.

That we should see raised in this conversation a question as to the right of the United States' Government to claim as their property any Confederate cruizers which may be found in neutral ports.

And Mr. Hammond was further to request that we would report to your Lordship our opinion on the point in whom the property in such cruizers legally vests, and whether there is any objection to the adoption by Her Majesty's Government of the proposal originally made by the French Government in regard to the manner in which such Confederate cruizers should be dealt with.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed instructions mentioned in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 31st May should be modified in the manner suggested by us in the margin of the accompanying draft; and that with such modifications they may properly be sent.

With regard to the subject of Mr. Hammond's second letter (of the 1st instant), we conceive it to be a correct proposition of law, that if any ships are, upon the complete cessation of hostilities, found within Her Majesty's territories, which at the time of such cessation were the property of the Confederate Government, and have not been lawfully transferred to any other owner, such ships may be claimed as public property by the Government of the United States.

But every such claim, if made and resisted by any counter claimant, must be decided in the ordinary course of law by the Civil tribunals: each such case may depend upon mixed questions of law and of fact, and we do not think it would be necessary or expedient for Her Majesty's Government, in any of their public acts, to refer to the possible occurrence of questions of this nature.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 322.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

My Lord,
Lincoln's Inn, June 2, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 1st instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 30th ultimo, inclosing copies of two despatches from the Governor of the Bahamas, relating to the arrival at Nassau of the unarmed Confederate prize schooner "St. Mary;" and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any instructions which it may be desirable to transmit to the Governor of the Bahamas; and that he was directed by your Lordship to point out to us that it is stated in the letter from the Colonial Office that the mail for the Bahamas would be made up on Saturday next, the 3rd instant.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we cannot think that the Governor of the Bahamas exercised a sound judgment in permitting the "St. Mary" to remain within Her Majesty's waters, even for the purpose of obtaining necessary repairs and supplies, under the circumstances disclosed by these papers.

Her Majesty's orders as to the exclusion of prizes captured by either belligerent during the present (or late) war, were, as we understand them, general and positive; and we do not conceive that they were intended to be relaxed in any case, unless a prize vessel should be driven into British waters by mere stress of weather, or by some other vis major of a different kind from the want of supplies and ordinary repairs, which existed in the present case.

The "St. Mary" was described, by the officer himself who was in command of her, as a "prize schooner." She had no papers, and it was not alleged that she had been in any way commissioned as a public ship of war of the Confederate States. In what manner she was captured does not clearly appear; the only evidence produced by Mr. Brain, tending to relieve him even from the imputation of piracy, was a letter from the Secretary of the Navy of the Confederate States, addressed to him as a "Lieutenant of the volunteer navy" of those States (whatever that might mean), acceding to his request for authority "to capture" some particular vessel (not named), at some place (also not named). It does not appear that he was, or had been, in command of, or serving in, any public ship of war, or even any privateer, of the Confederate States. If facts, not appearing by admission or proof in these papers, can properly be taken notice of, it was matter of general notoriety that he had captured the "Chesapeake" and the "Roanoake," not by any regular or ordinary means of warfare, but by a mode of proceeding which made the application of the most rigorous rule of exclusion, on the part of neutral States, to prizes so captured extremely necessary. We think the most proper mode of dealing with this person, so found in possession of the "St. Mary," would have been to order his instant departure, as soon as his presence within British waters became known. If the want of provisions and repairs were admitted as a plea for exceptional indulgence in such a case, neutral Powers would be instrumental in relieving adventurers of this description from the principal risks and difficulties incident to such fraudulent enterprises, and would practically encourage deviations from the recognized course of honourable warfare which it is the interest of all civilized nations to discountenance.

In declining to act upon the demand of extradition presented to him by the United States' Consul, Governor Rawson has again been influenced by the same erroneous interpretation of the Act of Parliament which we have pointed out and explained in former Reports. He seems to confound the Governor's preliminary warrant, on which the jurisdiction of the magistrate to inquire into the case is founded (and for which the statute does not make any evidence strictly necessary), with the magistrate's own subsequent warrant, which can only be founded upon sufficient primâ facie evidence of the actual commission of the offence alleged. As, however, in the present instance, the demand was based only upon the charge of "an act of piracy, in seizing unlawfully the steamer 'Chesapeake,' an American steamer, off Cape Cod, and causing, while so seizing illegally, the death of Owen Shaffer, second engineer of the said ship, by shooting him"* (which appears to us to be a charge of piracy committed on the high seas, and not also a charge of murder as distinct from piracy), the Governor of the Bahamas was, in our opinion, justified in declining to issue his warrant upon that charge; the Court of Queen's Bench in England having determined, in the case of the "Gerrity," that piracy committed on the high seas, on board a United States' vessel, is not a ground for extradition under the Act.

1865

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 323.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 3, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th day of May ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 4th of that month, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Noonan, dated the 25th instant, relative to his nationality.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose the previous correspondence;† and he was to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion as to the answer which should be returned to Mr. Noonan's letter referred to us.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we advise that an answer be sent to Mr. Noonan to the following effect: that his natural allegiance to the Crown is indelible, and that he is still a British subject; but that these positions are quite consistent with the refusal of Her Majesty's Government to interfere in his behalf with the Government of another country in which he has voluntarily sought and acquired the rights of citizenship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 324.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 3.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 3, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 26th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th of May, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from Mr. Burley, dated the 19th ultimo, respecting the case of his son, in answer to a letter addressed to him from your Lordship's Department on the 9th, the draft of which, together with the previous papers, was therewith transmitted to us, and to request that we would again take this case into our consideration and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

We are also honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th ultimo, stating that with reference to his letter of the 26th May, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter from the Colonial Office, relative to the case of Bennet G. Burley.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that the letter of Mr. Burley (senior) furnishes any adequate reason for the interference of Her Majesty's Government. We have nothing to add to the opinion expressed in our former Reports on this subject.

---

* See Mr. Kirkpatrick's Requisition (April 18, 1865).

† Mr. Noonan, February   ; to Mr. Noonan, February 25; Mr. Noonan, April 21; to Mr. Noonan, May 13, 1863.

We think, however, that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington might be instructed to use his good offices with the United States' Government in order to procure the immediate trial of Burley, and to call the attention of the United States' Government to the length of the imprisonment which this person has already undergone. It is scarcely necessary to say that neither the Canadian Government nor any member or members of it can be required to give bail for this person, as suggested in the letter of Mr. Burley.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 325.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 6.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 6, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 20th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 7th May, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying further correspondence respecting the case of Mr. E. W. Pratt,* together with the previous papers, and to request that we would again take this case into consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That it appears to us that every step has been taken on behalf of Mr. Pratt which is likely to be of service to him. The circumstances which seem the most favourable in his case are the passport (or what was alleged to be equivalent to a passport) granted to him by the United States' Consul at Nassau, and the presumption of innocence which arises from his having relied upon this security, and having gone voluntarily into the territory of the United States. Nevertheless, we think that it would be expedient to leave this matter to the unfettered discretion of Sir F. Bruce, in order to avoid, if possible, the discussion (which would be at present premature) of some questions of much difficulty and nicety, to which the circumstances of the case may not improbably give rise.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 326.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 12.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 12, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 29th of May ultimo, stating that with reference to our Report of the 21st of November last respecting the case of the "Dashing Wave" and other vessels seized in the Rio Grande, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers, the correspondence which the Foreign Office has since had on the subject with Her Majesty's Legation at Washington, and with Messrs. Gallichan and Messrs. Dean and Co.,* the owners respectively of the "Volant" and "Dashing Wave."

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to call our special attention to Messrs. Dean and Co.'s letter of the 26th instant, and to request that we would favour your Lordship with our opinion as to any steps which it would be competent for Her Majesty's Government to take with a view of pressing these cases forward to a conclusion.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we adhere to the opinions expressed in our former Reports as to these vessels.

We think that although the abstract right of the District Attorney to appeal in any case from the sentence of the Prize Court in favour of the owners of a captured vessel

---

* Sir F. Bruce, No. 246, April 21; Mr. Pratt, May 18; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 198; to Mr. Pratt, May 20, 1865.

† Messrs. Dean, May 26; Mr. Horsfall, May 27; to Messrs. Dean, May 29; three volumes; other papers.

1865

cannot be denied, the exercise of that right in the case of the "Dashing Wave" was harsh and oppressive, no valid ground for the capture of that vessel having ever been alleged; and the ground apparently relied on being one so contrary to the principles of international law as to warrant Her Majesty's Government in declining to acquiesce in it, even if it could be conceived possible that it might receive the sanction of a Court of Appeal. It does not seem to be now controverted that it always was, and is still, competent to the Executive Government of the United States to put a stop to these oppressive proceedings; no right having been vested in the captor which was not subject to the exercise of such a discretion on the part of the Executive. The sale of a ship and cargo which have never been condemned (unless to prevent otherwise unavoidable deterioration, pendente lite), is, in our opinion, incapable of being justified, and the enormous delay which, according to the statement in Messrs. Dean and Co.'s letter of the 26th of May last, appears likely to occur before the case of the "Dashing Wave" can be disposed of by the Court of Appeal, aggravates the hardship inflicted, and would of itself justify earnest expostulation with the United States' Government.

We think, therefore, that Sir F. Bruce may be properly instructed to bring the whole circumstances of these very exceptional cases again before the United States' Government, and to suggest that, even if the right of Her Majesty's Government to demand the restitution of these vessels on grounds of strict justice is not admitted, it would at least be an act of comity of a kind not unusual between friendly States at the close of a war, to restore them and their cargoes to their owners, who have succeeded in the Prize Court of first instance, without further litigation, or (as to such of the ships and cargoes as may have been already sold) to pay over the proceeds, and make a liberal compensation for the losses and damages which the owners have incurred.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 327.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 15.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 15, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 13th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying despatch from Sir F. Bruce (No. 313, May 26) inclosing a copy of a Proclamation issued by the President of the United States declaring the ports of the Southern States, with the exception of those in Texas, open to foreign commerce; and stating that all persons trading or attempting to trade in any ports of the United States, in violation of the laws thereof, "will be held and dealt with as pirates."

The draft of an answer which your Lordship proposes to return to this despatch was also inclosed, and Mr. Hammond was pleased to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion, at our earliest convenience, whether this draft is right and proper to be sent.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think the proposed despatch is fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 328.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 8th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 19th ultimo, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 1st instant, inclosing copies of the indictments against Jacob Thompson and others, charged with having conspired in Canada to levy war against the United States; and to request that we would favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the indictments appear to us to have been properly drawn in these cases; and the perusal of them does not suggest to us the necessity of making any further observations upon the general subject to which they relate, and as to which we have already had the honour to make several Reports to your Lordship.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 329.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 21.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 20, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 12th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,[*] a letter from the Colonial Office,[†] and its inclosures, respecting the case of two vessels which have been constructed at Montreal, and which were suspected of having been intended for the Confederate service; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we are of opinion that his Excellency the Governor of Canada was rightly advised that there were no circumstances connected with the "Pinero" which would have warranted him in ordering the Collector of Customs at Montreal to refuse a clearance to that vessel.

With respect to the other vessel, "El Almandaris," which appears to have long since left Montreal, there seems to be no reason to doubt that she was bonâ fide intended for a passenger boat.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 330.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 24.)

Lincoln's Inn, June 24, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 17th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying correspondence[‡] respecting the imprisonment and trial in the United States, of Colonel St. Leger Grenfell, a British subject, who is accused of having been concerned in a conspiracy for the release of certain Confederate prisoners, and an attack on the city of Chicago; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That in the absence of any copy of the evidence admitted against Colonel Grenfell, we can only form an imperfect opinion as to the justice of the conviction founded upon it. Deriving our knowledge of it only from the references made to it in the Memorial of Mr. Hervey, Colonel Grenfell's counsel, we are at present rather at a loss to understand why certain portions of it were admitted at all, relating apparently to conversations at which the accused was not present, and with a person not proved to have been a conspirator with, or an agent of, Colonel Grenfell; or why evidence was received of the [*] Colonial Office, February 6, February 14, and March 21; to Colonial Office, March 25; Colonial Office April 24, 1865.

---

[†] Colonial Office, June 1, 1865.

[‡] Sir F. Bruce, No. 328, June 2; to Sir F. Bruce, No. 245, June 17, 1865.

1865

conduct of Colonel Grenfell when in the Confederate service, having no bearing on the charge on which he was tried. It appears to us that the Memorial or Petition of Mr. Hervey embodies all that could be usefully urged on behalf of Colonel Grenfell, and that the instructions already sent by your Lordship to Sir F. Bruce are in every respect right and proper. We have only to add that, distressing as the case is, it is impossible to deny the unqualified right of the United States' authorities to deal with it, in all its bearings and consequences.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 331.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 27.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 26, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th of December last, respecting the Judgment pronounced in the District Court of New Jersey in the case of the schooner "Etta," or "Retribution," he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from Her Majesty's Consul at New York (No. 43, May 26), inclosing a printed copy of the Report of proceedings in the case of this vessel; and to request that we would take the same into consideration, and favour your Lordship with such observations as we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That this, as we had the honour to state in our last Report, is a case of the first impression; but we are of opinion that, upon the principles of maritime international law applicable to such a case, the vessel was lawfully and rightly condemned. This opinion, of course, involves our assent to the very important position of law, that the ship of an enemy, which has been a commissioned ship of war, cannot, during the continuance of the war, be relieved from the risk of capture and condemnation in the Prize Court of the other belligerent by any sale or transfer to a neutral, although such neutral may purchase her with the bonâ fide intention of using her for his own benefit in lawful commerce, and may, to the utmost of his power, divest her of her warlike character, and convert her into, and use her as, a merchant-vessel.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 332.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received June 28.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 27, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 29th ultimo, inclosing a copy of a despatch from the Governor of Nova Scotia, requesting instructions as to the course which is to be adopted towards American cruizers entering the ports of the province, or towards vessels to which Mexican letters of marque may have been issued; and to request that we would take this matter into our consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That with respect to the treatment of vessels of war belonging to the United States and the Confederates, we presume that a copy of your Lordship's recent letter on this subject will have been sent to the Governor of Nova Scotia, as containing all necessary instructions relating to it. With respect to vessels carrying Mexican letters of marque from Juarez, we advise that the Governor be instructed that such vessels are not to be admitted or allowed to remain in Her Majesty's ports or harbours.

Her Majesty has not recognized any de facto Government of any part of Mexico other than that which is also the de jure Government of that Kingdom, namely, the Government of the Emperor of Mexico, at whose Court Her Majesty has an accredited representative; nor has it, since the recognition of the Emperor, recognized Juarez as a belligerent.

We have, &c.
(For the Solicitor-General and myself),
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 333.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 1.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, June 30, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th instant, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us two despatches from Her Majesty's Consul at New Orleans (Nos. 23 and 28), inclosing copies of proceedings in the Prize Court in that city, in the cases of certain British vessels captured for breach of blockade; and to request that we would take these papers into consideration, and favour your Lordship with any observations which we might have to offer thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we have perused the record of these proceedings in the United States' Prize Court, and have now the honour to offer a specific report upon the case of each vessel condemned by this Prize Court of the United States.

1. That the "Julia" and cargo (No. 7,944) appear to have been rightly condemned, on the grounds of contraband cargo and a breach of blockade.

2. That as to the "Morris" and cargo (No. 7,959), the ship appears to have belonged to a British subject, though the crew were from New York, and her captain was a United States' citizen. A large portion of the cotton on board seems to have belonged to American owners resident at New Orleans, some to British owners; in this case the Court decreed restitution to the claimants, and all right to damages was waived.

3. The "Mary Ellen" and cargo (No. 7,976). The ship belonged to a British subject, resident in Canada; she had been an American ship, and had a United States' as well as an English flag on board. The crew were all foreigners, the vessel was in ballast, bound from Matamoros to New Orleans. She was seized near a blockaded coast, but in distress. She had a "permit" from the United States' Consul at Matamoros. She was condemned, "for reasons assigned orally by the Court;" what they were we do not know. In the absence of this information we think the grounds for this condemnation must have been very slender.

4. The "Flash" and cargo (No. 7,958). Owner of vessel and cargo resident in Galveston, Texas, from whence the captain came. She was bound for Tampico from Galveston. She had run the blockade at Galveston. No claimants appeared. She was rightly condemned.

5. The "Cora" and cargo (No. 7,961). No claimants appeared. She was captured while breaking the blockade at Galveston, and was rightly condemned.

6. The "Belle" and cargo (No. 7,962), captured in Galveston harbour. No claimant appeared. She was rightly condemned.

7. The "Matilda" and cargo (No. 8,002), sailed under British colours. The captain, a Spanish subject, was owner of vessel and cargo. This vessel was captured in the attempt to break the blockade near Pass Cavallo, coast of Texas. No claimant appeared. The vessel was rightly condemned.

8. The "Pet" and cargo (No. 8,001). This vessel was captured in the harbour of Galveston, to enter which she had run the blockade, and was preparing to run it again when seized at anchor in Galveston Bay, but outside of the harbour. Half of the cargo was owned by the Confederate Government. The reasons for her condemnation were delivered orally by the Court; they are not before us, but we are not prepared to say that this vessel was not rightly condemned.

9. The "Ben Willis" and cargo (No. 7,992). This vessel was illegally captured. The Court decreed restitution. The claimant of vessel and cargo waived all claim to damages. An appeal had been instituted by captors, which was also waived.

1865

10. The "Anne Sophia" and cargo (No. 8000). This vessel was captured in circumstances precisely similar to those of the "Pet" and cargo (8). No claimant appeared. We have not the reasons of the Judgment; in their absence we are not prepared to say that the vessel was unlawfully condemned.

11. The "Albert Edward" and cargo (No. 7,925). No claimant appeared. The vessel was captured for breach of blockade, and was rightly condemned.

12. The "Cora Smyser" and cargo (No. 7,928). This vessel was captured for breach of blockade. No claimant appeared. In the absence of any written Judgment we are unable to say that this vessel was unlawfully condemned.

13. The "Lone" and cargo (No. 7,930). This vessel was captured for breach of blockade. No claimant appeared, and she was rightly condemned.

14. The "Alabama" and cargo (No. 7,956). This vessel was captured for breach of blockade; she was deserted by her crew as soon as the captors fired a shot to bring her to. No claimant appeared. She was rightly condemned.

We have now expressed our opinion upon each separate and individual case, and have the honour to close our Report.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 334.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letters from Mrs. Molyneux,* widow of Her Majesty's late Consul at Savannah, complaining of the injuries done to her property in North Carolina and at Savannah, and the outrages committed on the persons in charge of it, by certain detachments of United States' troops, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion as to whether any representation and demand for compensation can properly be addressed to the United States' Government with regard to this case.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we understand that the house which was subjected to this alleged outrage and plunder was the official residence of Her Majesty's Consul, duly accredited to the United States' Government. If the facts stated by Mrs. Molyneux are true, we think that the outrage, which began by pulling down the British flag, and ended by pillaging the house, with circumstances of personal violence to the inmates, is one which Her Majesty's Representative at Washington ought to bring to the notice of the United States' Government, and for which he ought to request compensation.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 335.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 4, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 10th June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a despatch from the Acting British Consul at Mobile (No. 4), reporting what had passed at an interview between General Canby, the Commander of the Army of West Mississippi, and himself and the Consuls of other Powers at Mobile, respecting the course which would be pursued by the United States' authorities at that port with regard to cotton, tobacco, and naval stores, the property of foreigners.

---

* Mrs. Molyneux, January 24, March 8, March 16, April 3, and June 15, 1865.

Mr. Hammond was also pleased to inclose a copy of an order issued by General Canby on the subject of the disposition of property found in captured cities, and to request that we would take this matter into consideration, and report to your Lordship our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we do not think that the official order printed in the newspaper, which is among the papers submitted to us, furnishes any ground for immediate action on the part of Her Majesty's Government or of other foreign Governments, with whom Her Majesty's Government would probably think it expedient to act in concert on this occasion.

The general principles laid down in this order, if fairly carried into effect, would not give rise to any legitimate complaint on the part of neutral States.

We observe the use of the term "blockade" in the fourth paragraph of this Order, which, if strictly construed, would lead to the conclusion that the United States' Government had not yet (at its date, 22nd April) abandoned the rights of belligerents. This, however (we presume), has since been done.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 336.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 5, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th of June ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 14th of January, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us a further letter, and its inclosures, from Mr. Heslop, respecting his imprisonment, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

The previous papers* were also inclosed for reference, if required.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That the further papers laid before us in this case do not induce us to alter the opinion with respect to it which we have already had the honour to express in our former Report.

We are clearly of opinion that no ground is laid for the interference of Her Majesty's Government on behalf of Mr. Heslop with the Government of the United States.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 337.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 5.)

Lincoln's Inn, July 5, 1865.

My Lord,

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 23rd of June ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from Mr. A. Barclay, dated the 9th ultimo, formerly Her Majesty's Consul at New York, forwarding various papers in support of a claim preferred by him against the Government of the United States on account of damage inflicted on his property near Savannah by United States' troops, and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

---

* Mr. Heslop, December 6, 1864; to Mr. Heslop, January 21; to Mr. Burnley, No. 27, 865.

1865

That the true question which the application of Mr. Barclay raises is not whether he is not justly entitled (as it would appear that he is) to ample compensation for gross and wanton injuries inflicted without provocation upon his house and landed property, but whether he must not seek redress for these injuries on the same footing and in the same manner as any other loyal and peaceable resident or settler in the United States, whose landed property has been subjected to such damage.

Having ceased to be Her Majesty's Consul, he made his home in Savannah, engaged in the cultivation of lands which he had purchased, and became practically a citizen of the country in which he had so settled himself and his family; and, in these circumstances, he derived no right of protection from hoisting the British flag over his dwelling, or from the fact that he had formerly been Her Majesty's Consul.

We are of opinion that Mr. Barclay should prefer his petition for redress to the United States' Government in the same manner as any subject of that Government, but that Her Majesty's Representative at Washington may be properly instructed to support, as far as he is able (without making a positive demand for compensation), the application of Mr. Barclay.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROUNDELL PALMER.
R. P. COLLIER.
ROBERT PHILLIMORE.

No. 338.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 7.)

My Lord, Doctors' Commons, July 7, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 6th instant, stating that he was directed to transmit to us the accompanying despatches from Sir F. Bruce (Nos. 355 and 357), inclosing copies of a correspondence with the United States' Government, respecting the orders issued by Her Majesty's Government on the 2nd ultimo with regard to the treatment of Confederate cruizers in British ports, together with a draft of a despatch which your Lordship proposes to address to Sir F. Bruce on this subject; and Mr. Hammond was to request that we would take the same into immediate consideration, and furnish your Lordship with our opinion thereupon. The previous papers were also inclosed for convenience of reference.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we think your Lordship's proposed despatch is fit and proper to be sent.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
(Also for Attorney and Solicitor-General.)

No. 339.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 24th ultimo, stating that he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us the accompanying letter from the Colonial Office, dated the 21st ultimo, and its inclosures, respecting the case of Dr. Blackburn, who is accused of having conspired with others to send infected clothing into the United States; and to request that we would take these papers into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken these papers into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That we agree with the opinion expressed by the Solicitor-General for Canada, that Dr. Blackburn is triable in Canada for the conspiracy to commit murder in the United States. We do not at present understand how Dr. Blackburn can be indicted upon the same facts for what is termed a breach of the "neutrality laws."

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
(Also for Attorney and Solicitor-General.)

No. 340.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 11.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 11, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 27th ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 6th of December, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,* a letter from the Colonial Office,† inclosing a further representation from Mr. Roach respecting his claim on the Government of the United States on account of his vessel the "Madeira," having been run down by the United States' ship of war "Clyde;" and, to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into our consideration, and have the honour to report—

That as we now understand that a ship of war belonging to the United States' Government cannot be proceeded against in any Admiralty Court of the United States for collision, we think that your Lordship should instruct Sir F. Bruce to submit the case of the "Madeira" to the United States' Government, as one proper to be investigated; and to state that if the culpability of the "Clyde" should be established, he does not doubt the owners of the "Madeira" will receive from that Government such compensation as may cover the damage which she has wrongfully sustained.

We have, &c.
(Signed) ROBERT PHILLIMORE.
(Also for Attorney and Solicitor-General.)

No. 341.

The Law Officers of the Crown to Earl Russell.—(Received July 12.)

My Lord, Lincoln's Inn, July 12, 1865.

WE are honoured with your Lordship's commands signified in Mr. Hammond's letter of the 30th of June ultimo, stating that, with reference to our Report of the 4th instant, he was directed by your Lordship to transmit to us, together with the previous papers,† the accompanying further letter from Mr. Noonan dated the 28th ultimo, respecting his position as a naturalized citizen of the United States; and to request that we would take the same into our consideration, and favour your Lordship with our opinion thereupon.

In obedience to your Lordship's commands we have taken this matter into consideration, and have the honour to report—

